CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.
MISCELLANEOUS CIVIL APPEAL No. 267 OF 1910.
April 25, 1912.
Present:—Mr. Justice Stephen and Mr. Justice Richardson.
ANUKUL CHANDRA CHAKRAVARTI AND OTHERS—DECREE-HOLDERS—APPELLANTS
versus
NABIN CHANDRA BOSE AND OTHERS—JUDGMENT-DEBTORS—RESPONDENTS.

Mesne profits—Proper basis for assessment—Principle—What defendant got, not what plaintiff lost—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 2, sub-s. (12).

In assessing mesne profits, the Court should take into consideration what the defendant made, not what the plaintiff lost.

The decree-holder had let certain land out to tenants which during the period of dispossession was cultivated by the judgment-debtor:

Held, that mesne profits should be calculated according to what the judgment debtor gained by the cultivation of the land, not according to what the decree-holder lost by being deprived of rent.

Appeal from the order of the District Judge of Tipperah, dated February 12th, 1910, modifying that of the third Munsif of Chandpur, dated September 20th, 1909.

FACTS.—In this case the decree holders sought to recover the mesne profits in respect of certain land for which he had obtained a decree. He estimated the mesne profits at Rs. 2,841. The learned Munsif found that the land yielded profits to the amount of Rs. 766 during the period of dispossession, which the decree-holders are entitled to recover as mesne profits. On appeal by the judgment-debtors, the learned Judge's decision with regard to this point was as follows:

"The appellant has next contended that the learned Munsif has applied the wrong basis in calculating the amount of mesne profits. He submits that just before the decree-holder was dispossessed, he had settled the land with some of the defendants at a rental of Rs. 40 for four years. The learned Pleader for the appellants further contends that, except in cases where a customary rent is realised, the rent exacted represents the whole profits of the land after deducting what is sufficient for the maintenance of the tenants. In support of his contention, he cited Pandit Lachmi Narayan v. Sheikh Mazhar Hassan (1). The resultant net produce, after taking into account the cost of production and the risk of the agriculturist, differs but little from competition or rack rent. Assuming complete freedom of competition, the rent paid by the tenant-at-will would practically coincide with the whole net produce of any given piece of land.

The respondent has urged that there is no general principle for ascertaining mesne profits. The Court must ascertain the facts of the case and the nature of plaintiff's possession before ouster, and then determine the principle applicable to each particular case. Now, what are the facts of the particular case? The plaintiff had been in possession just before ouster it is true, but we find from the evidence that he had also just before ouster removed his family to another village and was negotiating with some of the defendants to let out the land to them at the rate of Rs. 40 per year. He had, as it seems to me, given up the idea of cultivating the land himself and had determined to let it out to tenants. Otherwise why had he removed his house? It has been urged by the decree-holder that his reason for doing this was that he could not retain possession or cultivate the land owing to the intrigues of the defendants and others. I do not think we are concerned with the reasons which induced the decree-holder to adopt a particular course. At the time when he was ousted, it clearly was his intention to let out the lands. By removing his family elsewhere, he had clearly no longer the intention of cultivating the land himself or through hired servants.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the decree-holder is only entitled to recover rent for the period during which he was dispossessed. He himself was prepared to let out the land at the rate of Rs. 40 per annum. He will be, therefore, entitled to rent at the rate of Rs. 40 per annum for the 7 years 5 months from 1308 to Bhadra 1315. This will amount to Rs. 296-10-0.

The decree-holders appealed to the High Court on the ground that they were entitled to get mesne profits on the produce basis and not on the rent basis, and that the Court of Appeal below ought to have allowed as mesne profits, the profits enjoyed by the judgment-debtors during the period of dispossession, notwithstanding the intention of the decree-holders to let out the land to tenants.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiff obtained a decree in a title suit and proceeded with a further suit in which he sought to recover mesne profits of lands which he had recovered from the defendant. He succeeded before the Munsif in obtaining a decree for Rs. 766. On appeal to the lower Appellate Court, this was reduced to a sum of Rs. 296-10.

The question before us is whether the basis on which the Appellate Court arrived at the sum of Rs. 296 is a proper basis for the purpose. In our opinion, it is not. It appears that before the plaintiff was dispossessed, he had settled the lands at a rental of Rs. 40 per year and it is on this basis that the Rs. 296 is calculated, that is, the Appellate Court considered not what the defendant may be taken to have made but what the plaintiff lost. This is not the correct basis, as is shown by the definition of mesne profits in section 2, sub-section 12 of the Civil Procedure Code. The duty of the Court in estimating mesne profits is there so clearly indicated that we need not amplify the matter.

A second point has been raised on the question of interest being allowed on the mesne profits. This also appears to be settled by the definition which we have referred to.

It was, therefore, the duty of the Appellate Court to assess mesne profits as described in the Code and we remit the case to the lower Appellate Court in order that mense profits may be ascertained accordingly.

The question of jurisdiction has been raised before us. The jurisdiction of the Munsif is limited to the sum of Rs. 1,000 and in this case the plaintiff claimed more than that sum as mesne damages. Without going into the law applicable to this question, the plaintiff has now reduced his claim for mesne damages to Rs. 700 which brings the whole suit involving the claim for mesne profits within the jurisdiction of the Munsif and the question of jurisdiction is given up. It will not, therefore, be necessary for the lower Appellate Court to try the question of jurisdiction but it will re-hear the appeal bearing in mind the definition to which we have drawn its attention, and will decide the appeal according to law.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed; the case is remanded to the lower Appellate Court but the costs of the appeal will abide the result, the hearing fee being assessed at two gold mohurs.

Appeal allowed; Case remanded.

Privy Council Appeal—Application for leave—Award—Judgment of High Court based on award—

AHMAD BAKHSH v. SAIRA BIBI.

Appeal from judgment of High Court—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 109, 110, 111, Sch. II, para. 21, cl. (2).

In a case, the value of the subject-matter of which is over Rs. 10,000, and the High Court has reversed the decision of the lower Court, an applicant is entitled to a certificate for leave to appeal to the Privy Council.

The certificate cannot be refused on the ground that in accordance with the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, no appeal lies against a judgment pronounced in accordance with an award and a decree following it. Such provisions only affect the appeals in India and do not affect the appeals to His Majesty in Council.

Application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council against the decision of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, dated 15th August 1911. See 13 Ind. Cas. 520.

Mr. J. N. Chak, for the Appellant.

Mr. Wazir Hussan, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application under Order XIV, rule 3 of the Code of Civil Procedure for a certificate to enable the applicant, Musammat Ameer Begam, to appeal to His Majesty in Council against a decision of this Court dated the 15th August 1911, revising a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Lucknow, dated the 5th May 1911. The case before the Subordinate Judge was an application under paragraph 20, Schedule II, of the Code of Civil Procedure asking that the award of an arbitrator might be filed in Court. The Subordinate Judge rejected the application and an appeal against this order was filed in this Court [Badr-ud-din Hasan v. Amir Begam (1)]. The appeal was allowed, the order of the Subordinate Judge was set aside and it was directed that the award be filed and made a decree of Court save and in so far as it provided for the partition of certain immoveable property. It is not denied that the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance was of a value over Rs. 10,000 and that the value of the subject-matter to be disputed on appeal to His Majesty in Council is in excess of the same amount; and as already stated, the decision of this Court has reversed the decision of the Court below: prima facie, therefore, the case is one in which, in accordance with the provisions of sections 109 and 110 of the Code of Civil Procedure, a certificate should be granted. The application, however, is opposed and it is contended on behalf of the opposite party that no certificate should be given in view of the provisions of paragraph 21, clause (2), of the second Schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that, after an award has been filed and judgment has been pronounced in accordance with it, a decree shall follow and no appeal shall lie from such decree except in so far as it is in excess of or not in accordance with the award. It is argued that the provisions of this clause bar any appeal to His Majesty in Council. We are unable to accept this contention. Section 109 of the Code enumerates the decrees and orders from which appeals lie to His Majesty in Council. Section 110 lays down certain conditions to which the right of appeal provided in section 109 is subject while section 111 lays down certain cases in which this right of appeal is denied. It seems to us that unless the present case can be brought within the scope of section 111, it is impossible to contend that a certificate should be refused on the ground that no appeal to His Majesty lies. The case before us is certainly not a case falling within that section; and we do not think that the provisions of paragraph 21, clause (2), of the second Schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure can be so read as to affect the right of the applicant to go in appeal in this case to the Privy Council.

We, therefore, order that this application for certificate be granted and that the applicant's costs, if any, be paid by the opposite party.

Application granted.

SAIRA BIBI—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Pleadings, defective—Finding on evidence which plaintiff had no opportunity to meet—Appellate Court, duty of—Remission of issue.

If an Appellate Court is of opinion that the plaintiff has been prejudiced by the defective pleadings and that there has been a finding upon insufficient evidence and upon evidence which the plaintiff had no reasonable opportunity of meeting, the proper course is to remit an issue on the point.

AHMAD BAKHSH v. SAIRA BIBI.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Azamgarh, dated 18th September 1911.

Mr. Muhammad Ishaq, for the Appellant.

Mr. Surendro Nath Sen, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in this case claims certain immoveable property as heir to her father and to her mother. For a reason which is sufficiently obvious the plaint is carefully silent on the question of the actual division of inheritance upon the father's death. But the case for the plaintiff may be put as follows :—Her father, Sheikh Najibuddin, died leaving him surviving a daughter, a widow and a brother. The brother took possession of a 6/16ths share of the estate and has continued in possession since. The mother died shortly afterwards and her surviving heirs were her daughter (the plaintiff) and her father, who is the defendant in the present suit. What actually followed upon the widow's death was that the plaintiff and the defendant each obtained possession of one half of the estate of Najibuddin after excluding the 6/16ths share in the possession of his surviving brother, that is to say, they took possession of 5/16ths of the estate each. Now the plaintiff's case is that, when her father died, the devolution of the estate according to the rules of Muhammadan Law was 6/16ths to the brother, 2/16ths to the widow and 8/16ths to the plaintiff, the daughter of the deceased. Then, when the widow died, her share of 2/16ths should be apportioned equally between the plaintiff and the defendant. Consequently, the plaintiff's case is that the defendant is in wrongful possession of the immoveable property left by his late son-in-law to the extent of 4/16ths, or one-quarter of the whole. To this the defendant replied by calling attention to the question deliberately passed over in the plaint, namely, the actual devolution of the inheritance on the death of Sheikh Najibuddin. He said that the widow Musammat Naziran actually took possession of 10/16ths of the estate, and the daughter (the present plaintiff) took nothing at all. He further pleaded that this took place in virtue of a transaction which constituted a transfer by the plaintiff of her share in her father's estate in favour of her mother, the consideration being the claim of the latter for dower-debt. This being the case, the defendant further claimed that upon the death of the plaintiff's mother, he succeeded lawfully by inheritance to the 5/16ths share in the estate left by Sheikh Najibuddin which is actually in his possession. The other 5/16ths share then passed by inheritance to the plaintiff, that is to say, by inheritance from her mother. But the case set up by the defendant was that she had no title whatsoever to dispossess him from any portion of the property actually in his possession. The case went to trial upon issues framed in accordance with these pleadings, but the Court of first instance came to the conclusion that the defendant only partially proved his case. The finding of the learned Munsif was that, upon the death of Najibuddin, nothing took place which could amount in law to a transfer by the plaintiff of her rights as heir of her father, but that the plaintiff did consent to her mother's taking possession of the entire 10/16ths share, that is to say, of the whole estate excluding the portion which devolved upon the brother of the deceased, and continuing in possession of the same in lieu of her dower-debt. Having arrived at this finding of fact, the Court of first instance proceeded to apply the law as laid down by a Bench of this Court in Ali Baksh v. Ala Dad Khan (1) and held that the defendant had inherited from his daughter, that is to say, from the widow of Sheikh Najibuddin, the right to peaceful possession in lieu of the unpaid dower-debt previously enjoyed by the widow herself so that the plaintiff was not entitled to dispossess him without first paying her rateable share of the aforesaid debt. He then proceeded to come to a finding on such evidence as had been produced before him as to the amount of the dower-debt which he held to be Rs. 5,000. Without pausing to take into consideration any question as to the liability of Sheikh Najibuddin's brother in this matter, he went on to hold the plaintiff liable for the whole of the debt thus ascertained then, holding further that one-half of this liability had been extinguished by the fact that the plaintiff had inherited her mother's claim to this extent; he finally passed a decree in plaintiff's favour for recovery of the property claimed, subject to a previous payment by the plaintiff to the defendant of Rs. 2,500. When the case was taken by the plaintiff to the Court of the District Judge in first appeal, the learned District Judge, beyond expressing a doubt as to the trustworthiness of the evidence which had been accepted by the Court below as proving that the plaintiff's mother was in possession in lieu of her claim for dower-debt, recorded no finding on any of the issues of law or of fact which had determined the decision of the first Court. What he held was that these findings were not open to the Court on the pleadings of the parties and in view of the issues on which the parties went to trial. On full consideration, I am not able to accept this position. There have been analogous cases in which a defendant has resisted a claim to the recovery of immoveable property in his possession on the ground of some alleged transfer in his favour and the Courts have found against the validity of such transfer in which it has, nevertheless, been held that upon the evidence it was just and proper to put the plaintiff to terms and to decree the suit for recovery of possession subject to such payment as appeared to the Court necessary in order to do justice to the defendant. The present case seems to me a peculiarly strong one, because the defendant had actually proved a part of the case set up by him. He undertook to prove that the plaintiff had bargained away her right of inheritance in respect of her father's property in return for the extinguishing of her mother's claim for dower-debt. He failed to establish this, but satisfied the Court of first instance that there had been an arrangement between the mother and the daughter which went to this extent that the mother was permitted to retain possession not only of the $\frac{1}{8}$th share of the father's estate which passed to her under the Muhammadan Law, but of the one-half share which devolved on her daughter, and that her possession in respect of this half share was to be in lieu of her claim for dower-debt and to continue until that claim was satisfied. I am of opinion that although the defendant's pleadings might have been more carefully drafted, such a finding as this was fairly open to the learned Munsif on the pleadings as they stood, and that if he arrived at this conclusion it was his duty to give proper effect to it in his decree. If the lower Appellate Court was of opinion that the plaintiff had been prejudiced by the defective pleadings, and that there had been a finding as to the amount of the dower-debt upon insufficient evidence and upon evidence which the plaintiff had been allowed no reasonable opportunity of meeting, it would have been proper to remit an issue on this point. I have also suggested a difficulty as to the position taken up by the learned Munsif in saddling the plaintiff with the liability for the entire amount of dower-debt. It seems to me also that upon pleadings properly framed a question might have been raised as to partial satisfaction of the dower-debt out of the usufruct of the property by the time of the widow's death or even up to the time of the institution of the suit. I mention these matters which may require further consideration; but, as the case at present stands, it seems to me that the lower Appellate Court has based its decision on a preliminary point and that I am unable to accept the decision on that point as correct. I accordingly set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and remand the case under the provisions of Order XLI, rule 23 of the Code of Civil Procedure for a decision on the merits. Costs will abide the event.

Appeal allowed.

proof as to failure of consideration on purchaser—Undue influence, competency to raise plea as to—Hard and unconscionable bargain.

A person, who purchases property at an auction sale subject to a prior mortgage, is estopped from challenging the mortgage on the ground of the failure of consideration or undue influence.

A distinction must be drawn between the case of a purchaser who buys property not subject to a mortgage but with notice of a mortgage and subject to such risks as the notice may involve, and the case of a person who purchases property which is declared to be subject to prior mortgages. In the former case, the Court does not decide whether the mortgage subsists or not. If there is in reality a subsisting mortgage, the purchaser has to redeem it.

If, on the other hand, the mortgage specified in the proclamation of sale, is a fictitious mortgage or did not subsist at the date of the sale by reason of its having been previously discharged by payment, the purchaser acquires the property free from liability for the mortgage.

When the sale is held subject to a mortgage, the purchaser does not get any greater right than the right of redeeming the mortgage.

Inayat Singh v. Izzat-un-Nissa, 27 A. 97; Ramachandra v. Hazi Kassim, 16 M. 207; Shantappa v. Subrao, 18 B. 175, relied upon.

Where property is sold in accordance with a decree for sale on mortgage, the purchaser of the property cannot raise a plea of priority, in respect of the mortgage, not set up by the mortgagee in his suit for sale.

The purchaser of an equity of redemption stands in the shoes of the mortgagor by virtue of his purchase and cannot, therefore, be allowed to be in a better position than the original mortgagor himself. If, therefore, the purchaser raises a plea as to want of consideration, the burden of establishing it would lie upon him.

Where, in such cases, the mortgagor himself has not raised the plea as to undue influence or as to the bargain being unconscionable, the purchaser, who has purchased the property subject to such a mortgage, cannot take those pleas and ask the Court to reduce the interest on the ground of its being a hard bargain.

Appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge, Biswan, dated 14th August 1911.

Mr. Ishwari Parshad, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Gokaran Nath Misra and A. P. Sen for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—These two appeals arise out of a suit brought in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Tahsil Biswan, district Sitapur, by one Dwarka Prasad to recover a sum of Rs. 5,396-15-6 alleged to be due in respect of two mortgages executed on the 3rd March 1899. The mortgages in question were executed by one Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh in favour of one Gauri Shankar. Bisheshar Bakhsh was impleaded as the first defendant and amongst other defendants were two persons, Ram Kumar and Lachman Prasad (defendants Nos. 3 and 4). These two defendants Nos. 3 and 4 are the appellants in First Civil Appeal 144. The plaintiff Dwarka Prasad is the appellant in Appeal No. 145. Before proceeding to deal with the points in dispute between these parties, it is necessary to explain the position of the plaintiff Dwarka Prasad and of these defendants Nos. 3 and 4 in order to show how they have become interested in the mortgages in suit. For this purpose it is necessary to set out, in the first instance, details of certain mortgages executed by Bisheshar Bakhsh in favour of Gauri Shankar. The first of these, which may, for convenience sake, be called mortgage A, was executed on the 3rd March 1899. The mortgage-money in this deed was Rs. 2,000. On the same date, a second mortgage, mortgage B, was also executed in favour of Gauri Shankar to secure a debt of Rs. 500. In both these mortgages, the property mortgaged consisted of a village called Simaria. On the 22nd March 1899, Bisheshar Bakhsh executed a farther mortgage on the same property in favour of one Gokaran Prasad to secure a loan of Rs. 300. This will be referred to as mortgage C. On the same date, the 22nd March 1899, Bisheshar Bakhsh motgaged the same property to one Jagannath for a loan of Rs. 1,000. This is mortgage D. On the 22nd April 1899, Bisheshar Bakhsh executed a further mortgage of Rs. 1,000 in favour of Gauri Shankar. This is mortgage E. It is to be noted that out of the principal amount of this mortgage, namely, Rs. 1,000, Rs. 500 consisted of the mortgage-debt secured by the deed of 3rd March 1899, which we have already referred to as mortgage B. For purposes of priority, therefore, it may be taken that this mortgage E has preference over the two intermediate mortgages C. and D. to the extent of Rs. 500, the rule being that where a mortgagor is unable to re-pay a loan and where an account is taken of the moneys due to the mortgagee on the security and a fresh bond is executed, the priority of the original mortgage is not affected although any fresh advance made under the subsequent deed will not have any effect as against an intermediate incumbrancer. It appears that Gauri Shankar was one of five brothers constituting a joint Hindu family, and in a suit brought in the year 1907 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Sitapur, a declaration was made on the 24th January 1908 that the interest of Gauri Shankar in the mortgages taken in his name amounted to a one-fifth share, that is, 3-1/5 annas. In February 1908, after the decision of the suit just referred to, Gauri Shankar's four brothers, one of whom is the plaintiff Dwarka Prasad in this case, sold their interest in mortgages A. and B. to two persons, who admittedly were benami purchasers for the defendants Nos. 3 and 4, namely, Ram Kumar and Lachman Prasad. One of these four brothers, named Channu Lal, having, before the date of this transfer, also acquired in mortgage A. a one-anna share out of the 3-1/5 annas share owned by Gauri Shankar, the result was that by the transfer in question, Ram Kumar and Lachman Prasad became owners of mortgagee rights in mortgage A. to the extent of 13 4/5 annas. As to mortgage B., the transfer gave them mortgagee rights to the extent of 12-4/5 annas. This transfer left Dwarka Prasad without any share in these mortgagee rights; but on the 20th July 1903, in execution of a money decree obtained against Gauri Shankar by one Nandan Prasad, Dwarka Prasad became the purchaser of Gauri Shankar's interest in mortgage A. to the extent of 2-1/5 annas and in mortgage E. to the extent of 3-1/5 annas As has already been said, this mortgage E. included the sum due on mortgage B. For the purpose of this suit, therefore, it may be taken that Dwarka Prasad is to be treated as the owner of 3-1/5 annas share in the mortgage B. It is convenient to deal with mortgage B. as still subsisting although it was incorporated in the deed of latter date; and it is for enforcement of his rights as mortgagee in these two mortgages, that Dwarka Prasad brought the present suit. It is necessary now to refer to another fact. It has already been stated that on the 22nd March 1899, Bisheshar Bakhsh had executed a mortgage for Rs. 1,000 in favour of a mortgagee named Jagannath (mortgage 1). In November 1904, Jagannath brought a suit on this mortgage and obtained a decree for sale. In the suit brought by Jagannath, he impleaded as defendants not only the mortgagor but also Gouri Shankar and Gokaran Prasad. These last two persons were impleaded as prior mortgagees. In paragraph 3 of Jagannath's plaint, (Exhibit 10), it was stated that Gauri Shankar and Gokaran Prasad were prior mortgagees and the plaintiff asked for a decree for sale of the property subject to the mortgages in their favour. On the 12th December 1904, the Court passed a decree for sale of the mortgaged property, that is, Mouzah Simaria, subject to the prior mortgages held by Gauri Shankar and Gokaran Prasad. The property was sold and was purchased by Lachman Prasad (defendant No. 4) and by one Bala Prasad, who subsequently transferred his interest to the defendant No. 3, namely, Ram Kumar. This purchase was made on the 22nd April 1906. The result of this transaction, therefore, was that Ram Kumar and Lachman Prasad became owners of the property subject to the prior mortgages of Gauri Shankar and Gokaran Prasad. They have paid off Gokaran Prasad's mortgage (mortgage C.) so that at the present time they are owners of Mouzah Simaria subject to the mortgage incumbrances in favour of Gauri Shankar in which they themselves have as already stated acquired the principal interest. We have it, therefore, that the plaintiff Dwarka Prasad is mortgagee to the extent of 2-1/5 annas under mortgage A. and 3-1/5 annas under mortgage B., and that the defendants are owners of the mortgaged property subject to the mortgagee rights of the plaintiff Dwarka Prasad. To come now to the pleadings in the present suit, Bisheshar Bakhsh the mortgagor made no defence. The principal defence raised came from Ram Kumar and Lachman Prasad and the only pleas with which we are here concerned are two, namely;—first, that under the two mortgages of 3rd March 1899, which were put in suit, the full consideration had not been paid to the mortgagor Bisheshar Bakhsh, and secondly, that the mortgages in question had been obtained by the exercise of undue influence on the part of Gauri Shankar, and that the rate of interest, namely, 24 per cent. per annum compoundable with six monthly rests, was harsh and unconscionable and should not be enforced. On the issues raised by these pleadings, the Subordinate Judge found that these defendants had failed to prove any failure of consideration. He found in their favour on the plea of undue influence and reduced the rate of interest to simple interest at 18 per cent. per annum. Both parties have appealed. Ram Kumar and Lachman Prasad alleged that lower Court was wrong in holding that the payment of full consideration for the mortgages in suit was proved. Dwarka Prasad, the plaintiff, in appeal attacks the finding of the Court below on the question of interest. It is claimed on his behalf that there was no case for the reduction of interest and that the full interest provided by the mortgage deed in suit should have been awarded.

To deal first with the defendants' appeal, the first question which requires consideration is whether or not, in the circumstances already stated, it was competent to Ram Kumar and Lachman Prasad to raise any plea as regards failure of consideration. As has already been pointed out, these persons have by purchase acquired the largest share of the mortgagee-rights in both the mortgages before the Court, that is, 13-4/5 annas in mortgage A. and 12-4/5 annas in mortgage B. It has also been stated that they purchased the village of Simaria in execution of Jagannath's decree subject to the prior mortgages in favour of Gauri Shankar. As regards this last transaction, there can be no doubt whatever as to the nature of the purchase made. What was sold in exection of Jagannath's decree was the village of Simaria subject to the prior mortgages in favour of Gauri Shankar and Gokaran Prasad. This is clear from the decree of the Court and also from the sale statement which was prepared previous to the time of sale. In this sale statement, the profits of Mouza Simaria were estimated at Rs. 117 a year and the value of the property was described as being approximately Rs. 10,892. The property was purchased in execution for Rs. 100 and obviously the reason why such a low price was obtained was on account of the amounts due on the prior incumbrances subject to which the property was sold. Can Ram Kumar and Lachman Prasad, in the face of these facts, turn round now and raise a plea to the effect that the mortgages subject to which they got the property were not given for full consideration? In my opinion, they cannot. In this connection, I would refer to a passage in Ghose's Law of Mortgage, 4th Edition, Volume I, page 302, where the learned author states as follows:—"If a person purchases an estate subject to a mortgage, whether under a voluntary conveyance or under a sale in invitum, or undertakes to discharge it, he cannot be heard to deny the validity of the mortgage subject to which he made his purchase. The purchaser cannot, therefore, set up any personal disability on the part of the mortgagor to make the mortgage, nor that it was obtained by fraud, nor, if the full amount named in the mortgage was deducted from the price paid for the estate, can he dispute the amount of the mortgage-debt."

The learned author goes on to say that where the purchaser merely buys an estate which is under mortgage but does not take it subject to the incumbrance or undertake to discharge it, he is not precluded from impeaching the validity of the mortgage. In support of what he says, the learned author refers to the following cases:—Inayat Singh v. Izzat un-Nissa Begam (1), Ramachandra Joishi v. Haji Rassim (2), Shantappa v. Subrao (3) and Shib Kunwar Singh v. Sheo Prasad Singh (4). According to these rulings, a distinction is to be drawn between the case of a purchaser at an auction sale who buys property not subject to a mortgage but with notice of a mortgage and subject to such risks as the notice may involve, and the case of a person who purchases property which is declared to be subject to prior mortgages. This distinction is referred to in the case of Shib Kunwar v. Sheo Prasad (4), where the learned Judges say (at page 420)—"The Code of Civil Procedure clearly makes a distinction between a case in which property is sold subject to a mortgage and a case in which notice of an alleged mortgage is given in the proclamation of sale. The former is provided for by section 282, and the latter by section 287. In the former case, the Court, after being satisfied of the existence of the mortgage, sells only the judgment-debtor's right of redemption, so that the purchaser does not acquire any greater rights than those of redeeming the mortgage. In the latter, he buys the property with notice of the mortgage and subject to such risks as the notice might involve. The Court does not decide whether the mortgage subsists or not. If there is in reality a subsisting mortgage, the purchaser has to redeem it. If, on the other hand, the mortgage specified in the proclamation of sale is a fictitious mortgage, or did not subsist at the date of the sale by reason of its having been previously discharged by payment, the purchaser acquires the property free from liability for the mortgage." Now, in the present case, as has already been pointed out, the sale of property in execution of Jagannath's decree was beyond all doubt a sale subject to prior mortgages. The case was not merely one of notification in the proclamation of sale that certain mortgages were said to exist upon the property. On the contrary, Jagannath himself had in his plaint admitted the existence of these prior mortgages and both the prior mortgagees had been impleaded as defendants in the suit. It is quite clear, therefore, that the auction-purchasers under this decree, when they bought the property for Rs. 100 only, acquired nothing more than the right to redeem the prior mortgages and this being so, it seems to me, in accordance with the opinion expressed in Ghose's Law of Mortgage, Volume I, page 302, that it was not competent for Ram Kumar and Lachman Prasad to set up in this case any plea which called in question the validity of the mortgages subject to which the property was sold. I think the learned Subordinate Judge was in error in allowing such a plea to be entertained. Assuming, however, for the sake of argument that such a plea was open to the defendants-appellants, I agree with the findings of the Subordinate Judge that they failed to discharge the burden of proof which lay upon them. It has been argued here in appeal that the burden of proving that full consideration for the mortgages in question was paid lay upon the plaintiff. These defendants, who took under a sale in execution of a mortgage-decree against the mortgagor, cannot be in a better position than the mortgagor would have been himself. There was no question as to the fact of execution and if Bisheshar Bakhsh, the mortgagor, had thought fit to raise any plea of want of consideration, the burden of establishing it would have been upon him. How these defendants can be in a better position than the original mortgagor himself has not been explained. The defendants, as held by the learned Subordinate Judge, gave no evidence at all to prove that full consideration had not been given and accordingly their case on this point was bound to fail. I may note here that the learned Counsel who appears for the plaintiff respondent in Appeal No. 144 has argued that even if it be assumed that the burden of proof lay upon him, it was duly discharged. I do not think it necessary to enter into the details of the evidence produced on this point by the plaintiff. It is sufficient for me to say that, in my opinion, it establishes clearly that full consideration was paid. This finding disposes practically of the appeal brought by the defendants Ram Kumar and Lachman Prasad. I may, however, note one or two other points which call for an expression of opinion. It was claimed on behalf of these defendants that Jagannath's mortgage of the 22nd March 1899, under which they purchased, was entitled to priority over the mortgages in suit by reason of the fact that a portion of the mortgage-money advanced under this mortgage was applied in extinguishing a mortgage-debt dated the 3rd July 1897 due to one Sital Sah. So far as this claim is concerned, I think the learned Subordinate Judge's decision is perfectly correct. He points out that when Jagannath brought his suit for sale, he never claimed any priority for his mortgage on this account and, this being so, the defendants appellants can certainly not now be heard to raise a plea of priority which Jagannath did not take in his own suit. At the hearing of this appeal, the learned Counsel for these defendants-appellants also attempted to raise a new plea which is not taken in the memorandum of appeal. He complains of the form of the decree and argues that in no case was the plaintiff entitled to have the whole of the village of Simaria brought to sale in order to enforce his mortgagee rights. On being asked to explain how this ground was not taken at the time when the appeal was filed, all that the learned Counsel could say was that he had omitted it by reason of his not having had before him a copy of the decree at the time when he drew the memorandum of appeal. This is no sufficient explanation for such an omission and I cannot allow any fresh ground to be taken now for any such reason. The defendants-appellants have been given six months to pay off the money due to the plaintiff and if they fail to do so, I see no reason why the plaintiff should not get what is owing to him by sale of the mortgaged property.

There remains to be considered the plaintiff's appeal, Appeal No. 145 of 1911. This relates to the question of interest and it is claimed that the Court below was wrong in reducing the contract rate of interest to 18 per cent. per annum simple. I have already said that this reduction was made by the Court below on a plea of undue influence raised by Ram Kumar and Lachman Prasad. The Subordinate Judge was of opinion that, on the face of it, the contract was unconscionable that the mortgagor was completely in the hands of the mortgagee, Gauri Shankar, and that, therefore, under section 16, sub-section (3),of the Indian Contract Act, it lay upon the plaintiff Dwarka Prasad to establish that the contract was a fair one and was not induced by undue influence. I fail to understand why a plea of this nature was entertained in this case. As I have already stated, I am of opinion that neither of these defendants was competent to question in any way the terms of the mortgages subject to which they bought the property and I certainly think they were not competent to ask the Court to hold that they were entitled to have the rate of interest reduced on the ground of a hard bargain. Who are these defendants to raise a plea of this kind? They bought the property subject to mortgages of the terms of which they were fully cognizant. Further, they have acquired from Gauri Shankar's brothers more than four-fifths of the mortgagee rights under these mortgages and it is impossible to imagine that the price which they paid for them was not calculated in accordance with the terms relating to interest. It does not lie in their mouths now to complain that the rate of interest secured by the mortgages in suit is excessive. It is conceivable that a plea of this kind might have been entertained had it been raised by the mortgagor himself but Bisheshar Bakhsh has never made any complaint on this score. The contest is no longer between a mortgagor and a mortgagee but between two sets of money-lenders who have been buying up mortgagee rights which sprang out of the mortgages executed by Bisheshar Bakhsh. The defendants, Ram Kumar and Lachman Prasad, entered into a speculation and now want to have their bargain made more favourable to themselves at the expense of another person who has stood in their way and prevented them from acquiring the entire mortgagee-rights over the village. These defendants have no equity in their favour which entitles them to complain that the rate of interest in the mortgage-deeds was an unconscionable one. I, therefore, hold that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in allowing this plea and decree the appeal brought by the plaintiff Dwarka Prasad (Appeal Nos 145 of 1911).

The result, therefore, is that the defendants' appeal (Appeal No. 144 of 1911) is dismissed with costs. The plaintiff's appeal (Appeal No. 145 of 1911) is allowed with costs. The decree of the Court below is set side and it is ordered that the plaintiff's claim be decreed in full with costs. The defendants will have six months from the date of the decree of this Court to pay up the sum found due to the plaintiff on the deeds in suit. In default, the mortgaged property will be put to sale. A decree in the usual form will be prepared in the office.

BHOLE SINGH—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

BHAGWANT SINGH—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Suit for possession by auction-purchaser—Plaintiff to prove his title within time—Limitation—Burden of proof.

In a suit the defendant cannot be put to the defence of his title at all unless the plaintiff claims from the Court the relief to which he is entitled within what the Legislature has laid down to be a suitable time with reference to the facts of each particular case.

Second appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Agra, dated the 8th May 1911.

Mr. Damodar Das, for the Appellant.

Mr. Bajpai, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for recovery of possession over certain immoveable property and the only question for determination before me is one of limitation. In stating this question, I think it reasonable to accept everything which the Courts below have found against the conduct of the defendant upon the facts of the case. It appears that the defendant, holding three distinct mortgages on the property in suit, brought three distinct suits, one upon each mortgage. He obtained decrees and put the property up for sale three times, once upon each decree. He purchased himself at auction under two of his decrees on the 21st February 1898, and obtained formal possesssion on the 7th of September 1898 and again on the 30th of January 1899. In the meantime, the same property had been put up for sale a third time on April the 21st, 1898. The defendant appeared at that auction-sale, said nothing about his previous purchase, but actually bid for the property as if it still belonged to his judgment-debtor. He was out-bid by the plaintiff, who thus became auction-purchaser at this third sale held on April the 21st, 1898. This sale was confirmed by the Court on the 30th of May 1898 and the plaintiff obtained formal delivery of possession on the 15th of May 1899. It must be remembered, therefore, that his judgment-debtor was still in possession at the date of the auction-sale, but the decree-holder, (the present defendant) as auction-purchaser under his first two decrees, had himself obtained formal delivery of possession before the plaintiff did so. The present suit was brought on the 1st of June 1910, and I have to determine which is the Article of the first Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908) by which that suit is governed. The suit as brought is one to which Article 142 of the said Schedule would apply provided the plaintiff succeeded in establishing the necessary facts. What the plaintiff says is, that he obtained actual, and not merely formal possession on the 15th of May 1899 but lost that possession some time in the month of July 1899 owing to an adverse decision of the revenue Courts. If these facts were established, the suit would be one for possession of immoveable property when the plaintiff while in possession of the property has been dispossessed, Article 142 of the Indian Limitation Act would apply; the date of the origin of the cause of action would be the month of July 1899, and the suit would be within time. In such a suit, however, the burden of proof is on the plaintiff to satisfy the Court that he was actually in possession within limitation. There is no finding in favour of the plaintiff by either of the Courts below on this point, nor has either of them applied Article 142 of the Schedule, nor has either of them calculated the origin of the cause of action from the month of July 1899. Both the Courts below have held that the plaintiff has a cause of action dating from the 15th of May 1899, the date on which formal delivery of possession to him took place under orders of the Court. The learned Munsif himself does not expressly state what Article of the Limitation Act he proposes to apply, but the learned Subordinate Judge on first appeal has expressly applied Article 144. This Article cannot be applied unless the Court is prepared to find that the suit is one for possession of immoveable property not specially provided for under any of the other Articles of the Schedule in question. This seems to me clearly impossible because the suit as framed is one to which Article 142 would apply, and it discloses facts which would make Article 138 of the Schedule applicable. The Courts below have held that this Article 138 of the Schedule is excluded by the principle of the ruling of this Court in Narain Das v. Lalita Prasad (1). That ruling obviously does not exclude Article 138, because the particular case then before the Court was decided without any determination of the question whether Article 138 or Article 144 would have applied to the facts then before the Court. By implication it seems to me that this ruling is entirely against the plaintiff; but I will refer to this point again presently. There are other authorities for holding that Article 138 of the Schedule would apply to the present suit, as for instance, cases reported as Sadashiv Mahadu v. Narayan Vitha Mawal (2) and as Venkatalingam v. Veerasami (3). I come back, therefore, to what seems to me the one question really arguable, namely, whether or not the Courts below should have found in favour of the plantiff on the ground that he has made out a sufficient case for applying the Article of Limitation Act on which his suit was actually based, namely, Article 142. I do not think the case for the plaintiff can be put any higher than this, namely, that the Court should accept his certificate of formal delivery of possession on the 15th of May 1899 as prima facie sufficient proof that he obtained actual possession on that date. If this proposition can be affirmed, then it would not be necessary for the plaintiff to prove that he actually lost possession in the month of July following, or on any specific date; he could claim to have made out a good title, plus possession within twelve years of the date of the suit. Now it is on this very point that the ruling in Narain Das v. Lalita Prasad (1), already referred to, seems to me against the plaintiff. Applying the principle involved in that ruling to the facts of the present case, I hold that if the judgment-debtor had been in actual possession on the 15th of May 1899, then the Court would have been bound to accept the plaintiff's certificate as sufficient proof that the judgment-debtor was actually ousted from possession on that date and that possession passed to the plaintiff. The case is otherwise when the judgment-debtor was not in possession on the 15th of May 1899, but another person was in possession as auction-purchaser under a previous sale. As against such auction-purchaser, formal delivery of possession to the present plaintiff is not proof that he was actually ousted. Something has been said before me in argument as to the dishonesty of the defendant's proceedings, and as to the question of estoppel. These considerations are quite irrelevant to the question of limitation. If the plaintiff had come into Court within twelve years of the date of the confirmation of his auction-sale, it may be that the Courts below are perfectly right in holding that no sort of defence on the merits would have been open to the defendant, in view of his proceedings, and particularly in view of the fact that he was a bidder at the auction-sale of the 21st April 1898. The whole point of the law of limitation is, however, that a defendant cannot be put to the defence of his title at all unless the plaintiff claims from the Courts the relief to which he is entitled within what the Legislature has laid down to be a suitable time with reference to the facts of each particular case. I hold that the suit as framed is barred by Article 142 of the first Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act, because the plaintiff has failed to prove the ingredients necessary to bring his suit under the operation of that Article. I hold that the facts disclosed are such that the suit would have been maintainable under Article 138 of the same Schedule if it had been filed two days earlier, but that it is barred under that Article because it was brought more than twelve years from the date of the confirmation of the auction sale. I hold that Article 144 of the same Schedule cannot be applied at all, because, from any point of view, the suit is one provided for by another Article in the same Schedule. I, therefore, accept this appeal and, setting aside the decrees of both the Courts below, dismiss the suit with costs throughout, including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Appeal accepted.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.
SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 318 OF 1910.
May 13, 1912.
Present:—Sir Arthur Reid, KT., Chief Judge, and Mr. Justice Rattigan.
THE INDIA GENERAL NAVIGATION AND RAILWAY COMPANY, LIMITED, CALCUTTA—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT
HARCHARAN DAS—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Railways Act (IX of 1890), ss. 3 (4) & (5), 80—Railway Company—Navigation Company in connection with Railway traffic—Liability for loss to goods—Detention—"Deterioration"—Goods conveyed by different Companies—Liability of Company detaining goods—Agreement between two Companies for non-liablity to public—Jurisdiction—Place of trial—Contract made where goods delivered for transit—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 17, Exp. III.

A. delivered certain goods to the North-Western Railway Company at Ludhiana for carriage to Bhairab in Eastern Bengal.

The Railway Receipt for the goods was made over to A. at Ludhiana and payment for freight was also made there. The lines of various Railway Companies were used for the transit of the goods, which were conveyed to Goalundo by the Eastern Bengal State Railway, and were conveyed thence by the Indian General Navigation and Railway Company to Bhairab.

The goods were detained at Goalundo and Bhairab and plaintiff, after due notice, sued the India General Navigation and Railway Company for damages for loss in the value of goods owing to the detention. The defendant never pleaded in the first Court that it was not a Railway Company. Between the Eastern Bengal State Railway and the defendant Company there was alleged to be an agreement by which each Company was to be responsible to the other for damage to goods but not to the public.

Held, (1) that the defendant Company could not plead in appeal that it was not a Railway Company;

(2) that the defendant Company was a Railway Company and that section 80 of the Railways Act applied to the case;

(3) that as the contract was made at Ludhiana, the Ludhiana Court had jurisdiction to try the suit;

(4) that even if A. had notice of the agreement between the Eastern Bengal State Railway and the defendant Company, it would not relieve the latter of liability to A. in the suit;

(5) that "deterioration" in section 80 of the Railways Act included decrease in market-value consequent on detention;

Changa Mal v. The Bengal N. W. Ry. Company, 6 P. R. 1897, relied upon.

(6 that the defendant Company was liable for loss caused by detention at Bhairab but not for detention at Goalundo.

Second appeal from the order of the Divisional Judge, Ludhiana Division, at Ferozepore, dated the 8th December 1909, modifying that of the District Judge, Ludhiana, dated the 31st May 1909, decreeing part of the plaintiff's claim.

Mr. Oertel, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi, Messrs. Obedulla and Ghulam Rasul, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.— * * * * *

This appeal and Civil Appeal No. 319 of 1910 can be disposed of together, the points involved being practically indentical. The respondent, Harcharan Das, sued the appellants, the Indian General Navigation and Railway Company, Limited, Calcutta, for damages on account of the loss sustained by him in consequence of detention of his goods by the appellant Company and fall in the market price of those goods during such detention, and for recovery of sums unlawfully recovered from him by the appellant Company in respect of surcharges and demurrage. The principal plea set up is that the Ludhiana Court, in which the suit was instituted, had no jurisdiction but, as remarked by the lower Appellate Court, the appellant Company never pleaded that it was not a Railway Company amenable to the jurisdiction of the Court under the Railways Act and it has throughout described itself as a Railway Company. The goods in respect of which the suit was filed were delivered to the North-Western Railway Company at their station at Ludhiana for carriage to Bhairab in Eastern Bengal. The lines of various Railway Companies were used and the goods were conveyed to Goalundo by the Eastern Bengal State Railway and were conveyed thence by the appellant Company to Bhairab by boat. "Railway" and "Railway Company" are defined in section 3 (4) and (5) of the Indian Railways Act, IX of 1890. Section 3 (4) (d) includes in the definition of "Railway" all ferries, ships, boats and rafts used on inland waters for the purposes of the traffic of a Railway and belonging to or hired or worked by the authority administering the Railway.

Under section 80 of the Act. the plaintiff could either sue the Railway administration to which the goods were delivered or the Railway administration on whose Railway the loss, injury, destruction or deterioration complained of occurred. Under section 17, Explanation III, of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882, in force when the suit was filed, the cause of action arose, and the suit could be filed, at the place where the contract was made. We have no hesitation in holding that the contract was made at Ludhiana. The Railway Receipt entitling the respondent to carriage of the goods to Bhairab was made over to him at Ludhiana and payment for it was made at Ludhiana.

It was contended for the appellant Company that under Exhibit A, Articles of agreement entered into in 1903 between the Eastern Bengal State Railway on the one side and the Indian General Navigation and Railway Company and the Rivers Steam Navigation Company on the other side, each Company is responsible to the other but not to the public. Article 18, however, is as follows:—

"All loss, injury or damage of any kind and all claims for goods, cargo or parcels shall thus be settled by the party with whom the goods, cargo or packages were at the time when the loss or injury occurred from which the claims arose. But where it cannot be ascertained with certainty where the loss or injury arose, the claim shall be divided in proportion to the amount of freight to which each party would be entitled under clause 8, but in such cases no claims shall be admitted or paid without the consent of both parties."

Even if it were held that the respondent was aware of this agreement, it would not, in our opinion, relieve the appellant Company of liability to him in this suit. It has not, however, been pleaded that he had a notice of this agreement and he is not, in our opinion, bound by its terms.

It has further been contended for the appellant Company that section 80 of the Act does not contemplate decrease in the market-price of the goods, and Changa Mal v. The Bengal N. W. Railway Company (1), which has been cited in support of this contention, does not materially help the appellants as page 26 of the report runs,—

"The exact meaning of the word 'loss' which is in issue in the case is ,perhaps, to a certain extent liable to be obscured by the discussions regarding it in some of the reported cases. It has been held for example to cover a loss of season or market:"

and authority is cited for this interpretation.

The question before the Court in that case really was whether section 77 of the Railways Act barred a suit for damages for negligent mis-delivery of goods to a person other than the owner by reason of notice not having been given to the Railway administration within six months of the loss. The plaint in the present suit alleges delivery to the Railway Company at Ludhiana on the 17th September 1906 and notice to defendants on the 15th January 1907, i.e., within six months. These allegations are not now denied. We see no reason for doubting that deterioration in section 80 includes decrease in market-value consequent on detention.

It is admitted that the goods in suit were conveyed by the appellant Company from Goalundo to Bhairab and on the pleadings, we are satisfied that section 80 of the Railways Act applies. Nurul Hussain v. Shiv Sahai Lal (2), Chuni Lal v. Musammat Amir Bibi (3), Muhammad Anwarul Haq v. Habibul Rahman (4) and Hans Raj v. Ganga Ram (5), are authority, if authority were necessary, for the proposition that the appellants cannot at this stage plead that they are not a Railway Company within the terms of, section 80 of the Act.

On the facts, we concur with the Courts below that the appellants were liable to the respondent for loss caused him by the detention at Bhairab and that they were not entitled to demand demurrage or surcharge from the respondent. At the same time, we cannot concur in so much of the lower Appellate Court's judgment as makes the appellant liable for detention at Goalundo. At the beginning of the judgment in Civil Appeal No. 326 of 1909, the subject of Civil appeal No. 319 of 1910 before us, the lower Appellate Court says:—

"The consignment in question reached Goalundo on 12th November 1906 and Bhairab on the 11th January 1907, so far the defendant Company was not to blame," and further on the judgment runs,—

"I find that the delay at Goalundo was presumably due to the defendant Company's default."

We are unable to concur in the reasons recorded for this change of opinion and we concur with the Court of first instance in the conclusion that the only detention for which the appellants were liable was at Bhairab. The lower Appellate Court was, however, correct in increasing the amount of surcharge recoverable by the respondent to Rs. 37-2-9 more in each case than was allowed by the Court of first instance. We, therefore, modify the decree of the lower Appellate Court in this appeal by deducting Rs. 233-14-9 from the amount as decreed, and in Civil Appeal No. 319 of 1910 by deducting Rs. 195 from the sum decreed. To this extent only the appeals are decreed but, having regard to the course of the litigation, the appellants will pay the whole of the respondent's costs.

RESPONDENT

Res judicata—Second suit for redemption.

T. mortgaged her occupancy-holding with possession to G. in 1899. In 1909, T. brought a suit, not properly framed as a redemption suit, in which she obtained a decree for possession subject to her first paying within 30 days the amount secured under the mortgage. She, however, did not pay the money within time. Subsequently, she brought a suit for redemption:

Held, that the second suit for redemption was not barred by the former suit.

The cause of action in a suit for redemption is the mortgagor's title plus a valid tender or deposit of the mortgage-debt. Unless, therefore, there has been a decree which makes it impossible for the mortgagor to make a valid tender or deposit, his right to do so continues.

Sita Ram v. Mahdo Lal, 24 A. 44, referred to.

Second appeal from the decision of the Additional Judge of Aligarh, dated the 31st August 1911.

Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, for the Appellant.

Mr. Govind Prashad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiff is the occupancy-tenant of a certain holding. By a deed, dated February the 16th, 1899, that is to say, before the Agra Tenancy Act (Act II of 1901) came into force, she mortgaged this holding with possession to the defendant. She now brings this suit for redemption upon tender of Rs. 90, the amount of the mortgage-debt. The defence is that the plaintiff is debarred from bringing this suit by reason of the result of a previous suit brought by her in the year 1909. It appears that this former suit was not framed precisely as a suit for redemption, but at any rate it ended in a decree dated November the 22nd, 1909, the effect of which was that the plaintiff might recover possession of the holding in question, subject to her first paying within thirty days the sum of Rs. 90 found to be due to the defendant. An appeal having been preferred against this decree, the plaintiff was foolish enough to neglect the fulfilment of the condition imposed upon her and failed to deposit the sum of Rs. 90 within the prescribed period. The subsequent dismissal of the defendant's appeal on March the 18th, 1910, left her without any decree of which she could claim execution. She now brings this second suit as a suit for redemption based upon a tender of the mortgage money made subsequently to the decree in the former suit. The question is whether this suit is maintainable. The decision must obviously be governed by the ruling of the Full Bench of this Court in Sita Ram v. Madho Lal (1) and by the principles involved in that ruling. I cannot put the case for the defendant more strongly than this:—if the former suit of 1909 had ended in a simple decree for possession in favour of the plaintiff, and the plaintiff had neglected to obtain execution of that decree within limitation, she could never have brought a second suit for recovery of possession, no matter how good her title might be. Now the suit actually ended in a decree for possession subject to a certain condition. Failure to comply with that condition left the plaintiff with no decree that she could execute, and it is argued that there is no more reason for allowing her to bring a fresh suit in the one case than in the other. This argument is not without real force, but it overlooks the fact that the decree in the former suit involved, in a sense, a declaration that the parties occupied towards one another the position of mortgagor and mortgagee. When once this is realised, there seems to me no argument in favour of the defendant in the present suit which is not equally an argument against the correctness of the dicision of this Court in Sita Ram v. Madho Lal (1). I think it may be said that the Honourable Judges of other High Courts, who have refused to accept the view of the law taken by this Court in the decision above referred to, have proceeded in the main upon the lines that a distinction must be drawn between a mortgagor's title as such, and the existence of a legal remedy still available to the mortgagor for the enforcement of the same. In one form or another it seems to me that this argument was considered and rejected by all the learned Judges who decided the case of Sita Ram v. Madho Lal (1). The decision of this Court proceeds on the assumption that a mortgagor's right to redeem continues until it is expressly taken away by some decree of a competent Court, that is to say, by some decree which in express terms has the effect of extinguishing that right. Otherwise the mortgagor, in the view taken by this Court, has a fresh cause of action, every time he tenders or deposits in Court the amount of the mortgage-debt, and he could not be debarred from bringing a fresh suit merely by the allegation that it was a suit based upon the same cause of action as some former suit brought by him. To put the point in another way, this Court holds that the cause of action in a suit for redemption is the mortgagor's title plus a valid tender or the deposit of the mortgage-debt. Unless, therefore, there has been a decree which makes it impossible for the mortgagor to make a valid tender or deposit, his right to do so continues. If we turn to the provisions of section 92 of the Transfer of Property Act, it cannot be denied that they afford considerable support to the position taken up by this Court. It is evident that one of the objects of the Legislature in enacting this section was to provide against multiplicity of suits for redemption. If the provisions of that section are properly carried out, every suit for redemption must end in a decree which will have the effect of finally extinguishing the right to redeem. Now, the very fact that such elaborate provision has been made in this section for the sake of securing the above result suggests that, in the absence of such provision, a fresh suit for redemption upon a new cause of action would lie every time the mortgage debt was tendered or deposited. The point seems to me clearer still if we consider the special provisions in the case of usufructuary mortgages. A usufructuary mortgagee as such has no right to bring the property to sale. Nevertheless, the Legislature has thought fit to direct that, in a suit for redemption where the mortgage is usufructuary, the alternative decree in the event of the plaintiff's failing to make the required payment within the prescribed period shall be one for sale of the mortgaged property. The reason for this obviously is that the Legislature did not intend that the holder of a usufructuary mortgage should, under any circumstances, obtain a decree for foreclosure pure and simple, or a decree which should have the effect of a foreclosure. In order to prevent this, and yet at the same time to protect usufructuary mortgagees from the danger of a multiplicity of suits for redemption, the Legislature adopted the only possible alternative, by providing that in the event of the plaintiff failing to avail himself of his decree for redemption, the mortgaged property should be put for sale. By so doing, the Legislature secured for the benefit of the mortgagor whatever difference there might be between the market-value of the mortgaged property and the amount of the mortgage-debt. It was, no doubt, in order to secure this benefit for the mortgagor that the Legislature refused to allow usufructuary mortgagees an alternative decree for foreclosure. It seems to me, therefore, that, but for one peculiar feature to which I am about to refer, the case for the defendant in the present suit is, upon any reasonable application of the ruling of this Court in Sita Ram v. Madho Lal (1), scarcely arguable at all. The mortgagee was himself a party to the former suit; if he wanted to protect himself against the possibility of a further suit for redemption, it was his business to see that the alternative decree, which was the decree which he himself might have to execute, was properly passed in accordance with the provisions of section 92 of the Transfer of Property Act. By failing to do this, he would lay himself open to a fresh suit for redemption, because the mere dismissal of a plaintiff's suit for redemption does not in itself bar the bringing of a fresh suit upon a fresh cause of action.

The peculiar feature of this case, of course, is that the mortgaged property was not saleable. It was an occupancy holding, and it could not have been put up for sale either under the provisions of the former North-Western Provinces Rent Act (XII of 1881) or under those of the present Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901). I can only say that it does not seem to me that this circumstance should be allowed to put the mortgagee in any better position. He accepted a mortgage of a right which he knew not to be permanently transferable. As the law now stands cases of this sort will not arise again, because it is now settled that an occupancy-holding may neither be sold nor mortgaged with possession. As the law formerly stood, the possibility of a temporary transfer by way of usufructuary mortgage was admitted but there is force in the position taken up by the learned District Judge in his decision in the present case, that to permit such temporary transfer to become permanent, by holding that the dismissal of the former suit has debarred the plaintiff for ever from her right to redeem, would be to defeat the provisions of the law against the transferability of such holding. It does not seem to me an unreasonable position to take up, to say that a defendant who accepted a usufructuary mortgage of an occupancy-holding prior to the passing of the Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901) must be held to have done so with a knowledge of any inconvenience to which he might be subjected by reason of the fact that the property taken by him on mortgage was not permanently transferable. One of these inconveniences was that no Court could ever give him a decree for sale under section 92 of the Transfer of Property Act. This seems to me no good reason for holding that a decree merely dismissing the plaintiff's suit for redemption must, therefore, be held to operate as a decree for foreclosure in favour of the mortgagee, when it was the clear intention of the Legislature that no such decree should ever be passed in the case of a usufructuary mortgage. It seems to me preferable to hold, on the contrary, that the defendant in this case, by accepting a usufructuary mortgage of a holding not legally transferable, has left himself open to a series of suits for redemption, because it was impossible for the Court to give him in any concievable suit any form of decree, either for foreclosure or for sale, which could have the legal effect of finally extinguishing the mortagor's right to redeem. I accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL No. 73 OF 1908.

April 1, 1912.

MITTA CHELAMIAH AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Joint family property—Survivorship—Allotment of deceased's share to brother's widow—Nature of estate taken by widow—Widow's estate—Succession—Devolution to husband's heirs—Accretions by income of the properties—Whether descendible to husband's heirs.

Under the Hindu Law, a woman's estate can be created in favour of a Hindu female quite as much by contract of parties or by a grant as it can be obtained by her by inheritance.

It is competent in an undivided Hindu family for a member to grant to his deceased brother's widow the share of her husband which the latter would have got on partition.

Such an estate would be held by the grantee as the ordinary widow's estate, which would be deemed to have been given her in lieu of maintenance, and, on her death, the property would pass to her husband's heirs.

P. and C. were members of an undivided family. On P.'s death, the property passed to C. by survivorship, L., the junior widow of P., and C. entered into an agreement, whereby, inter alia, he agreed to give her his deceased brother's half share in the properties. After C.'s death, the properties were equally divided between L. and B., C.'s widow, at the instance of arbitrators. In a suit by plaintiff, the step-daughter of L. against her father's reversioner:

Held, that the effect of the agreement between L. and her brother-in-law as well as between L. and her co-widow B. was to give L. only a life-estate in the properties which were allotted to her and that, on her death, the life-interest descended to the plaintiff:

Held, also, that any property purchased by L. out of the income of the estate would not descend to her husband's heir unless she incorporated it with the property held by her as heiress of her husband.

Appeal against the decree of the District Court of Cuddapah, dated 16th December 1907 in O. S. No. 2 of 1907.

The Hon'ble Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Iyer, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Mr. P. S. Sivaswamy Aiyar, Advocate-General, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiff is a daughter of one Pedda Tippayya by his first wife, and sues for the recovery of the properties mentioned in the schedules attached to the plaint. Pedda Tippayya had a brother, named Chinna Tippayya, and had married a second wife, Lakshmakka, who was only about ten years old at his death. She died in February 1905. The plaintiff's case is that Pedda Tippayya and Chinna Tippayya were divided in interest, and that they effected an actual division of the moveable properties and the houses, but that the other properties remained in the joint enjoyment of both at the time of Pedda Tippaya's death in 1868. The plaint alleges that Lakshmakka, the widow of Pedda Tippayya, took possession of his properties after his death in 1868 and that the 1st defendant, who joined Lakshmakka, and was looking after her properties took possession of them on her death in 1905 and that he is wrongfully withholding them from the plaintiff. She denies that the 1st defendant, who claims to have been adopted by Lakshmakka, was really adopted by her, and that Lakshmakka had any authority to adopt him. The second and the other defendants are made parties on the ground that they are in possession of some of the properties without any lawful title.

The 1st defendant contends that Pedda Tippayya and his bother, Chinna Tippayya, were undivided and that all the family properties devolved on Chinna Tippayya on the death of his brother, that Pedda Tippayya a few days before his death gave authority to Lakshmakka to make an adoption to him and that Chinna Tippayya also gave authority to Lakshmakka to adopt any one of his own sons except the first in the event of his begetting sons, or otherwise any other boy. The 1st defendant futher contends that Chinna Tippayya also agreed to give a half share of the properties to Lakshmakka, and that subsequently the properties were divided. He further contends that he was adopted by Lakshmakka in the year 1881, and that he had since been in enjoyment of the properties obtained in the division in his own right as well as of other properties acquired by him subsequently, apparently out of the income of the property obtained at the division.

Issues were framed as to the question of the status of the two brothers, as to the capacity in which Lakshmakka took a half share in the properties, as to the factum and validity of the adoption of the 1st defendant, as to limitation and as to the properties the plaintiff would be entitled to recover in case she was entitled to succeed as reversioner after the death of Lakshmakka.

The lower Court held that the brothers were undivided in interest at the death of Pedda Tippayya, that there was no adoption in fact, and that even if there were, it was invalid as the widow, Lakshmakka, had no authority to adopt. It also held that Lakshmakka held the half share allotted to her at the division absolutely, its view being that Lakshmakka must be taken to have obtained it as a gift from Chinna Tippayya. We agree with the District Judge that it is not proved that there was any division between the brothers before Pedda Tippayya's death. The evidence as to division is really worthless. Of the witnesses examined to prove it, the 2nd witness's evidence is merely hearsay and must be rejected as inadmissible. The 1st witness, who was the 1st defendant, has no personal knowledge of the division. The other witnesses, viz., Nos. 3, 4 and 5, though they profess to have been present at the division, are unable to give any details whatever. The 5th witness in re-examination actually admits that there was only one division and that was after the death of Pedda Tippayya. After Pedda Tippayya's death, an agreement was entered into between Lakshmakka and Chinna Tippayya. It was executed by the latter, and in it he states that Lakshmakka asked him to give her in adoption one of his sons except the eldest, in case he should have sons in future, or to give her a half share in the properties, and he agrees to give her one of his younger sons in adoption and to give her a half share. He agrees, further, in case only one son is born to him, to procure for her some boy of his own choice for adoption, and to give her a half share in place of his brother. He finally agrees, in default of his doing so, to give "her half share in the property" after division. This document, Exhibit IV, is dated the 6th December 1868. On the 30th October 1878, Lakshmakka and Bhagamma, the widow of Chinna Tippayya, who had died in the meanwhile, executed the muchilika, Exhibit XVI, in favour of certain persons as arbitrators to effect a partition of all the properties of the family and to settle the disputes between the parties regarding 'senior' and 'junior' shares. Exhibit VII, also dated the 30th October 1878, is a list of properties that fell to each of the widows at the division and include two houses and a lot of moveable properties. The lands are not comprised in it, but we are informed that the lands were also subsequently divided, and it is admitted by both the parties that all the properties were divided between the widows at some time or other. Mr. Seshagiri Aiyar for the appellant relies on these documents as corroborating the plaintiff's evidence as to division between the brothers during the lifetime of Pedda Tippayya. But we can see nothing in them to support his case. Exhibit IV makes absolutely no reference to any such division, and indicates that the idea of a division was due merely to Lakshmakka's request that a half share of the properties should be allotted to her, whether she was given one of the sons of her brother-in-law or not, and whether or not the latter procured any other boy to be adopted by her. Exhibit VII also contradicts the plaintiff's case about the division of moveables during Pedda Tippayya's life time as it shows that they were divided only on the date of that document. We accept the District Judge's finding that the brothers were not divided during the life-time of Pedda Tippayya. We also agree with the Judge in holding that Lakshmakka had no authority to make an adoption. The 1st defendant's Vakil in the lower Court stated that he would adduce no evidence that Pedda Tippayya during his life-time gave authority to his wife to adopt. Chinna Tippayya's alleged authority is based entirely on Exhibit IV; but it is quite clear that under it he only agreed either to give one of his younger sons in adoption, or to procure some boy of his own choice to be adopted by Laksmakka, and, in any event, to give her a half share of the family properties. It is impossible to construe the document as giving any general authority to Lakshmakka to adopt. The learned Advocate-General stated that the Judge reserved the evidence on the question of adoption, and by mistake afterwards held that it was not proved. But it is unnecessary, in the view we take on the question of authority to adopt, to investigate whether this complaint is well founded. The learned Advocate-General says that the Judge's observation that "it is perfectly clear" that the 1st defendant was living with Lakshmakka as her paramour is entirely unfounded. If this be so, and our attention is not drawn to any evidence in support of the Judge's statement, the observation, in our opinion, was an entirely unwarrantable one.

We have now to consider the 2nd issue. "In what capacity did Lakshmakka, the widow of Pedda Tippayya, take a half share in the property?" The learned Vakil for the appellant contends that she took only a widow's interest in it as the representative of her husband, Pedda Tippayya, and that the plaintiff, as his daughter, was entitled to succeed to it on the death of Lakshmakka. The learned Advocate-General, on the other hand, contends that as the two brothers were undivided in interest and the property passed by survivorship to the junior brother, Lakshmakka must be taken to have obtained the half share purely as a bounty. He contends that on the correct construction of Exhibits IV and XVI, what she took was a gift from her brother-in-law, and that even if under those documents she was intended to have only a life-interest, her right cannot be taken to be a widow's estate descendible to the reversionary heirs of her husband, and that on her death, the reversion would pass to Chinna Tippayya or his heirs, and that the plaintiff in any event has no right to succeed to the property. If Lakshmakka was promised an absolute right to the half share under Exhibit IV or got it subsequently by division between her and Bhagamma, the plaintiff is, of course, out of Court, as she is only a step-daughter of Lakshmakka. In our opinion, Exhibits IV and XVI must be taken together in order to determine the right acquired by Lakshmakka in the half share of the family property; and taken with the circumstances of the case, we have no doubt that the intention of the parties was that she was to have the half share as the representative of her deceased husband. If she validly adopted a boy, this share would pass to him; otherwise, she would continue to hold it. She was, no doubt, not entitled to partition as the widow of a deceased co-parcener. But it seems to be clear that it was the intention of Chinna Tippayya to treat her as if she was entitled to such share. For what reason he did so it is immaterial to consider. If Chinna Tippayya could in law validly give her a widow's interest, we feel no doubt that her half share must pass to her husband's reversioners and the plaintiff being the nearest reversioner would be entitled to succeed. The learned Advocate-General contended that a woman's estate could be obtained by a Hindu female only by inheritance—that such an estate cannot be created by contract of parties or by a grant. We are unable to agree with him. It is not denied that a Hindu female is capable of possessing two different kinds of estate passing by different rules of inheritance, namely, a woman's estate, with respect to which she does not become a stock of descent and which passes after her death to her husband's heirs, and an absolute estate which passes to her own heirs, i.e, the heirs to a woman's peculium. It has been decided by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council that a woman's estate may be created in favour of a daughter by contract (see

Radha Prosad Mullick v. Ranimoni Dasee (1) and Karim-ud-din v. Gobind Krishna Narain (2) and in determining the character of the estate taken in any particular case, the rule enunciated in Mahomed Shamsool v. Shewakram (3) must be borne in mind that "in construing the Will of a Hindu, it is not improper to take into consideration what are known to be the ordinary notions and wishes of Hindus with respect to the devolution of property. It may be assumed that a Hindu generally desires that an estate, especially an ancestral estate, shall be retained in his family; and it may be assumed that a Hindu knows that, as a general rule, at all events, women do not take absolute estates of inheritance which they are able to alienate." That such an estate could be created is assumed in Sambasiva Ayyar v. Visvam Ayyar (4) and Sambasiva Ayyar v. Venkataswara Ayyar (5), though the learned Judges did not agree on the construction of the particular instrument in the case as to whether it created a widow's estate or an absolute estate. It has also been decided that property could be given to a Hindu male with the incidents of ancestral property in which his sons would acquire a right by birth [See Subbarayar v. Subbammal (6); Sudarsanam Maistri v. Narasimhulu Maistri (7), per Bhashyam Ayyangar J.; Seth Jaidial v. Seth Sita Ram (8) and Munisami Chetti v. Maruthammal (9).] We do not think that the observation at page 465 in Anandra'o Vinayak v. Administrator-General of Bombay (10) relied on by the learned Advocate-General throws any doubt on the possibility of such an estate being created. In Timannacharya v. Balacharya (11) and Bai Diwali v. Patel Bechardas (12), there are observations to the effect that a stranger cannot give property to a Hindu impressing it with the character of ancestral estate. But assuming these observations to be well founded, they do not touch the persent case where, instead of an allotment for maintenance being made to Lakshmakka, she is treated by her husband's co-parcener more generously, and is given a half share of the property which her husband would have got on partition. The Advocate-General contended that to allow parties to create such an estate would enable them indirectly to contravene the provision of law that they cannot by grant create rights of property in favour of unborn or unascertained persons, and he relies on the decision in Nistarini Dassi v. Nundo Lal Bose (13). That went in appeal to the Privy Council in Benode Behari Bose v. Nistarini Dassi (14). It was, no doubt, held in that case that a gift by Will to the testator's reversionary heirs, whoever they might be, after the death of his widow would be void. But it is no authority for the position that an estate known to and sanctioned by the Hindu Law cannot be granted in favour of a Hindu female simply because the succession would pass on her death by law to her husband's heirs and not to the heirs to her stridhanam property. The heirs in such a case do not take under the grant itself but under the rules of law determining the line of inheritance to a particular kind of property held by the female owner. It has been decided that in the case of followers of the Marumakathayam law, a conveyance may be made to a woman with the incidents of tarwad property so as to give a right to her unborn children [See Kunhacha Umma v. Kutti Mammi Haiee (15); Mooriyat Peetikayil Kunhamina v. Mooriyat Peetikayil Kunhambi (16); Katankandi Koma v. Sivasankaran (17)]. The Advocate-General's argument is really answered by the Privy Council in Rai Bishan Chand v. Musammat Asmaida Koer (18). There a Hindu executed a deed of gift of property in favour of his grandson and his brothers "who may be born hereafter." This gift was impeached as void on the ground that it was a gift to a class of persons some of whom were not born at the time of the gift. After deciding that the gift would take effect in favour of the grandson actually then existing, their Lordships observe as follows :—

"Now in such an arrangement, it would be quite consistent with Hindu ideas of ancestral property to express a desire that the whole generation into which the property was transferred should benefit by it. Indeed, in the case of a partition between father and sons, it is laid down in the books that if a son born after the partition of ancestral estate does not, out of the residue of his father's estate, get a share equal to what his brothers had obtained, the other brothers must contribute to a share out of their portions. This rule is to be found in the Dayabhaga, Chapter VII, sections 10, 11 and 12, which is a Bengal authority, but it refers to Vishnu and Yajnyavalkya authorities on which the Mitakshara is founded. Indeed, the principle of the joint family is not less closely but more closely insisted on by the Benares School than by the Bengal School of law. But their Lordships are not now affirming the law on this point, nor are they deciding or prejudicing any question which may arise between Satrujit's heirs on the one hand, and his brothers, if any should be born, on the other. They are only showing that the notions present to the mind of the head of a joint Hindu family, who is making a family arrangement, are something very different from the notions present to the mind of an English testator when he makes a gift to a class."

It has, moreover, been held that a Hindu female may by prescription acquire property impressed with the character of a widow's estate if the title she asserted during the time of prescription was that of a widow holding as representative of her husband; [see Bapanayya v. Peddichalamaiya(19), Viravara Thodhramal Raja Lakshmi Devi Garu v. Viravaramal Surya Narayana Dhatrazu Bahadur Garu (20).] It is unnecessary to consider whether a mere stranger can give property to a Hindu widow with the incident of a widow's estate descendible to her husband's heirs. We think there can be no doubt that in circumstances like the present, such an estate could be created. It amounts practically to nothing more than an allotment to Lakshmakka of a large share of the family property amounting to what her husband would have got at a partition instead of giving her a smaller portion which would be sufficient for her maintenance. We, therefore, hold that plaintiff is entitled to the properties of Lakshmakka.

The lower Court has recorded no finding on the 5th issue. It will be requested to do so now after recording the evidence that the parties may adduce. The finding should be submitted within two months, ten days will be allowed for objections.

In compliance with the above judgment, the District Judge of Cuddapah submitted the following

FINDING.

This suit was decided by me in December 1907, but the High Court having remanded it on appeal, for a finding on the 5th issue, I have taken the necessary evidence on the point and my finding as to what the plaintiff is entitled to, is as follows:—

2. With regard to schedule A, immoveable property, it is contended that as regards items Nos. 1 and 2, which were got in a partition between 1st defendant and Chinna Thippayya's son, he was given certain lands in excess and to compensate for that, he paid Rs. 150 in cash out of his own money. Apart from the estate of Pedda Tippayya, whose adopted son he professes to be, he had no money of his own. In his answer he has not stated that he had money of his own, nor that his brother assisted him pecuniarily. In his evidence now, he comes forward with this statement that he got the money from his brother. He was adopted into a well-to-do family, and there is no reason why his brother should assist him with money. This statement coming at this late stage must be received with caution. I cannot believe it. The compensation, therefore, must have been paid from the money belonging to the estate of the late Pedda Tippayya.

3. The other items in dispute are items Nos. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 10, 11 and 12. These, the 1st defendant alleges, were acquired by him subsequently out of the money which he saved from his income from a trade, the lands of the estate, and what he got from his brother. As to his having got any money from his brother, I have already held that it is a myth. Rejecting then the evidence on this point, it must be held that whatever profit is derived must have been from the estate of the late Pedda Tippayya. The Pleaders for the 1st defendant have relied on Akkanna v. Venkayya(21)and Subramanian Chetti v. Arunachelam Chetti (22) as authorities showing that a tresspaser in possession of an estate is not a trustee and, therefore, not bound to safeguard the interests of a reversioner and whatever he saves out of the income of such an estate is his own property. Both the cases quoted are cases of Hindu widows, and, therefore, do not apply to the present case. In this case the trespasser happens to have been an adopted son. If the adoption was upheld, he exercises full rights of a proprietor over the property but if the adoption is set aside, he happens to be a mere trespasser, and is, therefore, liable to account for the whole of the property that came into his possession. As regards immoveables, I find that the 1st defendant is liable to hand over to the plaintiff all the items claimed by him.

(20) 20 M. 256; 24 I A. 118.

4. As regards moveables, there are two Scheules B. and C. Schedule B. is divided into two portions, (1) items Nos. 1 to 17 consisting of the jewels, and the second portion consisting of items Nos. 18 to 24 grain, item No. 25 utensils and item No. 26 cattle. First defendant denies the existence of Nos. 4, 5 and 17 in the first part of the Schedule B. Plaintiff has adduced no counter-evidence to prove that they existed. I must, therefore, find that they do not exist, and plaintiff is not entitled to them or the value thereof. Some of the jewels, the 1st defendant states, he gave to his wife and daughter but he admits that they did belong to the estate of Pedda Tippayya. That being the case, he is liable for them. My finding is that the 1st defendant is liable to make good the value of the jewels which he handed over to his wife and daughter.

5. As regards grain, 1st defendant's contention is that it was consumed during the pendency of the suit. He having been found to be a trespasser, must account for all the property that came into his possession. It is no excuse to say that he has consumed it. He must make good the value of the grain, which he admits existed at the time he came in possession of the property.

6. As regards items No. 25 in Schedule B, defendant denies the existence thereof. There is no evidence per contra and, therefore, I disallow the claim. As regards item No. 26, two buffaloes are claimed, only one of which is admitted to exist. I allow the claim for the existing one and as there is no evidence on the other side as regards the other, I disallow that.

7. Schedule C. consists of debts due to the estate of the late Pedda Tippayya. The first item is said to be a debt of Rs. 500. The 1st defendant says that it is a debt of of Rs. 250, and Rs. 50 out of it has already been paid. There are three other debts which the 1st defendant says he has already collected. The debts are admittedly payable to the estate of Pedda Tippayya and, therefore, the 1st defendant is liable to make good whatever he has collected.

8. As regards item No. 11 in Schedule C., defendant denies the existence of that debt. Plaintiff has not adduced any evidence in support thereof. My finding, therefore, is against the plaintiff and he cannot claim that debt.

9. My finding on the 5th issue, which is the only issue on which I have been directed to record a finding is that the plaintiff is entitled to recover all the items claimed in Schedule A, all the items or the value thereof in Schedule B except Nos. 4, 5, and 17 which are said not to exist; and I disallow item No. 25 and allow only one buffalo as regards item No. 26: and all the items in Schedule C except item No. 1 which is reduced to Rs 250 instead of Rs. 500 as stated by the 1st defendant and item No. 11 which is denied by the defendant to exist.

10. Plaintiff has put in a petition to amend the plaint as regards the number of a certain field which is wrongly put down as No. 69 which ought to be No. 96. The other side has contended that as the case is pending in the High Court, I have no right to order that amendment. I accordingly leave it for the orders of the High Court.

This appeal coming on for final hearing this day, after the return of the finding of the lower Court upon the issue referred by this Court for trial, the Court delivered the following (21) 25 M. 351. (22) 28 M. 1.

JUDGMENT.—We have now to deal with the question raised in the 5th issue, which of the plaint properties the plaintiff is entitled to recover. The Judge in his finding has proceeded on the assumption that all moveable properties purchased by 1st defendant or by Lakshmakka out of the income of the property that the latter obtained at the division between her and her husband's dayadis would descend to plaintiff as the heir of Pedda Tippayya. This assumption is wrong. The income of the estate held by Lakshmakka was entirely at her disposal, and any property purchased out of it would not descend to her husband's heir unless she incorporated it with the property held by her as the heiress of her husband. The plaintiff did not allege in her plaint that any such incorporation was made. Her case was merely that she was entitled to all acquisitions made by means of the income as a matter of law. Moreover, there is nothing to show that the properties were purchased by Lakshmakka herself and not by the 1st defendant in whose name the title-deeds stand. No doubt, 1st defendant admitted in his written statement that the purchases were made by him by means of the income of Pedda Tippayya's estates but the plaintiff cannot ask us to draw from this fact the inference that the properties purchased by 1st defendant were incorporated with Tippayya's estate. We must disallow plaintiff's claim with regard to items Nos. 3 to 7, 10 to 12 and 17 to 20 of Schedule A.

With regard to Schedule B, we see no reason to interfere with the finding of the Judge, which is based finally on admissions made by 1st defendant.

With regard to Schedule C. consisting of outstandings, plaintiff did not adduce any clear evidence to prove what bonds taken by Lakshmakka came into 1st defendant's possession or were renewed in his name. It is stated by the learned Vakils for plaintiff and 1st defendant that bonds of the value of Rs. 325 were taken by 1st defendant in 1881 and 1882 and fresh bonds to the extent of Rs. 200 in 1883. There were bonds in 1878 in Lakshmakka's name to the extent of Rs. 210. On the whole, we think we may take it that Lakshmakka had outstandings belonging to her husband's estate amounting to Rs. 700 and that she obtained possession of the bonds evidencing them. We shall award Rs. 700 to plaintiff on account of her claim under Schedule C. of the plaint with interest at six per cent. from the date of plaint. First defendant will be entitled to recover from the debtors the amount of the bonds. We reverse the decree of the lower Court and give the plaintiff a decree in the terms indicated above. Plaintiff will receive proportionate costs on the amount of the decree given to her and will pay 1st defendant proportionate costs on the claims disallowed. The lower Court will hold an inquiry into the question of mesne profits due to plaintiff from date of plaint on the immoveable properties decreed to her and pass a final decree for the amount that may be found due.

Appeal allowed.

MOHUNGA OJHA AND OTHERS—PETITIONERS—JUDGMENT-DEBTORS—APPELLANTS

versus

RAM BAHADUR SINGH—OPPOSITE PARTY—DECREE-HOLDER—RESPONDENT.

Costs—Mortgage-decree—Execution of decree for costs—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 90—Personal decree for costs.

A mortgage-decree-holder can realise his decree for costs otherwise than by proceeding under section 90 of the Transfer of Property Act, if the Court has passed a personal decree for costs.

Appeal from the order of the District Judge of Mozaffarpur, dated December 19th, 1910, reversing that of the first Munsif of Mozaffarpur, dated August 15th, 1910.

FACTS.—This was an application by the judgment-debtor taking exception to the execution of the decree upon the ground that the decree being a mortgage decree and the decree having already been previously executed with the result of an auction-sale of the property covered under the mortgage, the portion of the decree now remaining unsatisfied should not be executed without obtaining an additional decree under section 90 of the Transfer of Property Act. It was contended in reply on behalf of the decree-holder that the portion of the decree remaining unsatisfied relates to the costs of the suit only, and is not, therefore, a mortgage-decree, and that there is, therefore, no bar to his applying for execution of the portion of the decree relating to the costs only.

The learned Munsif held that the decree was one and indivisible and should not be considered as one made in two parts, one relating to the mortgage and the other to the costs of the litigation, and that the properties of the judgment-debtor other than those covered by the mortgage were not liable to be sold without a previous order to that effect under section 90 of the Transfer of Property Act.

In the mortgage-suit, the first Court had passed a decree dismissing the suit. On appeal by the plaintiff mortgagee, the Appellate Court "set aside the judgment and decree of the lower Court and in lieu thereof decreed the suit of the plaintiff with costs and interest" and directed that "the defendants do pay up the decretal debt within six months and in default the mortgaged property be sold."

The learned Munsif having dismissed the decree-holder's petition for execution, he appealed to the District Court. That Court said:—"In my opinion, the order of the Munsif cannot be maintained. He relies on the case of Raj Kumar Singh v. Sheo Narayan Sahu (1) in support of his decision, but that case follows a ruling in Maqbul Fatima v. Latla Prasad (2), in which case it was not apparently disputed that costs of an appeal could be recovered without an order under section 90. The order of the appellate decree is that the respondent do pay the costs of the appeal to the appellants and, in my opinion, this indicates not merely that the money is to be recovered from the mortgaged property, but is a personal decree. The case reported in Adjim Nullah Moodeen v. Cruickshank, Agent of the Bengal Bank (3) also supports this view and the principle is of importance even if this decision was before the Transfer of Property Act. * * Following the words used in the appellate decree that the respondents were to pay the costs of the appeal, I think that this was a personal liability under the decree. In this view, the decision of the Munsif is incorrect and the application for execution must be restored to the file to be dealt with on the merits."

The judgment-debtor appealed to the High Court.

Babu Atul Krishna Roy, for the Appellants.

Babus Dwarka Nath Mitter, Baikuntha Nath Mitter and Manindra Nath Banerjee, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The only point on this appeal is whether the decree-holder can realize his decree for costs otherwise than by proceeding under section 90 of the Transfer of Property Act. In cases of this kind what we have to see is not what decree the Court ought to have passed, but what decree the Court has passed. if the Court passed a personal decree for costs, then there is no necessity of having recourse to the procedure indicated in section 90. The learned District Judge has held that there was a personal liability for these costs imposed by the decree. I see no reason to differ from this, more particularly when it is borne in mind that these were costs not of the suit but of the appeal. Therefore, I think the decree of the District Judge must be confirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs, hearing fee one gold mohur.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 145—Possession proceedings—Delivery of possession to one of the parties by the Magistrate—Acquisition of title on unsuccessful party's failure to establish title within 3 years—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s 28, Sch. I, Art. 47—Suit for rent by party placed in possession—Previous attornment by tenant to defeated party in possession proceedings—Joinder of parties.

The effect of an order passed by a Magistrate under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, putting one of the parties in possession of the property, is that he, on failure by the unsuccessful party to sue to get rid of the order within 3 years under Article 47 of the Limitation Act, acquires a title to the property under section 28 of the Act.

In a suit for rent against a tenant instituted by the party thus put in possession, the unsuccessful party in the possession proceedings should be impleaded as a party defendant, if the tenant had, prior to the institution of the proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, attorned to the latter.

Appeal, under section 15 of the Letters Patent, against the judgment of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Phillips in Civil Revision Petition No. 514 of 1910, presented against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Madura East, in S. C. S. No. 1057 of 1907.

Mr. S. Srinivasa Iyengar, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. C. Desikachariar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case, the plaintiff's predecessor-in-title granted a lease of a village to a Chetty, and he also granted a lease of some village to the defendants. Then, the lessee of the entire village instituted a suit to establish his right in preference to the defendants. The suit was compromised, and the compromise decree provided, among other things, that both the leases were valid and that the defendants should pay the rent due under their lease to the Chetty during the continuance of the Chetty's lease. Thereafter, it appears there was a dispute as to the possession of the village between the Chetty and the plaintiff and proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, were instituted. The result of the proceedings was that the plaintiff was found to be in actual possession of the village and an order was passed to that effect. The Chetty, it appears, did not take any steps to establish his right by getting rid of the effect of that order under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code. The plaintiff now sues the defendants for rent.

He obtained a decree from the Subordinate Judge. In revision, Mr. Justice Phillips reversed that judgment and dismissed the plaintiff's suit, holding that, under the compromise decree, the plaintiff was not entitled to any rent. He, however, overlooked the effect of the proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code. That question is dealt with by the Subordinate Judge in his judgment. If the proceedings related to the land now in possession of the defendants, then, under Article 47 of the Limitation Act, the Chetty would have to institute a civil action within three years of the date of the order in order to establish his right to the property and, failing that, the person, who was placed in possession of the land, would acquire a right to the property under section 28 of the Limitation Act. The Chetty, however, was not made a party to the suit. As it is contended by the learned Pleader who appeared in support of the judgment of Mr. Justice Phillips that the proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, did not relate to the land in dispute, and that there is every possibility that his client might be exposed to further litigation if the Chetty is inclined to sue him for rent, we think that Palaniappa Chetty should have been made a party to the suit so that the question might be finally decided and set at rest in the presence of all the parties concerned. We reverse both the judgments and direct the suit to be re-tried by making Palaniappa Chetty a defendant in the suit. The costs of all proceedings up to date will abide and follow the result.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47 – Custom —Succession—Decree obtained against widow, how far binding on reversioners—Representative of judgment-debtor—Jurisdiction.

On a bond executed by one H. S., a decree was obtained against his widow. On the re-marriage of the widow, the property of H. S. came into the possession of his reversioners. The decree-holder sought execution of his decree by attachment of the property of H. S. in the hands of his reversioners. One of the reversioners made an application stating that H. S. had not raised any loan from the decree-holder, that he had no necessity for doing so, that the decree obtained against the widow was collusive and fraudulent and not binding on the reversioners. On this application, the Court referred the decree-holder, to a regular suit to establish his right to proceed against the property of H. S. in the hands of his reversioners.

ALA SINGH v. WASAWA.

But, instead of instituting a suit, the decree-holder preferred an appeal to the Divisional Judge who entertained the appeal:

Held, that as the reversioners did not claim under H. S. or his widow and had succeeded to the property on the re-marriage of the widow by virtue of their own rights of collateral succession, they were not representatives of the judgment-debtor under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, and that as the said section was inapplicable, the Divisional Judge had no jurisdiction to entertain an appeal against the order of the first Court.

Second appeal from the order of the Divisional Judge, Sialkot Division, dated 26th January 1911, reversing that of the District Judge, Sialkot, dated 22nd February 1911, refusing the application.

Ala Singh, Appellant, in person.

Mr. Dalip Singh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts are sufficiently stated in the order of the District Judge, dated the 22nd February 1911, and in the referring order of the learned Chief Judge. On the re-marriage of the widow of Haveli Singh, his property came into the possession of his reversioners, and the decree-holders made an application on the 15th October 1910 for execution of the decree by attachment of the property of Haveli Singh in the hands of his reversioners whose names were given in the application. On the 17th October, notice was issued to the said reversioners to show cause why the application for execution should not be granted. No attachment was, however, placed on any portion of Haveli Singh's property, though it appears from the record that some of the reversioners of Haveli Singh settled privately with the decree-holders. On the 14th February 1911, Ala Singh, appellant, made an application to the executing Court stating that the decree of which execution was sought was a collusive and fraudulent one; that Haveli Singh had not raised any loan from the decree-holders; that he had no necessity of doing so, and that the decree was not binding upon him as a reversioner of Haveli Singh. Upon this, the District Judge rejected the application for execution and referred the decree-holders to a regular suit to establish their right to proceed against Haveli Singh's property in the hands of the reversioners other than those who had settled with them. It is clear that this order whether it was right or wrong, was not one passed under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, inasmuch as the reversioners of Haveli Singh, who were objecting to the execution of the decree against his property in their hands on the grounds mentioned above, were, in no sense of the term, "representatives" of the judgment-debtor, the widow of Haveli Singh, within the meaning of section 47 aforesaid. This is settled by the decision in Tallapragada Sundarappa v. Boorugapalli Sreeramulu(1). In that case, the learned Judges say at page 405:—"The case of the plaintiffs (the reversioners of the last male owner) being that the decree itself was one not binding on them as there was no debt due by the last male owner, the question thus raised with reference to the decree is not one which could have been tried in execution, and section 244 of the Civil Procedure Code has no application to the case." It also appears to us that the question of want of necessity for the loan, for which a bond was alleged to have been executed by Haveli Singh and in respect of which the decree-holders obtained a decree against his widow, is one which could not be decided in execution of the decree as between the decree-holders and the reversioners of Haveli Singh, who did not claim under Haveli Singh or his widow, and who, on the re-marriage of the widow, succeeded to his property by virtue of their own rights of collateral succession. Section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code being thus inapplicable to the case, the decree-holders could not prefer an appeal from the order of the District Judge to the Divisional Court, and the Divisional Judge had no jurisdiction to entertain the appeal. As we have said, no part of Haveli Singh's property was attached in the hands of the present appellants before the order of the District Judge was passed, and, therefore, Order XXI, rule 58, of the Civil Procedure Code does not apply to the case:

As the Divisional Judge heard the decree-holders' appeal without jurisdiction, we treat the reversioners' memorandum of appeal filed in this Court as a petition for revision under section 70 (1) (a) of the Punjab Courts Act, and, in the exercise of our revisional powers, we set aside the decree of the Divisional Judge leaving the decree-holders to seek such relief against the order of the District Judge as they may be advised.

Decree set aside.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 4—Rent, definition of—Suit for recovery of money equivalent of half the produce of fruit trees in a grove occupied by tenant—Revenue Court, jurisdiction of.

The definition of the word "rent" contained in section 4 of the Agra Tenancy Act is wide enough to make a suit for the recovery of the cash equivalent of one-half the produce of fruit trees, in a grove occupied by tenant, maintainable as a suit for arrears of rent.

Revision against an order of the District Judge of Ghazipur, dated the 3rd November 1911.

Mr. Ahmad Karim, for the Appellant.

Mr. Harendra Krishna, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case, the plaintiffs as proprietors of a certain village sued the defendant as tenant of a certain grove therein situated for the cash equivalent of one-half of the produce of the fruit-bearing trees in the said grove as being the rent due to them on account of the two years in suit. The suit was filed in the Court of an Assistant Collector of the second class. He framed three issues. The first of these raised the question whether the plaintiffs were entitled to claim the whole rent supposing it to be due, and it was decided in favour of the plaintiffs. The third issue related to the appraisement of the produce during the years in suit and was never decided at all. The second issue ran as follows: "Is the grove in suit in possession of the defendant as a rent free grant?". It is clear, therefore, that it was common ground between the parties in the first Court that the suit had been rightly instituted in the Court of an Assistant Collector and that the defendant held the grove in suit as a tenant. The question was whether he held it rent-free or whether he was liable to pay anything to the plaintiffs as rent therefor. In deciding this issue, the Assistant Collector expressed a doubt whether, according to the provisions of the village record-of-rights upon which the plaintiffs based their claim, the plaintiffs were entitled only to one half of the fallen timber of the grove or to one half of the produce of the fruit bearing trees as well as one half of the fallen timber. He did not, however, decide this point. He went on to say that in his opinion it was only necessary for him to decide whether or not the plaintiffs had actually been receiving one-half of the produce of the fruit bearing trees prior to the year in suit and finding that the plaintiffs had failed to prove this, he held that he had no jurisdiction to inquire further into the respective rights and liabilities of the parties under the village custom or contract recorded in the Wajib-ul-arz. He gave as his reason for this finding the ruling of this Court in Sanam Tewari v. Sakina Bibi (1). The plaintiffs took the case on appeal to the Court of the Collector. The Collector came to the conclusion that the plaintiffs were entitled to receive one-half of the produce of the fruit-bearing trees from year to year; but he proceeded to consider further what remedy the plaintiffs had in the event of failure on the part of the defendant to deliver one-half of the produce due to them in any given year. He held that on the terms of the contract or custom recorded in the Wajib-ul arz, the plaintiffs' only remedy would be a suit for ejectment against the defendant for breach of the conditions of the lease on which he held the grove. He also remarked that, possibly, a suit for damages on the ground that the plaintiffs had failed to obtain the enjoyment of fruits to which they were entitled would lie in the Civil Court. The matter was then taken to the Court of the District Judge in Second Appeal. The District Judge held that a question of jurisdiction had in fact been decided by the Collector within the meaning of section 180 of the Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901) and that an appeal lay to his Court. He then agreed with the Collector that the plaintiffs were entitled to receive half the produce of the fruit bearing trees in the grove in suit every year: and differing from the Collector he further held that there was no reason why the plaintiffs should not enforce this right by way of a suit for arrears of rent under the Tenancy Act. There was nothing left for him to decide except the question of appraisement of the cash value of the plaintiffs' share of the produce for the years in suit. It would have been easy for him to pass an order under the provisions of Order XLI, rule 25, calling for a finding on this point from the lower Appellate

(1) 3 A. 37.

Court and then to dispose of the suit accordingly. He preferred to pass an order under the provisions of Order XLI, rule 23 of the Code of Civil Procedure remanding the suit through the lower Appellate Court to the Court of first instance for disposal on the merits. The defendant has brought this order before this Court by a petition of revision. In this petition, he does not say that the learned District Judge had no jurisdiction to entertain the appeal presented to his Court, but practically this question was raised by the arguments before me. I am not bound to deal with the question at all as it is not taken in the petition for revision. I, therefore, merely remark that, in my opinion, both the Assistant Collector and the Collector had in effect held that there was a difficulty about jurisdiction which either prevented them from giving the plaintiffs relief to which they would otherwise have been entitled, or at any rate debarred them from considering the question whether the plaintiffs might not have been entitled to the relief claimed if they had brought their suit as one for damages in a Civil Court. I think, therefore, that the learned District Judge, in holding that he had jurisdiction to entertain the second appeal, was, at any rate, not so clearly wrong as to compel me to interfere with his order of my own motion upon a ground not taken in the petition before me. In the next place, it is contended that the District Judge was wrong in holding that the suit as brought would lie in a rent Court. This would be at most a wrong decision on question of law which the Court of Second Appeal had jurisdiction to decide. It is, moreover, a somewhat difficult question upon which it does not seem to me altogether easy to harmonize the decisions of this Court as they stood before Local Act II of 1901 was passed .On these grounds alone, I might decline to interfere in revision, I am further of opinion that the definition of the word "rent", contained in section 4 of the Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), is wide enough to make a suit like the present maintainable as a suit for arrears of rent. Finally, it is contended that the District Judge had no jurisdiction to remand the suit for trial to the Court of first instance. The provisions of Order XLI of the Code of Civil Procedure refer directly to appeals from original decrees only. They are also applicable as far as may be (vide Order XLII of the same Code) to appeals from appellate decrees It is, therefore, certainly within the jurisdiction of a Court of a Second Appeal to remand a suit back to the Court of first instance, if it is of opinion that both the Courts below have decided it on a preliminary point. Personally I consider the procedure adopted by the Court of Second Appeal in this case objectionable, and that the matter should have been dealt with under Order XLI, rule 25 of the Code of Civil Procedure. If the matter were before me as a Court of Appeal, I am not sure that I should not be inclined to hold that a sufficient cause for interference had been made out. It is another matter, however, to say that it affords a good ground for revision that the learned District Judge has not taken the view. I should have been disposed to take as to what constitutes a decision on a preliminary point. I am of opinion that no adequate case for interference in revision has been made out. I dismiss this application with costs.

Application dismissed.

NIHAL CHAND v. DAVID SASSOON & CO., KARACHI.

First appeal from the order of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Class, Ferozepore, dated 17th June 1910, dismissing plaintiff's claim.

Rai Bahadur Bakhshi Sohan Lal, and Mr. Nanak Chand, for the Appellant.

Sardar Kharak Singh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This judgment disposes of three Appeals Nos. 796, 797 and 1069. Nos. 796 and 797 are by Nihal Chand, plaintiff, and Musammat Rani, plaintiff, respectively, and No. 1069 is by the defendants. The following is plaintiff's pedigree table:—

GULAB RAI=Musammat RANI,

Saudagar Mal, Nanak Chand. Nihal Chand.

Fateh Chand.

The defendants got various decrees against Gulab Rai and one or more of his sons and in the execution proceedings attached certain houses. Nihal Chand and Musammat Rani filed separate suits for a declaration in regard to one fifth share each in these houses. The plaintiffs relied on an alleged family partition and an entry in the bahi under which Gulab Rai divided the property. The lower Court found that this entry needed registration and as it was not registered, it could not be received in evidence. It, therefore, held that the plaintiffs had not proved that they were entitled respectively to one-fifth share each in the houses. It also found that as Nihal Chand was a judgment-debtor in the decree under execution, he could not maintain a suit. It found, however, that Musammat Rani was entitled for her life-time to a right of residence inasmuch of the share of the attached property as was necessary for her accommodation. It, therefore, gave her a decree for right of residence, but otherwise it dismissed her suit. Nihal Chand's suit was dismissed in toto. Nihal Chand and Musammat Rani have appealed and defendants have also appealed in Musammat Rani's case from the order giving her a decree for residence in the houses. Musammat Rani has died since the decision of the case and, therefore, the decree in her favour has abated, and defendants' appeal is, therefore, given up and is hereby dismissed. Musammat Rani in her Appeal No. 797 is now represented by Fateh Chand, son of Saudagar Mal. The translation of the so-called deed of release which is entered in Gulab Rai's bahi is given on page 2 of the printed paper-book and a transliteration of the actual entry, or of the greater part of it, is given in the judgment of the lower Court at page 33.

For plaintiffs appellants, it is urged that this document does not require registration, because it does not of itself operate to create or declare any right, title or interest to or in immoveable property, but is merely a recital or memorandum of a previously completed family arrangement or partition of property.

The following rulings have been cited in support of this contention Badhawa Mal v. Hira (1); Partab Singh v. Karam Chand (2) and Gongod Gir v. Sham Gir (3).

In Badhawa Mal v. Hira (1), it was held that the entry in dispute could not be regarded as an instrument declaring any title to or in immoveable property within the meaning of section 17 of the Registration Act, the transaction being already complete, and the entry in question, being evidently merely intended as an acknowledgment of the correctness of the facts stated in the memo. and not being an acknowledgment of the receipt or payment of the consideration, did not require registration.

The case of Partab Singh v. Karam Chand (2) dealt with an entry relating to a mortgage. It was held by the Full Bench (1) that the words "I have now mortgaged" should be taken merely as a recital that a mortgage had already been made or agreed upon and that they could not be taken as meaning "I now mortgage by virtue of this deed;" (2) that the document did not itself create or assign an interest in immoveable property. The right created by the deed was merely a right to compel the executant to execute another document and the deed, therefore, fell under clause (5) section 17 of the Registration Act.

In Gongod Gir v. Sham Gir (3), was it held that entries in the third party's book consisting of details of a partition carried out independently by the parties themselves being only recitals of past facts, which had already been completed, could not be regarded as a deed of partition declaring any right in immoveable property within the meaning of section 17 of the Registration Act and were, therefore, admissible in evidence though unregistered.

The principle to be deduced from these rulings is that deeds, which are mere recitals or memoranda of dispositions of property which have previously been agreed upon or made and which do not themselves operate to effect any such disposition, need not be registered. The document in dispute in the present case has near the beginning the words "farag khati aj din kitti". The document then goes on to describe what shares are allotted to the different persons and at the end is signed by Gulab Rai, the owner of the property and by attesting witnesses. Prima facie, it appears to be a deed of partition of Gulab Rai's property effected by himself, and purports to create certain rights to or in immoveable property in favour of the persons named therein. This becomes still more clear from a consideration of the evidence of Maya Ram, Nand Lal and Viru Mal....The evidence of the first two is printed at pages 21 to 23 of the paper-book, that of Viru Mal by some mistake apparently has not been printed. The evidence of these persons, such as it is, is to the effect that Gulab Rai made a partition of his property and then and there drew up the document in dispute. There is no evidence at all that there was a previously completed partition and that the entry in the book was merely intended to serve as a memorandum of what had been arranged. In connection with the oral evidence, we note that though Gulab Rai was produced as a witness on behalf of the defendants, he was not put any questions in reference to the partition, and to the drawing up of this document though obviously his evidence would have been the best procurable on the point. We are, therefore, of opinion that the lower Court was right in holding that the document required registration and that not having been registered, it is inadmissible in evidence. In any case, the oral evidence in support of the alleged partition is very meagre and we do not think we should be justified in holding in a suit of such value that it is sufficient to prove the alleged partition. On these findings, the plaintiffs' suits were rightly dismissed. It is further quite correct that Nihal Chand is himself a party to the decree in execution of which the houses in dispute were attached. If he had any objection to the attachment, the matter was to be settled in the execution proceedings in accordance with section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code. It is further quite obvious that he had no locus standi to object to the attachment of his own property in execution of a decree passed against himself. His Counsel sees this quite clearly and does not press his appeal. Appeals Nos. 796 and 797 are accordingly dismissed with costs to defendants respondents.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 159, 160 (d), 161 (a)—Burden of proof—Existence or non-existence of protected interest—Incumbrance—Annulment.

It rests upon an auction-purchaser in the first instance to show that the interest which he wishes to annul, is an incumbrance. But when that is established, the onus shifts on to the incumbrancer to prove that his incumbrance is saved through being a "protected interest."

Somir Jama v. Mahabharat Bakta, 7 Ind. Cas. 919, relied upon.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge of Murshidabad, dated May 8th, 1909, affirming that of the Munsif of that place dated March 25th, 1908.

Babus Hemendra Nath Sen, Sachidananda Gupta for Haradhan Nag and Kunja Behari Sur, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The point of law raised by this second appeal is as to the burden of proving the existence or non-existence of a "protected interest" for the purposes of section 159 and the following sections of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885.

The plaintiff, who is the appellant before us, was the purchaser at a sale held in execution of a decree for rent of the tenure or holding of one Nistarini Debi, and having, in pursuance of the provisions of section 167 of the Tenancy Act, served a notice on the defendant-respondent, as being the sub-tenant of Nistarini and, therefore, an incumbrancer within the meaning of the Act, he sued the latter for the recovery of khas possession of the land concerned. The defence was that Nistarini Debi was a tenure-holder, that the respondent was an occupancy-tenant under her, and that consequently the incumbrance, which the appellant was seeking to annul, was, under clause (d) of the definition in section 160, a "protected interest" which could not be annulled. Both the Courts below held that the onus was on the appellant to prove that the respondent's interest was not a "protected interest," and that, as he had failed to discharge the onus, his suit must be dismissed.

We are unable to accept this view of the law as to the onus probandi in a case of this kind. Section 159 gives the auction-purchaser power to annul, in the prescribed manner, any "incumbrance" such as is defined by section 161, clause (a), and at the same time provides that he shall take subject to any "protected interest" within the meaning of section 160. Now, no doubt, it rests upon the auction-purchaser in the first instance to show that the interest which he wishes to annul, is an "incumbrance": but it seems to us that if, and when that is established, the onus shifts on to the incumbracer to prove that his incumbrance is saved through being a "protected interest." In other words, it was for the appellant to show at the outset that the respondent's sub-tenancy was a sub-tenancy created by the defaulting tenant, Nistarini Debi; but, as soon as this was established, it was for the respondent to prove that Nistarini Debi was a tenure-holder and that he had acquired a right of occupancy under her. This is, we think, in accordance with first principles. For the general rule is, that the burden of proving any particular fact rests on him who alleges, not on him who denies it: that is to say, the issue must be proved by the party who states the affirmative, and not by the party who states a negative. Moreover, the provision as to "protected interests" has the effect of introducing a restriction upon, or exception to, the rights of the auction-purchaser, and, as was explained in Rash Behari Basu v. Haramoni Debya (1), the person pleading a certain exception is bound to bring himself within it. And, finally, the existence of such a "protected interest" as a right of occupancy is a matter specially within the knowledge of the person claiming it, on whom, therefore, the onus is placed by section 106 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872. We observe, too, that our view accords with that taken by Mookerjee and Teunon, JJ., in Somir Jama v. Mahabharat Bakta (2) while it is not, as will presently appear, opposed to the decision of Brett and Chitty, JJ., in Normada Sundari Debi v. Tarip Mollah (3).

Returning to the facts before us, we find that there was really no onus of proof for the appellant to discharge. For the respondent had admitted in his written statement that he held, and had from the inception of his sub-tenancy held, under Nistarini Debi and her predecessors in-interest, and it was, therefore, of course, unnecessary for the appellant to adduce any evidence to show that the respondent's sub-tenancy was a sub-tenancy created by Nistarini Debi, that is to say, an "incumbrance" within the meaning of section 160, clause (a), of the Tenancy Act. And this distinguishes the case from that of Narmada Sundari Debi v. Tarip Mollah (3), in which it was not only not admitted that the defendant's tenancy was a sub-tenancy under the defaulting gantidar, but expressly alleged that the sub-tenancy had been created long before the ganti.

Our conclusion, then, is that the onus was wrongly placed upon the appellant by both the Courts below. But it is contended by the respondent that, even if this be so, there was evidence on both sides, and no question of onus arises. As to this contention, it must be conceded that, as soon as there is a conflict of evidence, the question of onus disappears. But conflict implies and predicates not only the existence of evidence on both sides, but also consideration of both by the Court; and in this case, it seems to us patent that if any evidence was produced by the respondent, the lower Court of appeal, at all events, ignored it altogether. The judgment speaks for itself and cannot be misunderstood. It deals exclusively with the appellant's evidence, oral and documentary; it decides nothing but that that evidence was insufficient to prove that Nistarini was a raiyat and not a tenure-holder; and nothing could be clearer than that the learned District Judge would have dismissed the appeal and the suit even if the respondent had not adduced a scrap of evidence of any kind. In these circumstances, we think that we must require him to re-consider the case anew in the light of our ruling as to the initial mistake made both by him and by the Court of first instance. Should a case be made out for the admission of further evidence, it will be open to him to receive it or direct that it be taken by the first Court.

In the result, the appeal is allowed, the appellate judgment discharged and the case remanded for re-disposal in accordance with the foregoing directions. Costs will abide the result.

Small Cause Suit—Lease of immoveable property—Suit by lessor to recover rent from lessee—Provincial Small Cause Court—Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), Sch. II, Arts. 8, 11.

B. was the mortgagee in possession of a certain Bazar and entitled as such to receive rents from the shop-keepers. He let out this right to the defendant for Rs. 24 a month:

Held, that the lease was a lease of immoveable property and a suit by the lessor to recover the said sum of Rs. 24 a month from the lessee did not lie in a Small Cause Court.

Revision against an order of the Small Cause Court Judge of Agra, dated the 19th of December 1911.

Mr. S. K. Dar, for the Appellant.

Mr. Mangal Proshad Bhargava, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs in this case say that they are mortgagees in possession of one half of a certain bazar and entitled as such to receive rents from the shop-keepers occupying shops and houses in one half of the same. They say that they leased out their right to receive these rents to the defendant, Babu Lal and they have sued him for arrears of lease money before the Judge of the Court of Small Causes at Agra. The question is, whether that Court had jurisdiction to entertain this suit. No written contract of lease was produced between the plaintiffs and Babu Lal, and I can only look at the evidence which has been believed by the Court below in order to ascertain the terms of that contract. What the plaintiff Bhawani Das says is,—"I orally leased the rent of the said one half of the bazar to Babu Lal, defendant, at a rent of Rs. 24 per mensem about three or three-and-half years ago, and the water rate was to be paid by Babu Lal and he was also responsible for repairing the shops of the said one half of the bazar". In my opinion, a suit to enforce that contract is a suit for the recovery of rent other than house rent within the meaning of Article 8 of Schedule II of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), or, failing this, it is a suit for enforcement of some other rights to or interest in immoveable property within Article 11 of the same Schedule. As a matter of fact, I have no doubt that it falls under the former of these two Articles. The plaintiffs, at any rate, are not prepared to contend that their contract was anything but a lease of immoveable property within the meaning of section 105 of the Transfer of Property Act. The question, therefore, is,—What was the immoveable property leased?. It was certainly not the houses themselves, and the plaintiff Bhawani Das does not say that it was. It was a right to collect the rents of those shops or houses from the persons actually occupying them and such right is itself "immoveable property" by virtue of the definition in Article 25, section 3 of the General Clauses Act (I of 1897) which definition applies to the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) by reason of section 4 of the General Clauses Act, in so far as it is not inconsistent with the special provisions of section 3 of the Transfer of Property Act itself. The plaintiffs are not suing to recover the rent of shops received on their behalf by Babu Lal as their agent. They are suing to recover from Babu Lal the rent of immoveable property due from him under a special contract of lease; and the sum of Rs. 24 a month which

GANESH v. KUNDAN.

Babu Lal is alleged to have covenanted to pay to the plaintiffs under this contract of lease, is not itself "house rent". In my opinion, it was a a distinct abuse of the Small Cause Courts Act that this suit was filed in a Court exercising jurisdiction under that Act. The real dispute is as to the plaintiffs' claim to be the mortgagees in possession of a portion of that bazar and they seem to have endeavoured to bring this matter to trial before a Court of Small Causes in order not to fight the question out by a regular suit. They could have done so no doubt if they were content simply to claim the rents of particular shops; but they seem to have thought it an even more effective way of creating evidence in their own behalf to bring a suit based upon an alleged lease in favour of the very man who was actually collecting the rents of the shops as agent for the rival claimants. In my opinion, the suit as brought is not a claim for house rent; it was entertained and decreed by a Court which had no jurisdiction to do so. I accept this application in revision, set aside the decree of the Court below and direct the Judge of the Court of Small Causes to return the plaint to the plaintiffs with directions to present the same in a Court having jurisdiction to entertain it. The defendant Babu Lal will get his costs in this Court.

Civil Courts are not precluded, by reason of section 167, read with section 95 of the Agra Tenancy Act, 1901, from determining a dispute between rival claimants to an occupancy-tenancy.

Bhup v. Ram Lal, 8 A. L. J. 1009; 11 Ind. Cas. 268; 33 A. 795, followed.

A wrong decision on a question of res judicata would ordinarily not be a good ground for interference in revision under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1903.

Revision against an order of the District Judge of Shahjahanpur, dated 14th December 1911.

Mr. Bital Parshad Ghose, for the Applicant.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The present suit was one for damages upon the allegation that the defendant had cut and carried off the crops upon certain land after the said crops had been grown by the plaintiffs. Incidently, a question arose as to whether the plaintiffs or the defendant were in law the rightful occupancy-tenants of the land in suit. Now, seeing that the suit as brought was one undoubtedly within the cognizance of the Civil Courts, it would seem to be difficult to hold in any case that those Courts were precluded from hearing and determining an issue incidental to the right decision of the suit. In any case, after the decision of a Bench of this Court in Bhup v. Ram Lal (1), it cannot be said that the Civil Courts are precluded, by reason of section 167 read with section 95 of the Agra Tenancy Act (Local Act II of 1901), from determining a dispute between rival claimants to an occupancy-tenancy. Once it is admitted that the Courts below had jurisdiction both to try this suit and to determine the issue whether the plaintiffs or the defendant were the rightful occupancy-tenant of this land, this application must necessarily fail. It is true that the matter had actually been brought before the Revenue Courts in a suit in which the present defendant Kundan appeared as a plaintiff and the plaintiffs in the present suit as defendants jointly with the proprietor to whom the rent of the occupancy-holding in question was due. It cannot, however, be made a ground for interference in revision that the District Judge in this case refused to accept the finding of the Assistant Collector or that of the Commissioner in the suit under section 95 of the Tenancy Act as having the effect of res judicata in the present suit. In the first place, a wrong decision on a question of res judicata would not ordinarily be a good ground for interference in revision under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Apart from this, the decision of the District Judge on this point appears correct, inasmuch as the Assistant Collector and the Commissioner would not have been competent Courts to try the suit then before him, so that section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure would not apply. I find, therefore, no adequate ground for interference in this case. This application is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. IX, r. 9—Rejection of application—Appeal—Revision.

While an application for restoration of a suit under Order IX, rule 9, Civil Procedure Code, 1908, was pending, the territory within which the parties resided and the cause of action arose was transferred from British territory to a Native State and the Court, holding that it had no longer any jurisdiction in the matter, ordered the application for restoration to be returned to the applicant for presentation to the proper Court:—

Held, that the order of the Court was in substance and in effect an order refusing to grant the application for restoration and was not open to revision but was appealable.

Revision against an order of the District Judge of Mirzapur, dated the 29th of May 1911.

Mr. Damodar Das, for the Applicant.

Mr. Baldeo Ram Dave, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The circumstances out of which this application has arisen are briefly as follows:—A suit was instituted within British territory and the jurisdiction of the British Courts over the subject-matter of the suit and the parties thereto was territorial. It was originally in the Court of the Munsif, but was transferred by the District Judge to his Court. He dismissed the suit, as the plaintiff failed to appear on the date fixed for hearing. On the 31st March 1911, the plaintiff applied under Order IX, rule 9 for restoration of the suit and a re-hearing. Notice was issued and a date fixed. In the meantime on the 1st of April 1911, the territory, within which the parties resided and the cause of action arose, was transferred from the British territory and became part and parcel of a Native State and, therefore, was outside the jurisdiction of the British Court in Mirzapur. When the application came on for hearing, an objection was taken that the British Court had no jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the suit and the parties thereto and, therefore, the application should be dismissed. The District Judge agreed with this contention and held that he had no longer any jurisdiction in the matter and finally ordered the application for restoration to be returned to the applicant for presentation to the proper Court.

The plaintiffs came here in revision pleading that the Court below had jurisdiction to entertain the application and has, therefore, failed to exercise a jurisdiction which vested in it.

A preliminary objection is taken that the order passed by the lower Court is in substance and in effect an order rejecting an application under Order IX, rule 9, and is, therefore, appealable, vide Order XLIII, rule 1, clause (c) and, therefore, this application for revision should be rejected.

For the other side, it is argued that this is not an order rejecting an application for re-hearing but it is a refusal by the Court to hear that application. To my mind this hardly seems to be correct. The application was filed when the Court had jurisdiction. It was entertained and a date was fixed and, whatever may be the language in which the Court passed its order that order in substance and in effect is an order refusing to grant an application under Order IX, rule 9 on the ground that the Court had no jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the suit or the parties thereto. The order may be a bad one, but it is in substance an order under Order IX, rule 9, and the plaintiff could have appealed. Therefore, in my opinion, this application for revision must be rejected. It is also very doubtful, indeed, whether the applicant has any really good ground to grumble at the order of the Court below. Even on the merits, he does not seem to have a good case. The application is rejected with costs.

Contract Act (IX of 1882), s. 24—Court passing decree on a void contract—Jurisdiction—Revision.

A Court, passing a decree for money upon a plaint which on the face of it sets up as its cause of action the breach of a contract which is void in law, acts illegally in the exercise of its jurisdiction.

Ross Alston v. Pitambar Das, 25 A. 509, referred to.

Revision against an order of the District Judge of Ghazipur, dated 31st August 1911.

Mr. Haribans Sahai, for the Applicant.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit to enforce a contract embodied in a deed dated October 26th, 1902. The defendant, who is the applicant now before this Court, acknowledged previous receipt of a certain sum and covenanted to re-pay the same with interest at a certain rate in four instalments, the last of which fell due on the 6th of June 1906. He also purported to hypothecate what is described as his tenant's holding in a certain village, and covenanted that, in the event of his failure to fulfil the stipulations as to re-payment, the plaintiff-mortgagee might either sue to recover his money or take possession of the holding in question. In the plaint, the land hypothecated is simply described as a tenant's holding (arazi-kashtkari) and in his prayer for relief the plaintiff says that since he finds that it is not possible for him to recover his money from the property mortgaged, he desires to sue upon the deed in question as a simple money bond. In reply, the main defence on the merits was a plea of want of consideration. There was also a question raised as to limitation with which I am not now concerned and there was also a plea to the effect that the property mortgaged is an occupancy-holding, hence the deed is "invalid". The Court of first instance, the learned Munsif of Ballia, framed three issues, the second of which was on the question of limitation, while the third was framed in general terms as to the liability of the defendant. The first issue ran as follows—"Whether the deed was executed for consideration and is valid?". The finding upon this issue was that the deed was executed without consideration, and on his last issue the learned Munsif found that "the defendant is not liable, the deed is without consideration and consequently invalid". It seems clear to me that, whatever the learned Munsif may have meant by the frame of his first issue, the question regarding the legal effect of section 24 of the Indian Contract Act, IX of 1872, as invalidating the whole transaction, in the event of a finding that any one of the considerations in the deed in suit was unlawful, was not seriously considered by the learned Munsif. From the circumstance that no evidence was tendered to prove the allegation of fact as to the holding in question being an occupancy-holding, I gather that the point was not seriously pressed by the defendant, and that the parties went to trial upon an assumption that the plaintiff had a right to sever the various agreements specified in the bond in suit and to ask the Court to treat it as a simple money bond. It must be remembered that this suit comes from the Ballia District where there are tenant's holdings (such as fixed-rate tenancies), the transfer of which is not forbidden by law. When the plaintiff appealed to the District Judge, it is clear that before that Court the question now taken in revision (as to the entire contract being void because a part of the consideration was unlawful) was never raised at all. The plaintiff being the appellant in that Court naturally did not raise it, but it was incumbent on the defendant to bring that plea to the notice of the Appellate Court and to ask for a finding thereon in the event of the opinion of the Court being against him on other points. The learned District Judge discussed only the question of payment of consideration. He called attention to an important piece of evidence which had been overlooked altogether by the learned Munsif, viz., the admission by the first defendant before the Registering Officer at the time of registration that he had received the entire consideration for the deed in suit, then, remarking that "the defendant cannot now be allowed to go behind the admission and acknowledgment, he held that the deed was executed for good consideration. The plaintiff's claim having thus been decreed as against the defendant Rabi Rai, the latter comes before this Court in revision upon two grounds. He contends that the learned District Judge was wrong in treating the acknowledgment made before the Registering Officer as conclusive evidence against the defendant. As a matter of fact, there was very little other evidence on the record. The defendant had called two witnesses, who deposed that there was no payment of consideration at the time of execution, but this might have been presumed from the wording of the deed itself. The Court of first instance had found against the plaintiff because the two witnesses called by the latter contradicted one another, and one of them deposed to what was certainly not true, viz., the payment of the entire consideration at the time of execution. Now, I cannot feel at all certain whether the learned District Judge intended to lay down a proposition of law to the effect that the defendant's acknowledgment before the Registering Officer raised an unrebuttable presumption of law against him. I do not think a Judge of any experience would lay down such a proposition and it seems to me more reasonable to suppose that the lower Appellate Court merely meant to find that the acknowledgment seemed to it decisive in view of the facts of this particular case. If, however, I am mistaken in this view, the utmost that can be said is that the learned District Judge committed an error of law, and I should not regard an error such as is alleged on this point as affording a good ground for interference in revision.

The question as to the effect of the provisions of section 24 of the Indian Contract Act is much more important. I quite appreciate the force of the contention, put forward on behalf of the applicant, that a Court passing a decree for money upon a plaint which on the face of it sets up as its cause of action the breach of a contract which is void in law brings itself within the scope of the ruling of this Court in Ross Alston v. Pitambar Dass (1) and should be held on the strength of that ruling to have acted illegally in the exercise of its jurisdiction. It seems to me, however, that the present suit must be distinguished by reason of the question of pleadings which I have already explained. The plaint as it stands says no more than this, that there was a covenant to re-pay by instalments together with the hypothecation of a tenant's holding, that the mortgagee feels it impossible to recover his money by enforcement of this hypothecation and he consequently asks for a decree simply on the basis of the covenant to re-pay. There is no necessary presumption in the Ballia District that a tenant's holding is untransferable, or that the mortgage of a tenant's holding is necessarily an illegal contract. The defendant, if he desired to obtain the benefit of his plea on this point, was bound to see that it was laid before the Courts with all necessary materials upon which a clear finding of fact could be arrived at and so made the basis of the decision of the Court on the question of law. In the present case, the illegal or irregular exercise of jurisdiction imputed to the lower Appellate Court is simply that it has neglected to dispose of an issue which was evidently never raised before it at all. If I were satisfied that it could be said with certainty that this neglect on the part of the learned District Judge has led to his giving the plaintiff a decree upon a plaint which was on the face of it based upon a contract void in law, I might feel some difficulty as to the proper order to pass. As the case stands, I do not think that this can be fairly said, and I will not interfere. The application is dismissed with costs.

Application dismissed.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL NO. 232 OF 1910.

May 15, 1912.

Present:—Mr. Justice Chamier and Mr. Justice Piggott.

ABDUR RAFEY KHAN—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

RANNI BEGAM AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Muhammadan Law—Wakf—Distribution of food to poor on the occasion of urs and fateha—Valid charitable object.

ABDUR RAFEY KHAN v. BANNI BEGAM.

The distribution of food to the poor and the like on the occasion of urs and fateha is a valid religious charitable object for a Muhammadan wakf.

First appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Shahjahanpur, dated the 27th of May 1910.

The Hon'ble Dr. Sunder Lal (with him Mr. Muhamad Ishaq), for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Mr. Moti Lal Nehru (with him Mr. Ghulam Mujtaba), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiff, Maulvi Muhammad Abdur Rafey Khan, is the first cousin of one Maulvi Abdul Wajid Khan, deceased, and sues to recover possession of the three-fourths share in the estate left by the deceased which would fall to him under Muhammadan Law. The defendants are Musammat Banni Begam, widow of the deceased, and Yusuf Ali Khan, the designated mutawalli of a wakf said to have been created by Abdul Wajid Khan in his lifetime The suit has been decreed in respect of a few items of property with which we are not now concerned as they were not included in the alleged wakf; but the learned Subordinate Judge has dismissed the bulk of the plaintiff's claim upon a finding that the property concerned formed the subject of a valid wakf duly created by Maulvi Abdul Wajid Khan in his life-time. This finding is contested by the plaintiff before us in appeal. His contention is that Abdul Wajid Khan never did create, and never intended to create, any valid wakf, or at any rate that he never intended to create any wakf which should take effect in his own life-time. That is to say, we are asked to hold that, even if Abdul Wajid Khan did intend to make a real and substantial disposal of his property for religious and charitable purposes after his death, and even if he left behind him documents which would have the effect of carrying out that intention, his entire proceedings are vitiated by the fact that he was trying to evade the rule of Muhammadan Law restraining him from making, to the prejudice of his legal heirs, any testamentary disposition of his property affecting more than a one-third share of the same.

The evidence in the case is somewhat voluminous, and has been dealt with by the learned Subordinate Judge in an elaborate judgment, from the main conclusions of which we see no reason to dissent. The essential points of the case, however, lie within a narrow compass. It is quite clear that the notion of disposing of his property by way of wakf had long been present to the mind of Abdul Wajid Khan. A copy of a decree, dated July 7th, 1887, by which certain litigation between this gentleman and his own father was settled in accordance with the terms of a compromise between the parties, has been put in evidence (pages 50 and 51 R.) and shows a definite intention to preserve the corpus of the family property intact, and to use it for the foundation of a wakf after Abdul Wajid Khan's death. It is proved that Abdul Wajid Khan was famous for his charitable disposition and the religious bias of his mind is shown by the fact that he three times made the pilgrimage to the Holy Places of Arabia. To such a man the idea of founding endowments for religious and charitable purposes would follow naturally upon an intention so to dispose of it after his death. We find that he actually executed four deeds of endowment. He began by taking a significant precaution. On August 31st, 1892, he obtained from his wife (the first defendant in the present suit) a formal relinquishment of her heavy claim for unpaid dower-debt, the lady in this document expressly states that she relinquishes her claim on the understanding that her husband intends to dedicate the propety by way of wakf. On the following day, namely, September 1st, 1892, Abdul Wajid Khan executed the first of his wakf-namas. Much of the argument in this case, and much of the judgment of the Court below, was occupied with the discussion of the question whether this document, had it stood alone, would or would not on the face of it have constituted a valid wakf. There can be no doubt that this deed purports to effect a present alienation of the corpus of the property concerned, with a dedication of the same to charitable or religious purposes. In so far it differs essentially from any testamentary disposition of property, the alienation being irrevocable and taking effect at once. On the other hand, Abdul Wajid Khan in this document appoints himself "mutawalli" and leaves himself in absolute and unfettered control of the income of the property, bound by nothing except by his own injunctions that the money is to be spent for charitable and religious objects. Moreover, he secures the succession to this office of sole trustee for his wife, in the event of her surviving him, and he makes similar provision for his children and their descendants, in the doubtful event (which in fact never occurred) of any children being born to him after the execution of the deed. It is sufficient to say that the validity of this document, if it stood alone, would involve questions of law open to considerable discussion, but questions as to which we find it unnecessary to pronounce any opinion in view of the facts of the case as they stand.

On October 2nd, 1893, Abdul Wajid Khan supplemented his first deed of endowment by another, in which he simply added something to the value of the endowment. On April 12th, 1899, he availed himself of the powers of revision and control which he had reserved to himself by his first deed, in order specifically to devote a portion of his landed property to the endowment of a certain school at Lucknow. It has finally been admitted by the plaintiff that this deed at any rate he is not in a position to contest; it fulfils every possible condition of a valid wakf. It may be noted in passing that it involves property of the value of Rs. 10,000. Finally, on October 13th, 1906, Abdul Wajid Khan executed a fourth deed of endowment, and it is on this deed that the case really turns. It was evidently drawn up under careful legal advice. The preamble contains an implied reference to the ruling of this Court in Muhammad Aziz-ud-din Ahmad Khan v. The Legal Remembrancer to Government, North Western Provinces and Oudh (1), and to certain more recent decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council, as having thrown some doubt on the validity of the two wakf-namas of September 1st, 1892, and October 2nd, 1893. No doubt the writer means that some question might be raised as to whether these documents had in fact been followed by any real and bona fide transfer of the property concerned to the nominated mutawalli (i.e., to Abdul Wajid Khan himself as mutwalli), also that difficulties might arise regarding the possible reservation of a series of life-interests under the terms of the first deed. Therefore, while protesting that he personally regards these earlier deeds as valid under the Hanafi law by which he is bound, and that he has been "acting upon the terms of the deeds up to this time", he proceeds to execute this fresh wakfnama of October 13th, 1906, avowedly with the object of removing all difficulties and making a dedication of his property which shall be beyond question and dispute. Now, it was admitted in argument before us that this appeal must fail if we are prepared to maintain this last deed. The only questions for determination are whether this deed on the face of it constitutes a good and valid wakf under Muhammadan Law, whether it was executed by Abdul Wajid Khan in good faith with intent that it should operate as such, and whether the disposition of property made therein was actually carried into effect. It is not even necessary for us to consider what would be the legal consequences if we answered either the second or the third of these questions in the negative, because it seems clear to us on the evidence that there must be a finding against the the appellant on each point.

We may consider first the objections taken to the provisions of the deed as it stands. It is contended that the provision made in several paragraphs of the deed for "urs" or "fateha" ceremonies renders the endowment invalid, at least to the extent of such provision, because expenditure for such purposes is not recognized by some Muhammadan lawyers as of a "religious" character. The tendency of later decisions of this Court is against the appellant on this point, as may be seen from the cases in Phul Chand v. Akbar Yar Khan (2); Biba Jan v. Kalb Hussain (3); Fakhr-ud-Din Shah v. Kifayat-ul-lah (4); Mazhar Hussin Khan v. Abdul Hadi Khan (5). Moreover, the deed before us seems to have been carefully drafted in order to meet the doubts suggested by these rulings. It provides in every case that the expenditure shall be on charitable objects, the distribution of food to the poor and the like, on the occasion of the ceremonies in question. The difficulty, which some strict Muhammadans have felt regarding the validity of prayers for the repose of the souls of the departed as a suitable "religious" object for a trust or endowment, scarcely seems to arise at all. The distribution of food to the poor is a "charitable" object, and it is difficult to see how it can become less so because the founder of the endowment chooses to associate it with certain particular dates and with the anniversaries of the deaths of departed saints, worthies or relatives of his own. It seems impossible, therefore, to hold that we have not in this trust-deed a substantial dedication of property to religious and charitable purposes. The total annual income of the property dealt with is about Rs. 9,000 and after this objection regarding the "urs" or "fatehæ" ceremonies has been overruled, there remain only two items to which exception can be taken. These are items Nos. 8 and 12. The first of these provides that Rs. 3,000 shall be sent every year, through a certain firm of bankers at Delhi, to Mecca and Medina for expenditure on various charitable objects. On the face of it, the provision is perfectly good, the suggestion on behalf of the appellant is that it is purely illusory, as Abdul Wajid Khan intended shortly to proceed to Mecca himself and meant the money for his own use. Nothing is proved in support of this suggestion beyond the fact that Abdul Wajid Khan did proceed to Mecca shortly afterwards, and in fact died there. We see no good or sufficient reason for holding that this clause of the trust-deed was not intended to operate according to its apparent purport. By the twelfth clause, a further sum of Rs. 3,000 yearly is directed to be paid over to Abdul Wajid Khan's wife, to be spent in charity at her discretion; the suggestion is that the real object was to provide for the lady's own needs for her life-time. It seems sufficient to say that a wakf of property yielding an income of Rs. 9,000 a year would certainly not have been invalidated even if the trust had been saddled, frankly and openly, with the provision of a life annuity of Rs. 3,000 in favour of the wife of the wakif.

The deed as it stands is, therefore, a good and valid wakf. We can see no reason whatever, on a review of the evidence as a whole, for holding that Abdul Wajid Khan did not intend it to operate as such. The evidence upon the strength of which it was contended that the trust was never carried into effect seems to us wholly insufficient to support any such contention. Abdul Wajid Khan duly caused mutation of names to be effected in the Revenue Records in favour of Yusuf Ali Khan, the mutawalli appointed under the deed. He himself left for Arabia about a year after the execution of the trust-deed having handed over the whole property to the mutawalli, and he never returned. It is not necessary for us to discuss the details of the evidence; it has been thoroughly considered by the learned Subordinate Judge. The granting of a few leases in the name of Abdul Wajid Khan in his capacity of Lambardar after the 13th October 1903 is accounted for by the fact that he was not formally removed from this office until some months later, the suits instituted in Abdul Wajid Khan's name seems to have been for arrears of rent which had accrued due before the appointment of the new mutawalli. The account books kept by the latter were actually tendered before the lower Court, and it would be preposterous to draw any decisive inference against the defendants from the fact that when the books were before the Court, neither side thought it worth while to get them formally proved.

We find, therefore, against the appellant on every point and dismiss this appeal with costs including fees on the higher scale.

Appeal dismissed.

JUDGMENT.

CARNDUFF, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff for the recovery of possession from defendant No. 1 of a piece of their chadrasan, or ancestral homestead, which had been allotted to the former on partition.

Both the Courts below found that as the plaintiff had transferred the whole of his interest in a number of parcels of land (including this chadrasan) by exchange with defendants Nos. 2 and 3, he had no cause of action. The suit was in consequence dismissed, and, as between the parties as arrayed in it, this was bound to be the result. But the plaintiff had set up the plea that his agreement for exchange with defendants Nos. 2 and 3 had been contingent on the defendant No. 1 giving up possession of the chadrasan, and that, owing to the defendant No. 1's failure to do so, it became and remained inoperative. This plea was rejected by the Court of first instance. In the lower Appellate Court, the plaintiff persisted in it, but prayed, in the alternative, that, if he again failed to substantiate it, he might be allowed even at that stage to transfer defendants Nos. 2 and 3 from the category of defendants to that of plaintiffs so as to overcome the obstacle to a decree in the suit. This prayer was refused.

When the second appeal first came before Mr. Justice Coxe sitting alone in this Court, the learned Judge pointed out that, if the plaintiff had made a bona fide mistake in the matter, he might, under Order I rule 10, have been allowed to do as he proposed. The first Court had found that the exchange had been practically carried into effect, and that the plaintiff had sued, instead of the defendants Nos. 2 and 3, for the benefit of the latter in order to weaken the position of defendant No. 1. It was thought, the learned Munsif believed, that against his co-sharer, the plaintiff, the defendant No. 1 could have no defence; but that against outsiders like defendants Nos. 2 and 3, he might raise the defence, that it was inequitable to thrust strangers into the chadrasan. Whether this idea was well founded or not, I think it is unnecessary to consider in this appeal; but the fact remains that the first Court found that there was collusion on the part of the plaintiff and defendant No. 1 and that the other defendants were deliberately not joined as plaintiffs. The lower Appellate Court, however, had not dealt with this aspect of the case, which has a direct bearing on the application of rule 10, Order I, at all. Mr. Justice Coxe, therefore, directed a remand for a finding on the question whether possession of the other lands covered by the deed of exchange between the plaintiff and the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 was actually exchanged, as held by the first Court. If it had been exchanged, he indicated the opinion that the plea of the plaintiff that his title still subsisted could not be regarded as bona fide. If not, that is to say, if the exchange had not been actually made, he thought that the application under Order I, rule 10, was one which might be granted.

The appeal has now come back to us after the remand with the report of the learned District Judge that the question sent down to him must be answered in the affirmative. If, then, Mr. Justice Coxe's expression of opinion be adhered to now, the appeal is concluded by this finding of fact and must be dismissed.

The learned Vakil for the appellant, however, contends that we are not bound by any expression of opinion recorded by Mr. Justice Coxe in his order of remand. The learned Vakil who appears for the respondent argues that we are. As to this, I am, in the first place, quite clear that Mr. Justice Coxe did not intend by his order of remand to express any final opinion. His remarks seem to me to come, at most, to this that, as then advised, he inclined to the view which I have already indicated. I am equally clear that even if it were otherwise, Mr. Justice Coxe would not himself now be bound by what he laid down in his order of the 17th May, 1911. When a case is remanded in this way, that is to say, under section 556 of the Code of 1882, which corresponds with Order XLI, rule 25, of the present Code, it has been settled, ever since the decision of Boncharee Ghose v. Ainoodden Biswas (1), and it is obvious from the language of the provision, that it remains pending and undisposed of on the Appellate Court's file. It surely goes without saying that a Judge may yield to conviction and change his mind at any time before he has pronounced judgment, and it seems to me that the contrary view has only to be stated to be exposed as untenable. The view which I take is, I think, supported by Lachman Prasad v. Jamna Prasad (2) and Mubarak Husain v. Behari (3) and it is also, I think, in consonance with the unreported decision of the Court in the case of Kailash Chandra Guha v. Heyatunnessa Bibi (4), which was decided by the late Chief Justice Maclean and Mr. Justice Mitra on the 31st March, 1905.

The learned Vakil who appears for the respondent concedes, indeed, that a Judge can ex proprio motu act in this way; but he contends that he cannot be asked to do so, except in review, by either side. It seems to me, however, that there is no force in this contention, and that if a Judge can proceed ex proprio motu, he can be moved in the same direction. I hold, then, that Mr. Justice Coxe would not have been bound by what he had already said, and, a fortiori, this Bench is not bound thereby. We should, of course, be slow to go back upon the view expressed by another Judge in an earlier stage; and, as was observed by Sir John Edge, C. J., in the earlier of the cases to which I have already referred, we are certainly not bound to reconsider any question already dealt with, while I have no hesitation in saying for myself that I would, as a rule, refuse to do so. But, as I have already said, I do not think that Mr. Justice Coxe intended to express any final opinion: I would, therefore, go into the whole question of bona fides on the findings of fact now supplemented and completed by the judgment of the District Judge after the remand.

The short point, therefore, which we have to decide, is whether the plaintiff can be said to have been acting bona fide within the meaning of rule 10 of Order I when he brought the suit himself without joining the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 as plaintiffs. The position here may be thus described. The plaintiff set up a case which, on the findings before us, is false. He denied that his agreement with the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 had ever been carried into effect; whereas it has been found that it was carried into effect as completely as could be. He obtained all the lands which had to be given to him in exchange and he gave possession of all the lands which he had to give in exchange to defendants Nos. 2 and 3 except this small piece of chadrasm. Notwithstanding, he tried to prove in the first Court that the document was wholly inoperative and even in the appellate stage, he adhered to that case and asked that, if he should again fail to substantiate it, he might be allowed the benefit of Order I, rule 10. The plaintiff had undoubtedly parted with the whole of his interest and whatever his object, it seems to me to be impossible, in these circumstances, to hold that he made nothing but a bona fide mistake. It is suggested to us that, if we cannot give relief under the first part of rule 10, Order I, we ought to do so by using the discretionary power conferred on us by the second part. But we clearly cannot help the appellant in this way when the finding as to good faith is against him.

Finally, it is faintly suggested that we should allow the plaintiff even now to withdraw the suit with liberty to bring a fresh action joining the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 as plaintiffs. In my opinion, it is too late to consider that suggestion which is opposed by the respondent.

The result is that this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

N. CHATTERJEA, J.—I agree.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Shahjahanpur, dated the 20th of March 1911.

Mr. Muhammad Ishaq Khan (with him Mr. Ibn Ahmad), for the Appellant.

Mr. Benode Behari, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—One Chaudhri Ghulam Hamid died, somewhere in 1877, possessed of considerable landed property. On July 16th, 1879, his heirs executed what is in substance a deed of partition dividing amongst themselves the property of the deceased, with the exception of a certain share in village Nagar, which they admitted to have been dedicated by Chaudhri Ghulam Hamid, in his life-time, to a certain religious purpose. Under the terms of the deed of partition, Musammat Riazunnissa, one of the widows of the deceased, obtained possession of certain property in village Sirsa Dabri. This is described in the specification appended to the deed as consisting of a certain share in the zemindari of the village, together with a certain area of muafi land. On August 8th, 1905, this lady, purporting to act as proprietor, co-sharer and muafidar of village Sirsa Dabri, executed in favour of Gulzari Lal and Shib Charan Lal a twenty years' lease of some three biswas and odd of her zemindari share together with 32 bighas and 4 biswas of the muafi land. The lessees were to pay the Government revenue and other expenses and were to pay the lessor a net rent of Rs. 60 per annum. On May 25th, 1909, Musammat Riazunnissa aforesaid executed in favour of Chaudhri Ghulam Hazrat a deed which is described as a tamliknama and sipurdnama by which she purported to transfer to him whatever rights she herself possessed in the zemindari share or in the muafi lands in village Sirsa Dabri. This Chaudhri Ghulam Hazrat is a son of Chaudhri Ghulam Hamid by another wife, and on the face of it, Musammat Riazunnissa's deed of May 25, 1909, purports to be a transfer in his favour without consideration. It is significant, however, that on May 25, 1909, Ghulam Hazrat, in his turn, executed a deed by which he covenanted to pay Musammat Riazunnissa the sum of Rs. 60 per annum for her life as a consideration for the transfer made in his favour. The present suit was filed on July 1, 1910, Chaudhri Ghulam Hazrat being the plaintiff and the defendants being Gulzari Lal and Shib Charan Lal, the lessees and Musammat Riazunnissa the lessor under the deed of August 8th, 1905. The relief sought is possession of the 32 bighas, 4 biswas of muafi land, together with a declaration that the lease of August 8th, 1905 is ineffectual in so far as it relates to this particular land. This relief was sought substantially upon two grounds. In the first place, the plaintiff pleaded that the execution by Musammat Riaz-un-nissa of the lease of August 8th, 1905, was obtained by undue influence, misrepresentation and fraud. The particular fraud alleged was that the defendants, Gulzari Lal and Shib Charan Lal, had obtained the inclusion of the 32 bighas, 4 biswas of muafi land in the lease in question, without explaining the fact that they were doing so, to Musammat Riaz-un-nisa, the lessor. It was pleaded, in this connection, that the value of the entire property leased was such as to make the annual rental of Rs. 60 altogether inadequate. In the second place, it was contended that the 32 bsghas, 4 biswas of muafi land appertained to a wakf created by the heirs of Ghulam Hamid under the terms of the deed of July, 16, 1879 already referred to. The plaintiff contended that Musammat Riaz-un-nisssa was in possession of this particular area merely as mutwalli of the aforesaid wakf and that in this capacity, she had no right to grant a lease of the wakf property for any period exceeding three years. The plaintiff's case further was that he had succeeded Riaz-un-nissa as mutawalli by virtue of the deed of May 25th, 1909, in his favour, and that he was, therefore, entitled to sue for possession in his capacity as mutwalli and for cancellation of the lease granted by his predecessor-in-office so far as that lease included property appertaining to the wakf.

In so far as the suit was based upon allegations of undue influence, misrepresentation or fraud, it is concluded against the plaintiff by the findings of fact arrived at by the lower Appellate Court. In the memorandum of appeal to this Court, the only paragraph referring to this part of the case is paragraph 6, in which it is suggested that the Court below might have arrivedat a different conclusion on the point, if it had properly considered the principles of law ordinarily applied by the Courts in India to transactions in which one of the parties is a pardanashin lady. With regard to this point, I see no reason for holding that the learned District Judge has failed adequately to consider the position of Musammat Riaz-un-nissa. The plaintiff's case regarding these pleas of undue influence, misrepresentation and fraud was of the flimsiest character, and I do not see that any evidence was led which could be regarded as having the effect of shifting the burden of proof on to the defendants. If the plaintiff himself had seriously believed in his own allegations of fraud, he would have sued for the cancellation of the entire contract of lease, and not merely of the portion of it, relating to the muafi land. Moreover, there is against the plaintiff a clear finding of limitation as affecting this part of the case. In so far as relief is sought on the ground of fraud, the suit would be governed by Article 95 of the first Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act. The prescribed period of limitation would begin to run from the time when the fraud became known to the party wronged. There is no allegation regarding Musmmat Riaz-un-nissa's having come to know after execution of the lease of any fact which convinced her that she had been wronged, and as regards Ghulam Hazrat himself, the learned District Judge entirely refused to accept his assertion that he only came to know of the lease after the transfer in his favour, but was of opinion that he must have known of it all along.

The other part of the plaintiff's case depends on the question whether the 32 bighas, 5 biswas of muafi land in question were made the subject of a valid wakf, by the heirs of Chaudhri Ghulam Hamid, as alleged in paragraph 1 of the plaint. It must be conceded to the appellant that no form of words is prescribed by Muhammadan Law as necessary to the creation of a valid wakf, and there may be an actual dedication of specific property to religious or charitable purposes, without any such words as waqf, or "mutwalli" being employed. The deed of July 16th, 1879, contains a recital by Musammat Riaz-un-nissa, that out of all the property assigned to her under this deed of partition, she will undertake to spend the income of the muafi land in Sirsa Dabri "on the tomb and the fateha and urs ceremonies of the deceased Chaudhri, and in paying the salary of the hafiz who will read the Quran at the tomb of the deceased Chaudhri." There is also a special provision that her daughter Musammat Irshad Batul shall after her death become the owner of the property in the same way, and shall defray the aforesaid expenses. Then, finally, comes a provision that in certain events, the other heirs of Chaudhri Ghulam Hamid shall have powers to take possession of the property allotted to Musammat Riaz-un-nissa and to defray the expenses afore-mentioned out of the income of the same.

It should be noted that Musammat Riaz-un-nissa also binds herself not to use the income of these muafi lands in any other way or to transfer the same by sale, mortgage or hypothecation.

In my opinion, this is a document of doubtful interpretation. It certainly does not contain any words which definitely and expressly alienate the corpus of the property concerned and dedicate the same to the Almighty. It is at least open to the argument that it is possible to regard it as nothing more than an expression by Musammat Riaz-un-nissa of her pious intention to devote the income of a portion of the property assigned to her on partition to certain specific purposes of a more or less pious or religious nature, and a desire on her part that the same use of this income may continue to be made after his death. It seems to me that a somewhat similar question was before a Bench of this Court in the case of Fakhruddin Shah v. Kifayatullah (1). There the question was as to an alleged oral dedication and the Court had to consider whether the evidence as to what was actually done in consequence of the alleged oral dedication was of such a nature as to justify the inference that there had in fact been a valid waqf. I think this case is very similar, except that I have to deal with a document of doubtful interpretation, instead of with an alleged oral dedication. I take it that it must have been because he took substantially some such view of the case as this that my learned predecessor thought it advisable not to decide this appeal without calling for a finding from the Court below upon the following issue:—Has the income of the property been appropriated for the objects set out in the document of 1897 or is the alleged wakf illusory? Upon this issue the lower Appellate Court has returned a clear finding that it has not been proved that the income of the property was appropriated for objects set out in the document of 1879. That finding is binding upon me in second appeal, and it is certainly borne out by a curious passage in Musammat Riaz-un-nissa's deed of May 25th, 1909, in which she states that owing to the fact that some of the property assigned to her under the partition deed of 1879, was in the possession of a mortgagee, the actual expenditure in connection with the tomb of Chaudhri Ghulam Hamid, and the fateha and urs ceremonies and readings of the Quran connected therewith, was being defrayed by Chaudri Ghulam Hazrat out of his own pocket. The wording of this entire deed of May 25th, 1909, deserves to be carefully considered. It is, to say the least of it, ambiguous. It seems to me more consistent with the notion that Musammat Riaz-un-nissa was transferring certain property to her step-son, subject to the condition that he would apply a portion of the income thereof in a particular way than with any such notion as that of her resigning the post of mutwalli of a wakf and appointing Chaudhri Ghulam Hazrat as her successor. If the facts were as contended for by the appellant, I should have had expected the two transactions, viz., the transfer of proprietary title as regards the property which was admittedly not wakf, and the appointment of a new mutwalli for the wakf property to have been effected by two different deeds, or at the very least not to have been confounded together in the way in which they have been in the present document. On these grounds, I accept the finding of the Court below, that it is not proved that the 32 bighas, 4 biswas of muafi land in suit have been made the subject of a valid wakf.

There is yet another contention on behalf of the appellant which deserves notice. By the fifth paragraph of the memorandum of appeal, it is suggested that the partition deed of July 16th, 1879, was at least a family arrangement and that Musammat Riaz-un-nissa was bound by the covenant against alienation in respect of these muafi lands, even if that be regarded as nothing more than a covenant entered into by her towards the other heirs of Chaudhri Ghulam Hamid. This contention is not without force and might require to be considered in the event of a suit brought after Musammat Riaz-un-nissa's death. But I can see nothing in the covenant against alienation, which would prevent Musammat Riaz-un-nissa, from effecting an alienation which should be valid for the term of her own life. Moreover, once it has been found that the land in suit has not been made the subject of a valid wakf, the plaintiff loses his locus standi. He is at most a transferee of Musammat Riaz-un-nissa, and the objection that she had no right of transfer sounds oddly in his mouth. Moreover as a transferee of Musammat Riaz-un-nissa, he could not assail the transaction of lease upon any ground which would not have been open to the lady herself. This appeal, therefore, fails and I accordingly dismiss it with costs, including fees on the higher scale.

Appeal dismissed.

The words "become useless and inoperative"in section 50, Explanation (4) of the Probate and Administration Act imply the discovery of something which, if known at the date of the grant, would have been a ground for refusing it, e. g., the discovery of a later Will or codicil or the subsequent discovery that the Will was forged or that the alleged testator was still living.

Therefore, mal-administration is not a just cause under section 50, Explaination 4, of the Probate and Administration Act, for revoking a Probate.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge of Dacca, dated September 18th, 1909.

Babu Kritant Kumar Bose and Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak, for the Appellant.

Babu Harish Chandra Roy, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against an order passed by the District Judge of Dacca on the 18th September 1909, refusing an application made by the present appellant for the removal of Sarat Sundari Dasi from the administration of the estate of Chaitan Krisna Poddar. It appears that the appellant and Sarat Sundari Dasi are related to each other as adopted son and adoptive mother, and that Letters of Administration to the estate of Chaitan Krisna Poddar were granted to them after the death of the widow of Chaitan Krisna in whose favour, as the first beneficiary under the Will, Letters of Administration had previously been granted. There was some difference of opinion between the parties at first and, on the 31st August 1903, a compromise was arrived at and joint administration was granted to both. On the 26th May 1909, the petitioner made an application to the Court which contained several allegations against Sarat Sundari Dasi. Amongst them one was of that she had taken hat chittas from various debtors to the estate during the time when she was the sole administratrix and that those hat chittas had been taken in her name only. It was asked that the name of the present appellant as joint administrator should be added in those hat chittas. The learned Judge took action on that complaint with the result that the addition asked for was made in most of the hat chittas; but, in the order recorded on the 3rd September 1909, it was stated that, in certain hat chittas, the addition prayed for had not been made and, therefore, they would remain in Court on the record until the change could be made. There was also in the same petition a complaint against Sarat Sundari Dasi that she had not paid the allowance due to the appellant regularly and that she had not paid the Municipal tax for his house which she was bound to pay. Sarat Sundari put in, on the 16th July 1909, a petition in which, with reference to this later complaint, she made certain statements and alleged that if there had been any failure on her part to pay the allowance as it fell due and the Municipal tax, it was not the result of any fault on her part but was owing to the action taken on the part of the appellant and his father-in-law. That matter does not appear to have been dealt with in the proceedings before the Judge on that application; but, on the 17th September 1909, a fresh application was put in by the present appellant asking that Sarat Sundari should be removed from the administration and that the grant of Letters of Administration to her should be revoked. It is not quite clear whether the learned Judge, in passing the order which he did dismissing that application, did so in view of the action which had been previously taken on the previous application, but the question which we have to consider in this case is whether we should interfere with the order passed by the District Judge on the ground that that order was not in accordance with law or not justified by the circumstances of the case. The learned Pleader who appears in support of the appeal admits that the application was made under the provisions of section 50 of the Probate and Administration Act, and he contends that "the cause" for which it was asked that the grant of letters should be revoked or annulled in respect of Sarat Sundari was "a just cause" within the meaning of that section. He refers to the 4th Explanation attached to that section and argues that in this case, "the grant has become useless and inoperative through circumstances." On being pressed to explain what the circumstances are, the learned Pleader is unable to advance any other circumstances than the one that the lady and her adopted son have quarrelled and he says that in consequence of this quarrel, it has become impossible to carry on the administration. It has also been suggested, but not very strongly pressed, before us that the allegations that she had not administered the estate property would be a sufficient ground for annulling the grant of Letters of Administration. In our opinion, the grounds, which have been advanced in support of the contention that the decision of the learned Judge should be set aside on the grounds that he was not right in holding that just cause for annulling the letters of Administration had not been made out, cannot be sustained. It has been held by this Court, in the case of Annoda Prosad Chatterjee v. Kalikrishna Chatterjee (1), that a mal-administration is not, under section 50, explanation (4) of the Probate and Administration Act, a just cause for revoking the probate. It has also been held by the Bombay High Court, in the case of Bal Gangadhar Tilak v. Sakwarbai alias Tai Maharaj (2), that the words "become useless and inoperative" in section 50, Explanation (4), of the Probate and Administration Act, imply the discovery of something which, if known at the date of the grant, would have been a ground for refusing it, e.g., the discovery of a later Will or codicil, or the subsequent discovery that the Will was forged, or that the alleged testator was still living. We see no reason to differ from the view which has been taken by the learned Judges in these two cases and, following that view, we are of opinion that the only ground which has really been pressed in support of this appeal, namely, that the grant has become useless and inoperative because of the disagreement between the administrators is not a just cause for annulling the Letters. In these circumstances, we are of opinion that we cannot interfere with the decision of the lower Court and that the appeal must be dismissed with costs. At the same time, we desire to say that, if the appellant considers that he has any sufficient ground for pressing the complaints which were made in his application of the 28th May 1909, supposing that those complaints have not up to date received the consideration of the District Judge, it will certainly be open to him to apply to the lower Court in order that an inquiry may be made into the substance of the complaints and such action taken as to that Court may seem fit.

We assess the hearing fee in this Court at two gold mohurs.

Appeal dismissed.

CIVIL RULE No. 1540 OF 1912.
May 3, 1912.
Present:—Mr. Justice Brett and Mr. Justice Sharfuddin.

PORT CANNING AND LAND IMPROVEMENT CO., LTD.—DEFENDANT—PETITIONER
ROSON ALI MOLLAH—PLAINTIFF—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Valuation of suit—Suit for lease, annual rent being Rs. 71—Suit to be valued at Rs. 71—Jurisdiction of Munsif—Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7 cl. x, sub-cl. (c)—Suits Valuation Act (VII of 1887), s. 8—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115—Decision on facts—Failure of Court below to grasp real point—Judicial decision—Interference by High Court—Prejudice to neither party—Question of prejudice, if arises.

In a suit in a Sub-Judge's Court, the plaintiff prayed that his mourasi mokarari right in certain lands be declared and a decree passed against the defendants for directing them to grant him a lease, the yearly rent payable on which was Rs. 71. The plaintiff valued the suit for the purposes of jurisdiction at Rs. 1,100 but gave no materials or data to support the valuation:

Held, that, under the provisions of section 7, clause (x), sub-cl. (c), of the Court Fees Act and section 8 of the Suits Valuation Act, the suit should have been valued at Rs. 71 for purposes of Court-fee and jurisdiction, and it ought to be filed in the Munsif's Court.

Where the decision of a Subordinate Court is arrived at, though wrongly, either on the facts or on a proper judicial consideration of the matters placed before it, the High Court will not interfere under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code.

But where the Court below failed to grasp the point which really had to be determined, namely, whether, under the provisions of the Court Fees Act and the Suits Valuation Act, the valuation of the suit given by the plaintiff was correct or not, and the Court simply accepted the valuation given by the plaintiff without attempting to ascertain the materials on which the valuation was based, in fact without arriving at a judicial decision at all:

Held, that the High Court should interfere, if satisfied that the decision of the Court below was wrong.

Amir Hussan v. Sheo Baksh Singh, 11 C. 6; 11 I. A. 237 and Mathura Nath v. Umesh Chandra, 1 C. W. N. 626, referred to.

Hari Sankar v. Kali Kumar, 32 C. 734; 9 C. W. N. 690, distinguished.

In such a case, the High Court will interfere even if neither party is prejudiced, because the law requires that suits of certain values should be tried in certain Courts and the question of prejudice does not arise.

Rule against the judgment of the Additional District Judge of the 24-Pergannahs, dated January 26th, 1912, passed on an appeal from the judgment of the Sub-Judge of Alipur, dated September 16, 1911.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghose, Babus Debendra Nath Ghosh and Jogesh Chandra Bose, for the Petitioners.

Babus Baranashibashi Mukherji and Hem Chandra Mukherji, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule was obtained on the opposite party to show cause why the judgment and order of the Additional District Judge of 24-Pergannahs complained against should not be set aside as not in accordance with the provisions of the law as laid down in the Suits Valuation Act and the Court Fees Act. It appears that the opposite party instituted a suit in the 3rd Subordinate Judge's Court at Alipur in which he prayed that his maurasi mokarari right in certain lands be declared and a decree passed against the present petitioners for directing them to grant him a lease. The yearly rent payable on the lease was Rs. 71 but the plaintiff, opposite party in this Rule, valued the suit for the purposes of jurisdiction at Rs. 1,100. The Subordinate Judge, when the suit came before him, held that the valuation was incorrect. He held that, under the provisions of section 7 clause (x) sub-clause (c) of the Court Fees Act, the proper valuation in a suit between a landlord and tenant for delivery by the landlord of a lease was to be determined according to the amount of the rent of the land payable for the first year of the term in respect of which the lease was claimed; and that, as the suit was, in fact, a suit for a lease and as the rent for the land in respect of which the lease was claimed was Rs. 71, the suit should have been valued at Rs. 71 only, and that under section 8 of Suits Valuation Act that would be the valuation for purposes of jurisdiction. He, therefore, directed that the plaint be returned to the plaintiff to be filed in the Court of the Munsif. Instead of complying with the directions of the Subordinate Judge, the plaintiff, the opposite party in the present proceedings, appealed to the District Judge. The District Judge set aside the judgment and order of the Subordinate Judge and, holding that the valuation of Rs. 1,100 was correct, directed that the suit should be filed in the Subordinate Judge's Court. The petitioners then came to this Court and obtained the present Rule.

There can be no doubt, under the provisions of the law as laid down in the Court Fees Act, section 7, clause (x), sub-clause (c), and section 8 of the Suits Valuation Act, that the view taken by the Subordinate Judge was correct and that the suit ought to have been valued for the purposes of jurisdiction as well as for the determination of the Court-fee stamp at Rs. 71. Neither in the plaint nor before the Subordinate Judge, nor apparently before the District Judge, does any attempt appear to have been made by the opposite party, the plaintiff, to explain on what basis he arrived at the conclusion that the proper valuation of the suit was Rs. 1,100. The learned Pleader who has appeared to oppose this Rule has not attempted before us to dispute the correctness of the decision of the Subordinate Judge with reference to the valuation of the suit nor has he attempted to assist us in understanding on what materials the plaintiff arrived at the valuation of the suit at Rs. 1,100 but he has confined his arguments mainly to two points, first, that this Court is unable to interfere, having regard to the previous decisions of the Court and secondly that even if this Court has power to interfere, it should not interfere.

In support of the first contention, the learned Pleader for the opposite party has invited our attention to the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Amir Hassan v. Sheo Baksh Singh (1) and the decision of this Court in the case of Mathura Nath v. Umesh Chandra (2) and, on the basis of these decisions, he has contended that, even if the decision of the District Judge in this case was wrong, this Court shall not interfere under the provisions of section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure. We do not think that the decisions in those two cases can be taken to apply to the facts of the present case at all. In these two cases, their Lordships of the

(1) 11 C. 6; 11 I. A. 237.
(2) 1 C. W. N. 626.

Privy Council and the learned Judges of this Court following them, held that where, under the law the lower Court had power to arrive at a decision but arrived at a wrong decision, it could not be said that that Court excercised its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity so as to justify an interference from the Appellate Court under section 92 of Act XII of 1879, corresponding with section 115, Civil Procedure Code. In both those cases, the decisions were arrived at either on the facts or on a proper judicial consideration of the matters placed before the lower Courts. In the present case, however, the learned Judge admits in his judgment that he is unable to appreciate the reasons which led the Subordinate Judge to hold that he had no power to take cognisance of the suit, and to return the plaint to the plaintiff. Obviously, the learned Judge in this case failed to grasp the point which really had to be determined, namely, whether, under the provisions of the Court Fees Act and the Suits Valuation Act, the valuation of the suit for the purposes of jurisdiction ought not to be Rs. 71 as found by the Subordinate Judge. The learned Judge has simply accepted the valuation given by the plaintiff without attempting to ascertain the materials on which that valuation is based; in fact without arriving at a judicial decision at all. In our opinion, this is a very different case from those contemplated in the two decisions referred to above and is certainly one in which this Court should interfere, if satisfied that the decision of the lower Appellate Court is wrong.

It has next been contended, on the basis of the decision of this Court in the case of Hari Sankar v. Kali Kumar (3), that the Subordinate Judge was bound to accept the valuation given by the plaintiff and that he ought to have decided that the valuation of the suit was Rs. 1,100. The case relied on is one in which the plaintiff gave certain data for arriving at the value at which the suit was valued and this Court held that, when those data or materials were given, there was no reason why this Court should interfere and, on the basis of other data or materials, should arrive at a different conclusion. That is, however very different from the present case in which the plaintiff has given no materials or data to support the valuation put forward for the purposes of jurisdiction. In our opinion, therefore the two points, which have been taken in support of the view that this Court has not the power under the law to interfere with the decision of the lower Appellate Court cannot be sustained.

The learned Pleader has then contended that, even if this Court has the power to interfere, it should not exercise that power, first, because neither party would be materially prejudiced if the order of the lower Court were allowed to stand and, secondly, because, though the plaintiff has not stated the materials on which the value was arrived at, still there are grounds for holding that that valuation was not excessive. So far as the first point is concerned, we do not think that in this case we should decline to interfere because neither party would be prejudiced. As a matter of fact, the law requires that suits of certain values should be tried in certain Courts and the question of prejudice does not, in our opinion, arise. As regards the second point, it appears to us that the contention advanced on behalf of the plaintiff is not sound. The learned Pleader admits that his client's case is that he had taken an agreement from the present petitioners under which he was to clear and bring under cultivation a certain piece of land and then, after a certain number of years and when the land had been brought under cultivation, he was to obtain a maurasi mokarari lease of the land at a certain rental. The learned Pleader contends that the effect of this agreement was to create, from the time when the agreement was entered into, a maurasi mokarari title in the land and that, therefore, the valuation which the plaintiff gave of the suit was not excessive. We do not think that it is possible to accept this view. The agreement was one of the ordinary agreements for the purpose of clearing jungle lands and the lease, either permanent or temporary, which was to be granted to the lessee after the land had been cleared, was one which would commence to take affect from the time when the land was brought under cultivation. The suit was brought by the plaintiff in order to obtain that lease from the landlords and we think, in these circumstances and under the provisions of the law, that the proper valuation of the suit both for the purposes of Court-fees and for the purposes of jurisdiction was that laid down in section 7 clause (x), sub-clause (c), of the Court Fees Act.

The result, therefore, is that the Rule is made absolute. We set aside the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court and direct that the plaint be returned to the plaintiff to be filed by him in the Court having jurisdiction to try the suit. The petitioners are entitled to their costs in this Rule which we assess at three gold mohurs.

Rule made absolute.

Execution—Attachment—Execution application dismissed on objection—Review of the dismissal order—Attachment, whether subsists pending the review—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 57.

Certain property was attached in execution of a decree. The judgment-debtor objected and the application for execution was dismissed. The decree-holder then applied for review. During the pendency of the application for review the judgment-debtor sold the attached property tc a third person. Subsequently, the application for review was granted and the order dismissing the application for execution set aside:

Held, that Order XXI, rule 57 of the Code of Civil Procedure did not apply, and that the attachment subsisted during the pendency of the application for review.

Execution first appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Meerut, dated the 20th of November 1911.

Mr. Nihal Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. E. O'Conor (with him Mr. Ghulam Mujtaba), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by a judgment-debtor from an order passed in execution proceedings.

The person seeking to execute the decree is the assignee of a simple money-decree which was transferred to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Meerut. The assignee of the decree attached two lots of property, (1) property which was burdened with a mortgage in favour of her assignor, (2) property which was not so mortgaged. Both sets of property were attached. The judgment-debtor objected that the mortgaged property could not be sold in execution without a suit being brought on the mortgage.

The first Court disallowed the objection, an appeal was preferred by the judgment-debtor to this Court, a Bench of which on 2nd June 1909 upheld the objection and passed a decree dismissing the application for execution in toto. In this order there was clearly an error as some of the property attached was not mortgaged property.

Accordingly, on 10th August 1909, the decree-holder applied for review of the judgment of 2nd June 1909. The application was granted and this Court on 13th June 1910 passed a modified order dismissing the application for execution only in respect to the mortgaged property and remitting the record to the lower Court with orders to continue with the execution of the decree according to law in regard to the rest of the property. In the meantime, the lower Court, on receipt of the decree of 2nd June 1909, had, on 18th August 1909, sent the record into the record room.

While the application for review was pending, i e., between August 10th, 1909, and June 13th, 1910, the judgment-debtor sold the non-mortgaged property to a third party.

After the decision of 13th June 1910, the decree-holder applied to the lower Court on the basis of this Court's order of that date to go on with the execution proceedings and to sell the attached (non-mortgaged) property. The judgment-debtor (not his transferee) objected, pleading that under Order XXI, rule 57, the previous attachment had ceased to exist and that a fresh attachment was necessary and the property could not be sold as he had already sold it to another person.

The lower Court rejected the objection and hence this appeal by the judgment-debtor.

Stress is laid on Order XXI, rule 57. The rule clearly does not apply. It relates to the case of a default by the decree-holder which prevents the Court from continuing the execution proceedings and results in a dismissal of the application for execution by reason of that default. In such a case the rule lays down that the attachment ceases to exist directly the order of dismissal is passed. The rule allows the Court on the occurrence of such default to either dismiss the application or adjourn the proceedings and adds that if the application be dismissed, the attachment ceases at once.

In the present case there was no default. Nor after such a dismissal would the revival of the execution proceedings cause a revival of the attachment, at least so as to prejudice the rights of strangers who have in the meantime acquired a title to the property [vide Patringa Koer v. Madhabanand Ram (1)]. This latter case does not help the appellant who is himself the judgment-debtor, nor is the case reported in Sasirama Kumari v. Meherban Khan (2) of any assistance for in that case there was a clear specific order releasing the property from attachment.

Prior to the Code of Civil Procedure now in force, there was often considerable doubt whether an attachment came to an end on the passing of an order dismissing an application for execution by reason of the decree-holder's default. [Vide Govinda Chandra v. Dwarka Nath (3)]. This has now been set at rest by Order XXI, rule 67. But in the present case, there was no such order of dismissal for default. The first order of dismissal passed by this Court on appeal on 2nd June 1909 was set aside on review and the order finally passed on the appeal only disallowed the application for execution in so far as it related to the mortgaged property, and upholding the application in regard to the property now in question and ordering the lower Court to go on with the execution of the decree in respect thereto.

In regard to this property, there has, therefore, been no dismissal of the application for execution. The lower Court's order of 18th August 1909 consigning the record to the record room does not and cannot help the appellant. He made the transfer while the application for review was pending. We would point out that his transferee has not come into Court.

We hold that, in the circumstances of this case, the attachment of the property in question at no time came to an end and we, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs which in this Court include fees on the higher scale.

Appeal dismissed.

Execution—Interlocutory order—Appeal—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47.

An order of the Court disallowing an objection of a judgment-debtor that a fresh attachment was necessary, is an interlocutry order from which no appeal lies.

Execution first appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge of Moradabad, dated the 4th of November 1911.

Mr. Muhammad Ishaq, for the Appellant.

Mr. Abdul Raoof (with him Mr. B. E. O'Conor), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case property was attached on the 17th of July, 26th of July, 27th of July, 28th of July and 12th of August 1909. The decree-holder along with his application filed an affidavit dated the 15th of May 1909 giving full particulars as required by Order XXI, rule 66. After all these proceedings, the judgment-debtor objected to the execution of the decree. His objection was disallowed and his appeal to the High Court was also dismissed. When the record went back to the Court below in September 1910, notice was issued to the judgment-debtor under Order XXI, rule 66 and the decree-holder was directed to file an affidavit under the same rule. But as no affidavit was filed by him, the Court on the 11th of November 1910 struck off the case for default. The order runs as follows:—"The decree-holder notwithstanding two adjournments has failed to prosecute the proceedings. The case, therefore, cannot be adjourned any more. The proceedings are struck off". The Court, however, subsequently discovered that that order was a wrong order and that in fact there was no default of prosecution on the part of the decree-holder. It, therefore, held that the former attachment subsisted and that no fresh attachment was necessary and it decided to go on with the execution proceedings. [The judgment-debtor objected that a fresh attachment was necessary but his objection was disallowed. From that order disallowing the objection this appeal is preferred. A preliminary objection to the hearing of the appeal is taken by the learned Counsel for the other side. The substance of his contention is that this order is an interlocutory order and does not come within the purview of section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The words of section 47 are, no doubt, very wide and if taken in their literal sense will cover every order of an interlocutory nature that may be passed in execution proceedings. But that does not seem to have been the intention of the Legislature. In our opinion, the view taken by Banerji, J., in Jogodishury Debea v. Kailash Chundra Lahiry (1), is a sound one. On page 739, he remarked as follows:—"It is not every order made in execution of a decree that comes under section 244. If that were so, every interlocutory order in an execution proceeding, such as an order granting or refusing process for the examination of witnesses would be appealable and far greater latitude would be given of appealing against orders in such proceedings than is allowed as against orders made in suits before decree—a thing which could hardly have been intended. [See Sree Nath Roy v. Radha Nath Mookerjee (2) and Behary Lal Pundit v. Kader Nath Mullick (3).] An order in execution proceedings can come under section 244 only when it determines some question relating to the rights and liabilites of parties with reference to the relief granted by the decree, not when as in this case, it determines merely an incidental question as to whether the proceedings are to be conducted in a certain way. I may add that the language of section 244, which enacts that certain 'questions shall be determined by an order of the Court executing the decree and not by separate suit', clearly indicates that the questions contemplated by the section must be of a nature such that it is possible to suppose that but for the section they could have formed the subject of determination by a separate suit. But a question of an incidental character can never come under that description and an order determining such a question cannot, therefore, be a decree as defined in section 2". We agree with this view which applies very aptly to the circumstances of the case now before us. The result is that we hold that no appeal lies from the order of the Court below and we dismiss the appeal with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Res judicata—Former application of insolvency dismissed for failure to produce evidence—Whether second application for declaration of insolvency is barred.

Where an application to be declared an insolvent is dismissed for failure to produce evidence, a second application for such declaration is not barred as res judicata.

First appeal from an order of the District Judge of Farrukhabad, dated 27th October 1911.

Mr. Gulzari Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Satya Chandra Mookerji, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case Salig Ram applied to be declared an insolvent. His application was dismissed because he failed to produce evidence. He applied again and that application was dismissed, the Court holding that the principle of res judicata barred the application. We find ourselves unable to agree with the Court below that the principle of res judicata applies to this case. The question whether the applicant was or was not isolvent was never tried and the mere fact that in consequence of his failure to adduce evidence his former application was dismissed, is no ground for holding that the present application is barred by the principle of res judicata. We, therefore, set aside the order of the Court below, and send the case back to it for trial on the merits. Costs will abide the result.

Appeal allowed.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 106—Ejectment suit—Notice to quit—Denial of landlord's title—Purchase by mortgagee in Court sale—Attornment and payment of rent by lessee to lessor's assignee, whether amounts to denial of the title of the purchaser in Court sale.

Payment of rent by a lessee to the lessor's assignee, who took the property on usufructuary mortgage from the lessor, and attornment to him, do not amount to the denial of the title of a purchaser of the property at Court sale held after the date of the said assignment, so as to dispense with the necessity of giving notice to quit prior to an action in ejectment by the said purchaser to the lessee.

Second appeals against the decrees of the Subordinate Judge of Palghat, in A. S. Nos. 304 and 313 of 1906, presented against the decrees of the District Munsif of Palghat, in O. S. Nos. 400 and 401 of 1904.

Mr. A. Nilakanta Aiyar, for the Appellants.

Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—It was first argued that the 1st defendant alone is entitled to raise the plea that there was no notice to quit and as he did not appear in appeal, the Appellate Judge was wrong in dismissing the suit on that ground. But we find that the question was raised by the 1st defendant and formed the subject of an issue and though there was no decision on this point by the Court of first instance, it was necessary for the Appellate Court on appeal by the plaintiff to decide that question.

It is next argued that the first defendant denied the plaintiff's title and, therefore, was not entitled to notice. The 1st defendant was the 2nd defendant's tenant. Both the plaintiff and the 3rd defendant were simple mortgagees under the 2nd defendant and while a suit by the plaintiff to enforce his mortgage was pending, the 2nd defendant granted a usufructuary mortgage to the 3rd defendant to whom the 1st defendant attorned. The plaintiff became a purchaser in execution of his mortgage-decree. It is not contended that the attornment or payment of rent before his purchase was a denial of his landlord's title because the plaintiff was admittedly not then the landlord. Nor can the subsequent payment of rent under the lease to the 3rd defendant, admittedly valid at the time it was granted, be treated as such denial. The 1st defendant never denied his character as lessee nor did he set up the title of any person against his lessor or any person who may have acquired any title under his lessor. The only question was who was the representative of the lessor? We think, therefore, this contention also must be disallowed.

The next question is whether the plaintiff is not entitled to recover arrears of rent. If the plaintiff proves his title. we do not see why a decree for rent should not be given to him in this suit. The lower Appellate Court has not decided the question whether he is so entitled. We must, therefore, ask the lower Appellate Court to return findings on issues Nos. 4 to 8 on the evidence on record.

The findings should be submitted in six weeks, and seven days will be allowed for filing objections.

After the return of the findings of the lower Appellate Court, the Court delivered the following JUDGMENT.—We accept the findings of the lower Appellate Court on the issues and dismiss the second appeals with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 115, 151, O. XXI, r. 58—Claim application, if can be proceeded with after execution sale—Inherent power, doctrine of—Revisional powers of High Court—Subordinate Court acting in excess of jurisdiction and in violation of express provisions of Code.

It is not competent to an execution Court to proceed with a claim application under rule 58 of Order XXI of the Civil Procedure Code after the execution sale has actually taken place.

The doctrine of inherent power has no application to a case of this description. That doctrine is applicable when the Court finds it necessary, for the ends of justice or to prevent an abuse of its process, to make an order for which no express provision has been made by the Legislature.

Panchanan v. Dwarka Nath, 3 C. L. J. 29 and Hukum Chand v. Kamalanand, 3 C. L. J. 67; 33 C. 927, relied upon.

Where a Subordinate Court has acted clearly in excess of its jurisdiction and in violation of an express provision of the Code, the High Court will not hesitate to interfere.

Babu Jnanendra Nath Sarkar, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The question of law raised in this Rule is whether it is competent to an execution Court to proceed with a claim application under rule 58 of Order XXI of the Code of 1908 after the execution sale has actually taken place.

The petitioner, in execution of a decree, dated the 4th April 1910, against one Kali Dasi Debi, attached certain properties. On the 23rd February 1911, the present opposite party preferred a claim but the claim was not adjudicated upon till the 21st August 1911. Meanwhile the property had been sold on the 25th April 1911 and purchased by the decree-holder. On behalf of the decree-holder auction-purchaser, it had been contended that after the sale had taken place, the Court was no longer competent to proceed with the application under rule 58 and to make on the basis thereof an order under rule 60. In our opinion, this contention is manifestly well founded and must prevail.

Rule 60 of Order XXI provides that where, upon the investigation contemplated in rules 58 and 59, the Court is satisfied that the claim ought to be allowed, it shall make an order releasing the property wholly, or to such an extent as it thinks fit, from attachment. It is thus plain that an order under rule 60 must be made before the sale has taken place. This is also made clear by sub-rule (2) of rule 58 which provides for the adjournment of a sale pending the investigation of the claim preferred under sub-rule (1). But it has been argued by the learned Vakil for the opposite party that the Court below had, under section 151 of the Code, inherent power to allow the claim after the sale and to set aside the sale which had already taken place and had been confirmed. In support of this view, reference has also been made to the cases of Tuffazal Hossein v. Raghunath Prasad (1), Hira Lal Mukerji v. Premamoyee Debi (2) and Gurdeo Singh v. Chandrikah Singh (3). It is clear, however, that the doctrine of inherent power has no application to a case of this description. That doctrine is applied when the Court finds it necessary, for the ends of justice or to prevent an abuse of its process, to make an order for which no express provision has been made by the Legislature. Panchanan v. Dwarka Nath (4), Hukum Chand v. Kamalanand (5). In the case before us, rule 60 plainly indicates that an order upon an application under rule 58 must be made before the sale has taken place; upon the sale the application by which the claim has been preferred ipso facto terminates. The effect of these statutory provisions cannot be frittered away by an earnest appeal to the doctrine of inherent powers, specially as the objector is not without a remedy. It is open to him to proceed under rules 99 and 100 after the property has been sold and an attempt is made by the purchaser to obtain delivery of possession thereof. It is also open to him to institute a regular suit for the declaration of his right which, if his allegations be true in fact, has not been affected by the execution sale. This, therefore, is a case where the Court would not exercise its inherent powers in contravention of the express provisions of rules 58, 59 and 60 of Order XXI of the Code of 1908.

It has finally been contended, on the strength of certain observations in the case of G. P. Cooke v. The Equitable Coal Company, Limited (6), that this Court ought not to interfere in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction in a case of this description. But the case of Brajabala Debi v. Guru Das Mandal (7) shows that where a Subordinate Court has acted clearly in excess of its jurisdiction and in violation of an express provision of the Code, this Court will not hesitate to interfere.

The result is that this Rule is made absolute and the order of the Court below discharged on the ground that the Court had no jurisdiction to make it after the property had been sold. The petitioner is entitled to his costs of this Rule; we assess the hearing fee at one gold mohur.

Pre-emption—Custom or contract—Onus—Wajib-ul-arz—Evidence.

The existence or non-existence of a custom of pre-emption must be proved in the same manner as any other question. The proper issue in the case is does or does not the particular custom alleged by the plaintiff exist. The onus of proving the existence of such custom lies on the plaintiff and if he is unable to produce evidence other than an obscure clause in a wajib-ul-arz, he must be held to have failed to prove the existence of the custom. A wajib-ul arz is merely evidence.

Ganga Singh v. Chedi Lal, 33 A. 605, 8 A. L. J. 996; 12 Ind. Cas. 98, referred to.

First appeal from an order of the District Judge of Benares, dated the 26th January 1912.

Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji (with him Mr. Govind Prashad), for the Appellants.

Mr. Moti Lal Nehru, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for pre-emption. The plaintiffs alleged that they were co-sharers not only in the same thok but in the same patti as the vendor, while the vendees were co-sharers in the same thok but not in the same patti with the vendor. The only evidence the plaintiffs appear to have adduced in support of the alleged custom was the wajib ul-arz of 1842, and certain judgments bearing on the interpretation of the clause in this wajib-ul-arz.

The Court of first instance seems to have presumed for the purposes of the case in the plaintiffs' favour that a custom of pre-emption existed. It then went on to consider whether or not on the terms of the wajib-ul-arz the plaintiffs had a preferential right over the defendants. It held that the plaintiffs had no such right and dismissed the suit.

On appeal to the District Judge, the latter approached the consideration of the case entirely on a consideration of the actual terms of the wajib-ul-arz and held that under the terms of the wajib-ul-arz the plaintiffs had a preferential right over the defendants and remanded the suit to the Court of first instance for disposal.

The defendants come here in first appeal from the order of remand. The clause in the wajib-ul-arz is that, "A co sharer wishing to sell or mortgage his share should first inform his co-sharers of the thok and the patti khas and afterwards co-sharers of the village". In our opinion, neither the Court of first instance, nor the lower Appellate Court, has approached the consideration of the case in a proper way. The question before the Court was as to the existence or non-existence of a custom of pre-emption giving a preferential right of pre-emption to a co-sharer in the same patti and thok over co-sharers in the same thok but not in the same patti. The existence or non-existence of this custom does not depend upon the construction of the wajib-ul-arz. The wajib-ul-arz is merely evidence. But, in our opinion, a plaintiff coming into Court could not prove the existence of a custom of the nature claimed in the present suit by the mere production of an obscure clause in the wajib-ul-arz. That the clause in the persent wajib-ul-arz is obscure is abundantly shown from the fact that different Judges not only of Subordinate Courts but also of the High Court have interpreted it in different ways, Edge, C. J., and Banerji, J., in one of the very judgments relied upon by the lower Appellate Court, describe the clause as obscure. As we pointed out in the case of Ganga Singh v. Chedi Lal (1), the existence or non-existence of a custom of pre-emption must be proved in the same manner as any other question. The proper issue in the case is "does or does not the particular custom alleged by the plaintiff exist"? The onus of proving the existence of that custom lies on the plaintiff, and, in our opinion, if he can give no evidence other than the clause in the wajib-ul-arz he will have failed to prove the existence of the custom.

The Court will, of course, be entitled to consider the wajib-ul-arz but taken by itself it is, in our opinion, in the circumstances of the present case, insufficient. We have thought it right to mention these matters because, while we agree that the case ought to be remanded for trial upon the merits, we do not agree with the learned Judge, in so far as he has decided the question solely on the words of the wajib-ul-arz. The Court of first instance in dealing with the case on remand will pay attention to the remarks we have made as to what the real issue in the case is.

We discharge the order of the lower Appellate Court and remand the case to the Court of first instance with directions to proceed to hear and determine the same having regard to what we have said above. The Court will receive such further evidence as the parties may adduce. Costs of both parties will be costs in the cause. Costs in this Court will include fees on the higher scale.

Case remanded.

The plaintiff and defendant No. 2 were under-ryots possessing their holding in equal halves. Defendant No. 2 sold his half share in 1904 to defendant No. 1. The superior landlord, who was not bound to recognise the sale, brought a rent suit against the plaintiff and defendant No. 2 for the years 1902 to 1905, and obtained a decree and in execution attached the moveables of the plaintiff who thereupon satisfied the decree and brought this suit for contribution:

Held, that defendant No. 1 was liable to pay his share of the decretal amount under sections 69 and 70 of the Contract Act.

Mothoora Nath v. Kristo Kumar, 4 C. 369; Swarnamoyee Debi v. Hari Das, 6 C. W. N. 903 and Smith v. Dinonath, 12 C. 213, applied.

Babu Mohini Mohun Chakravarti, for the Appellant.

Babu Gour Chandra Pal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal on behalf of the first defendant in a suit for contribution. The plaintiff and the second defendant are under-ryots and possess their holding in equal halves. In 1904, the second defendant transferred his half share of the holding to the first defendant. The superior landlord, who was clearly not bound to recognise the transfer, brought a suit for arrears of rent against the plaintiff and the second defendant to recover his dues in respect of the years 1902 to 1905. He obtained a decree and proceeded to execute it by the attachment of the moveables of the plaintiff. The plaintiff thereupon satisfied the decree and commenced the present action for contribution. The sole question in controversy is whether the first defendant can be made liable for any portion of the sum paid by the plaintiff. It has been argued on his behalf in this Court that he ought not to be made liable because neither under section 69 nor under section 70 of the Indian Contract Act is any liability imposed on hand.

Section 69 provides that a person, who is interested in the payment of money which another is bound by law to pay, and who, therefore, pays it, is entitled to be re-imbursed by the other. It has been argued that the first defendant was not bound by law to pay the money which has been paid by the plaintiff, because the decree satisfied was not against the first defendant. This contention, upon a superficial view of the matter, may seem to have some force, but upon closer examination, it turns out to be fallacious. The plaintiff by the payment which he made satisfied the arrears of rent due on account of the holding and that rent was payable unquestionably by the plaintiff and the first defendant. We are, therefore, not prepared to hold that section 69 has no application. The view we take is supported by the observations in Mothoora Nath v. Kristo Kumar (1) and Swarnamoyee Debi v. Hari Das (2), notwithstanding the dictum in Futteh Ali v. Gunganath (3).

But even if it be assumed that section 69 has no application, section 70, undoubtedly, covers the case. That section provides that where a person lawfully does anything for another person not intending to do so gratuitously, and such other person enjoys the benefit thereof, the latter is bound to make compensation to the former in respect of the thing so done. There can be no question that the first defendant has enjoyed the benefit of the payment made by the plaintiff. If the plaintiff had not satisfied the decree, the landlord might have proceeded to sell the holding in which the first defendant was interested. The result of the payment by the plaintiff, consequently, has been that the property of the first defendant has been saved, and the act of the plaintiff cannot be deemed, to use the language in Damodara v. Secretary of State(4), "an officious interference of one man with the affairs or property of another." In our opinion, section 70 completely covers the case [Smith v. Dinonath(5)].

The result is that the decree made by the Subordinate Judge must be affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

The plaintiffs consigned certain goods through the defendant Railway Company. The contract between the parties provided that the Railway Company would not be liable for loss or damage to the goods except where the loss was due to wilful negligence on the part of the Railway Company's servants or due to theft by the Company's servants or agents. JUDGMENT.

HARINGTON, J.—This is a Rule calling on the opposite party to show cause why the judgment and decree of the Court below, in so far as it dismisses a portion of the plaintiffs' claim, should not be set aside. The suit was one in which the plaintiffs recovered a decree for Rs. 30 but they claimed to be entitled to a considerably larger amount representing the value of some bags of black-pepper and catechu which were consigned to them by their vendor and which were not delivered by the Railway Company. The suit was brought against the Railway Company. The terms of the contract under which the Railway Company carried the goods are to be found in a document headed "Risk Note, Form B". In that document, a special contract limiting the liability of the Railway Company was made. And it was agreed between the parties that in consideration of the Railway Company accepting a lower freight than that which they were entitled to charge, the person who consigned the goods would absolve them from all liability for loss or damage to the goods. But then, inasmuch as the Railway Company is not in law entitled to divest itself of all liability, there was a proviso that the Company would be liable for the loss due to wilful negligence on the part of the Railway Company's servants or due to theft by the Company's servants or agents. The result is, when the plaintiffs sued on that contract which made the Railway Company prima facie not liable, the onus lay on them to show that they came within the proviso: because the contract which they entered into expressly absolved the Railway Company from the liability which was imposed upon them by the ordinary law except under certain particular circumstances in which their liability was preserved. Therefore, to succeed on that contract, they were obliged to show that they came within the particular exceptions which were provided against the freedom of the Railway Company from all liability. But they failed to show this and, therefore, failed in their action.

I am unable to accede to the argument which has been put before us by the learned Vakil for the plaintiffs that the onus lay on the Railway Company. That would be treating the contract in a way which, in my view, would be wrong because it would be treating the contract as though it were the converse of what it is.

Then it is said that there is no evidence to justify the learned Judge in coming to the conclusion to which he came. But there was evidence, as appears from the judgment, that the waggon containing these goods was found sealed at Sitarampur, that sometime before it came to the next station, the goods disappeared and that the Guard saw some bags lying on the line. I think the Judge is quite justified in inferring from the evidence that some person got into the waggon and threw out the bags with the intention of stealing them. That being so, the plaintiffs, to bring their case within the exception, had to prove that this was done by the servants or agents of the Railway Company. This the plaintiffs failed to do.

The result, therefore, is that the Rule must be discharged because, in my opinion, the judgment of the Court below is right.

CASPERSZ, J.—I agree.

Rule discharged.

CIVIL REVISION PETITION No. 1585 OF 1909.

May 7, 1912.

Present:—Mr. Justice Shah Din and Mr. Justice Scott-Smith.

Lala LILA RAM—DEFENDANT—PETITIONER

Lala MUKAND RAI AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Court-fee—Partition suit—Decree in accordance with award—Objections to award not considered—Revision application—Award attacked re mode of partition—Court-fee payable—Court-Fees Act (VII of 1870), Sch. II, Art. 17 (VI)—Arbitration—Ex parte proceeding ordered by arbitrator against one party—Right of that party to file objections to award.

In a partition suit, a decree was passed in accordance with an arbitrator's award. A., one of the parties, was directed by that decree to pay a sum of money to the other side in cash. Actual partition of the joint property of the parties was also effected by the decree.

A. filed a petition for revision of the decree. In this petition he sought two reliefs, (a) that he was not liable to pay the sum of money, and (b) that the Court below accepted the award as valid without considering and disposing of his objections to that award, the main allegation being that the arbitrator did not allow A. a reasonable opportunity to put the case before him and that this had resulted in an unfair mode of partition being adopted.

A. paid an ad valorem Court-fee as regards the first relief (a) and a Court-fee of Rs. 10 as regards relief (b).

The right of the other parties to share the joint family property was not disputed; nor did A. urge in revision that any particular piece of property of a definite value should have been allotted on partition to him and not to the other parties:

Held, (1) that the petition for revision was properly stamped;

(2) that it was not possible to estimate relief (b) at a money value and, consequently, in respect thereof, a Court-fee stamp of Rs. 10 was sufficient.

Dharm Das v. Ajudhia, 70 P. R. 1881; Mehtab Rai v. Gopal Rai, 104 P. R. 1905; 152 P. L. R. 1905, Hari Mohan Singh v. Kali Prasad Chaliha, 33 C. 11, explained and distinguished.

The mere fact that ex parte proceedings have been taken against one party by an arbitrator is not sufficient to justify the summary rejection of the objections to the arbitrators' award filed by that party. Whether ex parte proceedings taken by the arbitrator are justified or not, the award made by the arbitrator is one the validity or invalidity of which has to be considered by the Court.

The party, against whom ex parte proceedings are ordered by the arbitrator, has every right to an opportunity to file objections to the award which the Court is bound to consider, if they are filed within the time prescribed by law.

Petition, under section 70 (a) of Act XVIII of 1884 as amended by Act XXV of 1899, for révision of the order of the District Judge, Dera Ghazi Khan, dated the 6th April 1909 decreeing plaintiffs' claim.

Rai Bahadur Lala Sukh Dial, for the Petitioner.

Lala Sangam Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts, so far as they are material to the decision of the question as to the amount of Court-fee leviable on the petition for revision before us, are fully stated in the referring order of Mr. Justice Johnstone. The arguments advanced by each side in support of its position are also summarised in the said order and nothing fresh of any importance has been urged at this hearing. After giving our most careful consideration to the decisions cited by the Pleader for the respondents, we think that the correct amount of Court-fee has been paid on this petition for revision. Dharm Dass v. Ajudhia Pershad(1) was a case in which the Court of first instance had awarded to the then plaintiffs, in accordance with the award of the arbitrators, property shown in the decree to be of the value of Rs. 1,45,200, and the object of the appeal was to have that decree set aside. The amount or the value of the subject-matter in dispute in that appeal was, therefore, clearly Rs. 1,45,200, and, therefore, Court-fees upon that amount were levied. In Mehtab Rai v. Gopal Rai (2), the suit was by the minor member of a joint Hindu family for separate possession, by partition, of his one-third share of the joint estate which was valued at Rs. 53,227-1-1, and as the suit clearly fell under section 7, sub-section (iv), clause (b) of the Court Fees Act, 1870, the Court-fee payable on the memorandum of appeal was held to be an ad valorem fee on the value of the share claimed. In Hari Mohan Singh v. Kali Prasad Chaliha (3), the decree passed in accordance with the award of arbitrators was to the effect that the plaintiff shall recover from the defendant the sum of Rs. 3,248 and it was consequently held that the memorandum of appeal was chargeable with an ad valoren Court-fee stamp on the said amount, inasmuch as that was clearly the subject-matter in dispute in appeal within the meaning of Article (1) of Schedule (I) of the Court Fees Act.

None of the above decisions, in our opinion, apply to the present case. Here the right of the respondents to share the joint family property is not disputed, nor does the petitioner urge in this Court that any particular piece of property of a definite value should have been allotted to him on partition and not to the respondents. He, no doubt, urges that he is not liable to pay the sum of Rs. 1,883-4-7, which he has been directed by the award to pay to the other side in cash; and so far as the decree sought to be revised embodies that part of the award, the petitioner has paid an ad valorem Court-fee upon the said amount. But, in respect of the rest of the decree as based on the award, his real complaint is that the Court below has accepted the award as valid without considering and disposing of his objections to that award, the main allegation being that the arbitrator has not allowed the petitioner a reasonable opportunity to put the case before him, and that this has resulted in an unfair mode of partition being adopted by the arbitrator. So far as this part of the subject-matter in dispute in revision is concerned, we think that it is not possible to estimate it at a money value. The case is, therefore, covered by Article 17, clause (VI), Schedule II of the Court Fees Act, and qua the relief sought by this petition for revision, apart from the relief as to the sum of Rs. 1,883-4-7 referred to above, a Court-fee stamp of Rs. 10 is, therefore, sufficient.

On the merits, the petitioner has the strongest possible case. As the District Judge has stated in his order, the arbitrator reported to the Court that the defendant, now petitioner before us, was trying to prolong the case by not producing his witnesses before the arbitrator, and the latter applied to the Court to warn the defendant to produce the evidence without delay. The District Judge accordingly warned the defendant on the 23rd January 1909; but in spite of that warning on the 5th February 1909, the defendant did not appear before the arbitrator, and proceedings were, therefore, conducted by the arbitrator ex parte and he submitted an award to the District Judge on the 6th March 1909. On the 19th March 1909, the defendant filed objections to the award; but the District Judge refused to consider those objections on the ground that the defendant was not entitled to urge them because the order for ex parte proceedings (whether one passed by the Court or by the arbitrator is not very clear) had not been set aside. The District Judge then passed a decree ex parte against the defendant-petitioner in terms of the award, and the present petition for revision seeks to have that decree set aside. The District Judge was obviously in error in declining to consider and dispose of the objections to the award filed by the petitioner. Whether the ex parte proceedings taken by the arbitrator against the petitioner were justified or not, the award made by the arbitrator was one of which the validity or invalidity had to be considered and decided by the District Judge; and the petitioner had every right to have an opportunity to file objections to the award, which objections were duly filed. Once the objections were filed within the time prescribed by law, the Court was bound to consider them, and the mere fact that ex parte proceedings had been taken against the petitioner by the arbitrator was not sufficient for the summary rejection of those objections. The objections went to the root of the arbitration proceedings and called in question not only the validity of the procedure adopted by the arbitrator, but also the correctness of some of the facts and the accounts on which the award was based. In our opinion, the District Judge acted with material irregularity and failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in him by law in refusing to consider the petitioner's objections; and we accordingly accept this revision, set aside the decree of the District Judge, and send the case back to him for disposal according to law. Under section 72 of the Punjab Courts Act, we direct that the amount of Court-fee paid on this petition be refunded, the other costs being costs in the cause.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), ss. 5, 12—Privy Council Appeal—Application for leave—Allowance of period occupied in obtaining copy of decree—Date of signing decree—Delay for which applicant not responsible—Application for copy made after period of limitation had expired—Misled by Full Bench ruling—Sufficient cause for delay in filing application.

Section 12 of the Limitation Act, 1908, has been made applicable to applications for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. Therefore, allowance must now be made for the period occupied in obtaining a copy of the decree.

There is no rule in the High Court providing that the Judges shall, at the time of signing decrees, note the date on which they sign so that in fact there is no definite record from which the date when a decree is signed can be accurately ascertained.

The principle underlying section 12 is that the applicant is only entitled to be excused for a delay for which he was not himself responsible.

Bechi v. Ahsan-ullah Khan, 12 A. 461, (F. B.), relied upon.

A judgment of the High Court against which the applicant sought to appeal to His Majesty in Council was delivered on July 7, 1911. The applicant stated on affirmation in an affidavit that the decree was signed by the Judges about a month after the date of the judgment and received by the Peshkar from the Bench Clerk on August 8, 1911, and it was not till then that the decree was available for copying. Application for a copy of the judgment and decree of the High Court was not made till January 26th, 1912, that is to say, more than 6 months after the date of the judgment, and the copy was delivered on the same day. Application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council was then made on January 30th, 1912.

Held, that the applicant, having failed to apply for a copy of the judgment and decree within the period of limitation, cannot be allowed to say that he was prevented from filing the application in time by reason of the fact that the decree was not signed and that, therefore, he was not entitled to a deduction of the period which expired between the signing of the judgment and the signing of the decree.

Bani Madhub Mitter v. Matungini Dasi, 13 C. 104, (F. B.), distinguished.

But as there were grounds to support the contention of the applicant that he was misled by the Full Bench ruling in Bani Madhub Mitter v. Matungini Dasi, 13 C. 104, the High Court, under section 5 of the Limitation Act, 1908, admitted the application.

HARISH CHANDRA TEWARI v. CHANDPUR CO. LD.

Petition for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council from the judgment and decree of the High Court (Holmwood and Teunon, JJ.), passed in Regular Appeal No. 230 of 1907 on July 7th, 1911.

Babu Jogesh Chandra Roy, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.

BRETT, J.—The value of the property in the suit in respect of which this application is made for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council is Rs. 21,206-10. The decisions of the two Courts are, however, concurrent and it will, therefore, be necessary for the applicant to satisfy us that his appeal raises a substantial question of law.

The question, however, which we have to determine first is whether the application has been made within the time limited by the law or whether it is barred by limitation.

The judgment, of this Court against which the applicant seeks to appeal, was delivered on the 7th July 1911, and the application was made on the 30th January 1912, that is to say, after an interval of six months and 23 days. The period fixed by Article 179, Schedule I of the Limitation Act (IX of 1908), within which such an application should be made, is six months from the date of the decree appealed against, and, unless the applicant is able to make out a case to avoid the bar of limitation, his application must necessarily be dismissed.

The case put forward by the appellant is as follows:—Though the judgment of this Court was delivered on the 7th July 1911, he says that the decree, which, as required by Order XX, rule 7, bears the same date as the judgment, was, in fact, not signed till about a month afterwards, and he has filed in support of his application an affidavit, the second paragraph of which runs as follows:—

"That the decree was prepared and signed by the Hon'ble Judges after about a month of the same (the date of the judgment, the 7th July 1911), and the decree, duly prepared and signed, was received by the Peshkar from the Bench Clerk on the 8th August 1911, and it was not till then that the decree was available for taking copies of the same".

The applicant relies on section 12 of the Limitation Act (IX of 1908) and on the Full Bench decision of this Court, in the case of Bani Madhub Mitter v. Matungini Dasi (1), to support the contention that the application, having been made within six months from the date when the decree was signed, was in time.

In dealing with the affidavit, we have to observe that it is not precise as to the date on which the decree was signed, nor does it explain the circumstances under which the decree was not available for the purpose of preparing a copy of it till the 8th August, nor what proof the applicant had that such was the fact.

Application for a copy of the judgment and decree was not made till the 26th January 1912, that is to say, till more than six months from the date of the judgment, and the copy was delivered the same day.

It cannot, therefore, be urged that in this case the applicant was prevented from obtaining a copy of the decree before the 8th August, for in fact he made no effort to obtain a copy till the 26th January following.

Only one day's delay having occurred in furnishing the copy of the decree, section 12 of the Limitation Act by itself cannot assist the applicant to avoid the bar of limitation.

The Full Bench decision of this Court on which the applicant relies, dealt with the question of limitation under section 12 of the Act as affecting appeals from decrees passed by two Munsifs in 1886. In that year the corresponding provision in the old Limitation Act of 1877 did not apply to applications for leave to appeal otherwise than as a pauper, and, therefore, did not apply to applications for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council, and the judgment of the Full Bench at the time of its delivery certainly did not, and could not be taken to, apply to such applications.

It must also be noticed, that before the delivery of that judgment, the date of the signing of the decree had to be entered by Judges of the lower Courts in the order-sheet in accordance with the rules of the High Court, and after that judgment had been delivered, in order to assist further the Appellate Court, instructions were issued by the High Court to the Subordinate Courts directing the Judges of those Courts to note on the decree itself the date when it was signed. In those Courts, therefore, there was and is a definite record of the date when the decree is signed.

(1) 13 C. 104.

Accession No.

In that judgment, the Full Bench held as follows:—

"In our opinion the fact that the decree was not in existence, that is, signed by the particular Judge, and could not, therefore, be copied until 23rd July, that, is six days after the date that it bears (i.e., the date of the judgment), entitles the appellant to ask us to deduct those six days in addition to the eight days' (delay which occurred in obtaining a copy of the decree), and thus to hold that under section 12 (of the Limitation Act) the appeal has been presented within the prescribed period."

The contention advanced on behalf of the appellant is that, since section 12 of the Limitation Act has been made applicable to applications for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council, that decision must be taken to apply to such applications as well as to appeals against the decrees of the subordinate Civil Courts: and that it entitles the applicant to claim a deduction of the days intervening between the delivery of judgment and the signing of the decree. In the present case if such an allowance be made, the application would apparently be in time.

In the case of Bechi v. Ahsan-ullah Khan (2), a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court, in dealing with the effect of section 12 of the Limitation Act, held that "in computing the time to be excluded under section 12 of the Limitation Act from a period of limitation, the time requisite for obtaining a copy does not begin until an application for copies has been made. If, therefore, after judgment the decree remains unsigned, such interval is not to be excluded from the period of limitation unless, an application for copies having been made, the applicant is actually and necessarily delayed through the decree not having been signed." Dissent was then expressed from the decision of the Full Bench of this Court in the case of Bani Madhub Mitter v. Matungini Dasi (1).

In this High Court, the practice before the passing of the new Limitation Act was in accordance with the law to apply strictly the rule of limitation and not to make any allowance for the time occupied even in obtaining copies of the decrees. Since the passing of the new Act allowance for that period must now be made, and this has been so held by this Court in Eastern Mortgage and Agency Co. Ld. v. Purna Chandra Sarbaguna (3).

But in this Court there is no rule providing that the dates of signing the decrees shall be noted by the Judges on them at the time of signing, so that there is in fact no definite record from which the date when a decree is signed can be accurately ascertained. To extend the application of the Full Bench ruling of this Court to applications for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council, in existing circumstances, would have the result of indefinitely extending the period of limitation, for there would be no record by which its limit might be ascertained.

There is, too, a marked point of distinction between the facts of the case now before us and the facts of the cases which were before the Full Bench of this Court in 1886. In one of those cases, the application for copy had been made before the decree had been signed, and in both cases the applications for copies had been made before the period of appeal reckoned from the date of the judgments had expired. In the case now before us, the application for the copy of the judgment and decree was not made till after the expiry of six months from the date of the judgment, that is to say, till after the period of limitation, if reckoned from the date of the judgment, had expired.

The Full Bench of the Court, in dealing with the question of limitation in 1886, considered what would be the effect if the decree were not signed till after the period of limitation had expired, but did not consider what would be the effect if the appellant had taken no steps to obtain copies of the decree within the period of limitation.

This point was considered by the Full Bench of the Allahabad Court and appears to be of considerable importance in the appeal before us.

In dealing with that point, the Allahabad Court held that the appellant was only entitled to be excused under section 12 of the Limitation Act for delay for which he was not himself responsible, and that appears to be the principle underlying that section.

We are not prepared to hold that the judgment of the Full Bench relied on by the appellant is a binding authority on us in the present case.

(2) 12 A. 261.

(3) [39 C. 510; 15 Ind. Cas. 497 Infra.

We are of opinion that in the present case, the applicant is not entitled to ask us under section 12 of the Limitation Act to deduct the period which expired between the signing of the judgment and the signing of the decree because he, having failed to apply for a copy of the judgment and decree within the period of limitation, cannot be allowed to say that he was prevented from filing the application in time by reason of the fact that the decree was not signed.

The applicant further asks us to admit the appeal under the provisions of section 5 of the Limitation Act. His case is that he was misled by the judgment of the Full Bench of this Court into the belief that he would be allowed, under section 12 of the Act, to ask for a deduction of the period which elapsed between the date when the judgment was delivered and the date when the decree was signed. As this is the first occasion on which that point has been raised and there are grounds to support the contention that he was so misled, we think that, in the circumstances, we may accept this contention and under section 5 of the Act allow an extension of the period of limitation to cover the time between the date of the judgment and the date of signing the decree. At the same time, we desire to say that we grant this concession with considerable hesitation.

CARNDUFF, J.—I agree. The Full Bench decision of the Court on the construction of section 12 of the Limitation Act, must, I think, be distingnished on the ground that the rule which it lays down in respect of appeals from the decrees of the Subordinate Courts, is a rule which, regard being had to the circumstances and the practice here, cannot be applied to, and would surely not have been laid down by the Full Bench in connection with appeals from the decrees of this Court. For what we have to deal with under section 12 is a matter of exact computation and the material for making the deduction prescribed by the Full Bench for the Mofussil is altogether wanting in this Court. But the applicant may, I think, be excused for having failed to perceive this distinction and acted on the assumption that the recent alteration in the law would have the result of giving him the benefit of the deduction. And I find that, so far as can be ascertained, to statement that the signed decree was not received from the Judges before the 8th August is correct. No doubt, it is possible that it had, nevertheless, been signed before the 30th July, in which event the time limited by law, even if calculated from the date of signing, would have expired before the present application was filed. But it is highly improbable that there was such delay and, on the whole, the case seems to me to be one in which relief may, pro hac vice, properly be given under section 5 of the Act.

The value of the subject-matter of the suit in respect of which the present application is made is over Rs. 10,000, but as the judgments of both the Courts below are concurrent, it is necessary for us to determine whether the appeal raises any substantial question of law. The learned Pleader for the opposite party has admitted that he cannot contest the assertion made by the petitioner that the proposed appeal to England involves substantial question of law.

We have read through the judgment of this Court and we think that there is no doubt that the proposed appeal raises an important question of law as to limitation. We find that the Judges of this Court before whom the appeal came were not of the same opinion on this point.

In the circumstances, we are of opinion that the case is one in which a certificate ought to be granted for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

Leave granted.

Mr. Fazl Elahi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This case has been presented as an appeal whereas, as a matter of fact, no appeal lies inasmuch as the value of the suit cannot be held to be Rs. 1,000 or upwards. We have been asked to treat it as an application for revision and we proceed to deal with it as such an application.

The suit is by mortgagors to obtain possession of certain property which they allege was mortgaged many years ago to the defendants. The lower Appellate Court has held that it having been shown that this mortgage was entered in the Settlement Papers of 1853 but not in the cursory Settlement of 1855, it must be presumed that it was executed sometime between those two dates and consequently within sixty years of the date of suit and so within the period of limitation.

Defendants, it must be noted, have never denied the fact of the mortgage nor that it was a mortgage with possession under the terms of which any surplus produce was to be credited towards re-payment of principal.

Both the Courts have held that the suit was within time and as they have decided this point on the evidence on the record as noted above, we consider that there is no ground for revision under the considerations submitted in the first ground.

We also consider that, considering the apparent value of the land and the very long time the mortgagees have enjoyed possession, the lower Courts were quite entitled to come to the conclusion, which they did, that the entire mortgage-money with interest had been paid off by the produce of the land. This being so, we see no ground for revision under the 3rd, 4th, and 5th grounds of appeal.

As regards the second point, however, we think that the lower Appellate Court was wrong in holding that no appeal lay from the order of the District Judge attributing misconduct to the arbitrators and setting aside the award. No doubt, there have been conflicting opinions expressed by the High Courts upon this point. In Ganga Prasad v. Kura (1), it was decided that no appeal lay from an order of the first Court setting aside an award of arbitrators on the ground of misconduct. This view was dissented from in a later judgment by a Bench of the Madras High Court reported as Achuthayga v. Thimmayya (2). We are inclined ourselves to take the view that the decision of the Madras High Court is the correct one. We find, however, that the point has been actually before two Benches of this Court, the judgment of the last of which is reported as Sher Jang v. Maihun (3). That, no doubt, was a decision based on section 591 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1877. The Madras ruling was under section 591 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882. These sections are identical in the two Codes. Section 105 of the Code, now in force, paragraph 1, differs in no material particular from section 591 of the Codes of 1877 and 1882. In Sher Jang v. Maihun (3), it was clearly held, following a previous judgment of this Court [Musammat Bhoi v. Sher Baz Khan (4)], that an appeal does lie from an order setting aside the award of arbitrators when the whole decree is appealed against though there is no such appeal from such an order as an interlocutory order. We must take it, therefore, as the view of this Court, from which we see no reason to differ, that when an appeal is finally preferred against a decree of a Court of first instance, which Court has in the course of the suit set aside an award of arbitrators on the grounds of misconduct, the order setting the award aside can be traversed in the appeal against the whole decree. For this reason, we are constrained to hold that the order of the learned Divisional Judge to the following effect is incorrect:—"The first point I may note is the contention that the order of the District Judge, finding misconduct on the part of the original arbitrators, is incorrect. No appeal lies against an order of this description, so that point cannot be considered." An appeal did lie to his Court and he is bound to decide the point.

We accordingly set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and return the case to him for decision of the point against which he has held that no appeal lay. No other point in the case is to be re-opened. The learned Divisional Judge will decide this point and pass such order on the whole appeal as may become necessary from such decision. Costs will be costs in the cause.

Limitation—Suit by zemindar for declaration of title and possession or alternatively for assessment of rent—Record-of-rights—Publication, date of—Commencement of period of limitation.

On February 11th, 1895, the defendant set up a title before the Settlement Officer claiming to hold certain lands rent-free. No actual decision by the Settlement Officer was come to, but the Record of Rights, which was finally published on July 9th, 1906, contained entries to the effect that the defendant was a settled raiyat, and that no rent had been assessed in respect of those lands. A suit was subsequently brought within 12 years from the date of the publication of the Record of Rights, by the zemindar for a declaration of his title and for khas possession of the lands or in the alternative for assessment of rent:

Held, that the suit was not barred, as on the publication of the Record of Rights, it was open to the plaintiff to rely upon the entries therein as a tacit recognition of his right to have rent assessed at any rate within 12 years of this date.

JUDGMENT.—This is one of the numerous suits brought by the Maharaja of Tipperah, in which he seeks for a declaration of his title as zemindar, to and for khas-possession of, the lands in dispute or in the alternative for assessment of rent.

The District Judge in the Court below has considered the question of limitation and has held that the suit is not barred under the provisions of the statute. The facts are, that the defendant on the 11th February 1895 set up a title before the Settlement Officer according to which he claimed to hold the lands in question rent-free. No actual decision by the Settlement Officer was brought to our notice: but the record-of-rights, which was finally published on the 9th of July 1906, contains entries to the effect that the defendant was a settled raiyat in the village, and that no rent had been assessed in respect of the lands in question. If the time when the tenant first made his claim is considered as the starting point of the period of limitation, the suit is barred, but it is not barred if we count the period from the date of the publication of the Record of Rights. The lower Court has held that the latter date is the one from which limitation must be counted and we consider that this is right. The claim made by the tenant cannot be said to have been allowed by the Settlement Officer. It may, perhaps, not be said to have failed as the question it raised was allowed to be left open for future determination. But on looking into the facts of the case, we cannot but consider that on the publication of the Record of Rights, it was open to the Maharaja to rely upon the entries therein as a tacit recognition of his right to have rent assessed at any rate within twelve years of this date. We have been referred to a recent decision in the case of Raja Birendra Kishore Manikya v. Roshan Khan (1). As regards that case, there does not appear to have been any question raised as to the effect of any entries in the Record of Rights. We, therefore, do not consider ourselves bound by that decision.

It is argued before us that the Settlement Officer had no jurisdiction to deal with a claim to hold land free of rent. As to this, it is enough to say that on the materials before us the entries in the Record of Right as finally published were made by a competent authority.

The result is that this appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 190, 309, 529 (e), 530 (k) and 531—Assessors, opinions of, how to be taken—Magistrate—Cognizance—Jurisdiction—Complaint before one Magistrate of offences under Penal Code and Explosive Substances Act without Government sanction—Complaint before another Magistrate with sanction—Cognizance taken by second Magistrate without withdrawing case from first, if legal—Search under Explosive Act in presence of Superior Police Officers, if legal—Explosives Act (IV of 1884), r. 32 (1) (b) of Government Rules—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 399—Explosives Substances Act (VI of 1908), ss. 4 (b), 7—Admission—Document in possession of accused.

The intention of section 309 of the Criminal Procedure Code is that the Assessors should state their opinions orally. They should not be allowed to put in written opinions.

A complaint was made by a Sub-Inspector of Police to a Sub-Divisional Magistrate of the offence of making preparation to commit a dacoity, under section 399 of the Penal Code. The facts stated in the complaint disclosed that the accused was also guilty of having bombs in his possession or control which was a preparation to commit dacoity. No cognizance could be taken of the latter offence under section 4 (b) of the Explosive Substances Act till Government sanction had been obtained as required by section 7 of the Act, but the Sub-Divisional Magistrate was informed that an application to Government had been made for the sanction. Subsequently, the Superintendent of Police put in a complaint before the District Magistrate with Government sanction. The District Magistrate then proceeded with the case:

Held, that although the case was not formally withdrawn from the file of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, the District Magistrate had jurisdiction to take cognizance of the offence under the Explosive Substances Act, as the offence was not and could not be taken cognizance of by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate for want of Government sanction.

Appeal against the order of the Sessions Judge of Dacca, dated April 10th, 1911.

Babus Manmatha Nath Mukherjee and Narendra Kumar Bose, for the Appellant.

Mr. Kenrick, K. C., Advocate-General, and Babu Mahendra Nath Banerjee, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from a conviction under section 4 (b) of the Explosive Substances Act (VI of 1908), which provides that—"Any person who unlawfully and maliciously makes or has in his possession or under his control an explosive substance with intent by means thereof to endanger life, or cause serious injury to property in British India, or to enable any other person by means thereof to endanger life or cause serious injury to property in British India, shall, whether any explosion does or does not take place and whether any injury to person or property has been actually caused or not, be punished. . . ."

The Sessions Judge of Dacca, differing from both the Assessors, has convicted the appellant, Lalit Chandra Chanda Chowdhury, and sentenced him to transportation for ten years. The two co-accused, Jyotindra Chandra Chanda Chowdhury and Harkumar Dhar, were acquitted, under section 289 (2) of the Criminal Procedure Code, there being no evidence against them.

We may observe, in passing, that the Assessors did not state their opinions orally, nor did the Sessions Judge record their opinions in the manner provided by section 309 of the Code. The Assessors were allowed to put in written (pencilled) opinions, one of which is almost a judgment within the meaning of section 367 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The intention of section 309 has been defeated by the procedure adopted. Nevertheless, we must and shall consider the reasons which prevailed with the Assessors.

The case for the prosecution is that at 7-30 P.M. on the evening of the 5th September 1910, a search was conducted of the premises of the appellant, with the result that eleven bombs in a tin box, many post-cards and letters, a paper of bomb formulæ, a cypher code, three plans of houses, a list of 13 persons (with their dispositions in the event of a dacoity), four new torches and four swords were discovered. The two co-accused were in the basha or hut, where the principal articles, the bombs and correspondence, were found when the search commenced. The appellant was brought in under arrest during the search. The bombs were submitted to Government experts and classed as coming in the category of "fulminates." In this respect, the Assessors are in agreement with the Sessions Judge that the eleven bombs are explosives within the meaning of the Act, and we accept that conclusion. The same night, or, rather early on the morning of the 6th September 1910, a First Information was drawn up, the offence specified being that of making preparation to commit dacoity (section 399 of the Indian Penal Code). That case came, as a complaint, on the file of the local Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Munshigunge, and still remains on his file. But on the 9th November 1910, the Superintendent of Police put in another complaint before the Additional District Magistrate of Dacca, together with the Government sanction, or consent, required by section 7 of the Explosive Substances Act (VI of 1908). On this complaint and sanction, the proceedings, resulting in the present appeal, were initiated, continued and concluded.

The learned Vakil for the appellant has urged (i) that the entire proceedings, including the trial in the Court of Session, were bad in law, because the case was taken cognizance of by an officer (the Additional District Magistrate) who had no jurisdiction in that behalf; (ii) that the original case was commenced in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Munshigunge who alone had, and even now has, jurisdiction in the matter; (iii) that the original case, in connection with the intention specified in section 4(b) of the Explosive Substances Act, must be deemed to be one under section 399 of the Penal Code, and as such triable by Jury; (iv) that the search of the appellant's premises was illegal, not being warranted by any section of any law; (v) that the First Information was not a true and lawful First Information; (vi) that the conviction of the appellant is wrong on the merits.

The questions of law argued on the hearing of this appeal are substantially two in number, having reference, respectively, to the initiation of the case before the Additional District Magistrate of Dacca and the legality of the search and the First Information at Munshigunge.

The first contention of the learned Vakil for the appellant is that the Additional District Magistrate could not take any cognizance of a case already on the file of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Munshigunge, and, in support of this position, reliance is placed on the cases of Jhumuck Jha v. Pathuk Mandal (1), Golapdy Sheikh v. Queen-Empress (2), followed in Radhaballav Roy v. Benode Behari Chatterjee (3), Emperor v. Sourindra Mohan Chuckerbutty (4), Moul Singh v. Mahabir Singh (5), Charu Chandra Das v. Narendra Krishna Chakravarti (6), Bishen Doyal Rai v. Chedi Khan (7) and Jharu Jola v. Shukh Deo Singh (8). We do not question the correctness of these authorities. The facts of the present case are altogether different. Cognizance was taken by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate on a complaint of the offence under section 399 of the Indian Penal Code. That complaint was made by the Sub-Inspector. Admittedly, cognizance was not taken on the First Information. No cognizance was taken, or could be taken, of the offence under section 4 (b) of the Explosive Substances Act till Government sanction or consent had been obtained and the Superintendent of Police had preferred his complaint. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate waited for the sanction, as will appear from his order-sheet, but it never reached him because his superior officer, the Additional District Magistrate, received it and took cognizance.

The Munshigunge Magistrate had taken cognizance upon a complaint by a Sub-Inspector. The facts stated in the complaint disclosed that the accused was in possession of bombs which was a preparation to commit dacoity. This fact of possession was mentioned by the Sub-Inspector in his complaint, and it was a necessary element for the purposes of section 399 of the Indian Penal Code. If, as it is said, the Munshigunge Magistrate took cognizance of the offence under the Explosive Substances Act, could he issue process against the accused under that Act? He could not, as the Government had not given its consent. After a Magistrate takes cognizance of an offence, he is empowered either to issue process against the accused, or order an inquiry under section 202 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Could this Magistrate have issued any process against the accused under the Explosive Substances Act, or ordered an inquiry? We think not, as he had no authority to do so. It seems that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate was informed that an application to Government had been made, and as the facts constituted an offence under the Explosive Substances Act also, he waited for the sanction, but this cannot be regarded as taking cognizance under that special law.

It is urged by the learned Vakil that the same facts and evidence are involved in both the cases, but the answer to this argument is that the one fact of vital importance, namely, that the bombs were of the kind mentioned in section 4(b) of the Explosive Substances Act, was not known till after the Chemical Examiner's report (dated the 16th September 1910) had been received. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate could not address his mind to this fact, which was not known on the 6th September 1910 when he took cognizance on the complaint of the Sub-Inspector. Again, the distinction between a case of making preparation to commit dacoity (section 399 of the Indian Penal Code) and a case of having in possession or under control any explosive substance (section 4 (b), Act VI of 1908) is that, in the former case, the possession of bombs may be one of several means to the end; in the latter case, it is the offence itself, provided the necessary intent is proved. Such an act of possession of bombs may be said to constitute an offence falling within two separate definitions of the law, but, though the Sub-Divisional Magistrate might have inquired into two such offences, he was unable to do so, and the Additional District Magistrate had jurisdiction by reason of the complaint made to him and the Government consent to that jurisdiction being exercised.

A distinction is also sought to be made between the taking cognizance of an offence, and proceeding to try it, the latter expression being used in section 7 of the Explosive Substances Act. The distinction, if it can exist, disappeared when the Additional District Magistrate took cognizance and proceeded to inquire into the case. The first contention, therefore, is overruled. We hold that the present case was properly initiated and the trial of the appellant was a good trial.

The second contention is equally devoid of foundation. The search was conducted, not under the Code of Criminal Procedure, but under rule 32 of the Government Rules under the Indian Explosives Act, 1884 (see pp. 396, 397, Vol. IV, General Statutory Rules and Orders, Ed. 1910). At the search, on the 5th September 1910, Police officers of suprior rank were present, including the Superintendent of Police himself. The proceedings, therefore, were legally conducted. Similarly, although the First Information did not form the basis of the case now pending before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, it was really the earliest information in the case, because no offence had been disclosed until the search resulted in the finding of the bombs and other articles. We have not treated the First Information as evidence aginst the appellant for the reason that the present case was otherwise initiated, on the 9th September 1910, four days later. It may be added, with reference to section 529 (e), section 530 (k), and section 531 of the Code, that, unless it appears that the proceedings wrongly held have, in fact, occasioned a failure of justice, they cannot be set aside. This case would have been committed for trial even if inquired into by the Munshigunge Magistrate, and the same Sessions Court would have tried it. In Sonatun Dass v. Gooroo Churn Dewan (9), where objection to the jurisdiction of a Court was not seriously taken, and the petitioner failed to show that he had been in any way prejudiced, the High Court declined to interfere. In the case before us the objection was, for the first time, taken in this Court... .....

The next question is whether the lodging and its contents were in the conscious possession of the appellant. It has been already stated that he had been residing there for some time before, and up to the 5th September 1910. It is in evidence (page 112) that the co-accused Jyotindra actually gave M. Dundas a dao wherewith to force open the box (Exhibit 1): this he would hardly have done if he had been aware of the dangerous contents of that box. From this fact, and from the fact that, in consequence of information received from the co-accused, the appellant, Lalit, was immediately pursued and brought, the inference seems a fair one to make that the appellant was then the responsible person in possession of the lodging. The correspondence found in the principal hut also shows that the appellant had his residence there, but, before we examine the papers, it will be necessary to consider the evidence of the three witnesses who speak to the handwriting of the appellant.

The three witnesses to the handwriting of the appellant are Nos. 7, 8 and 9. Of these, Doctor Ajodhya Ram Deb Roy saw the appellant writing because he used to read with Mahesha, the distant nephew of the witness, who, it may be noted, is the brother-in-law of Amulya Krishna De, to whom the label, on the canister of bombs, purported to have been addressed. The witness was not in a very favourable position to scrutinize the handwriting of the appellant, but he used to "see" (this may mean "examine," but the point is not clear) the boy's answers to examination papers. We are not disposed to place implicit reliance on the evidence of Doctor Ajodhya, but of his truthfulness we entertain no doubt. The next witness, Pandit Mukundananda Siroratna, is an entirely satisfactory and, admittedly, a truthful witness. He is the Head Pandit of the school where the appellant studied, and the appellant's work came directly under his observation. He is a careful and cautious man, and we have no hesitation in accepting his opinion as to the Bengali handwriting of the appellant. He has identified the principal documents found at the house search as having been written by the appellant. The third witness, Manomohan Dey, describes himself as a talukdar and servant. He says he saw the appellant write at the house of Hari Churn Ghose, who is the mother's first cousin's son of the witness, and at the house of the witness himself whose nephew's private tutor used to instruct the appellant. The evidence of Manomohan Dey is no better than that of Doctor Ajodhya.

We have compared for ourselves, the various Exhibits in this case. Among other resemblances, the shape of the "M" is very characteristic, but we do not base our judgment on any such resemblances unless they receive support from the evidence of the witnesses, particularly that of the Pandit. The identity of the handwriting in this case elucidates two matters, (a) the conscious possession, and (b) the criminal intent, of the appellant, and in this connection we may refer to two reported cases.

In Barindar Kumar Ghose v. Emperor (10), the learned Chief Justice observed:—"But to be an admission, it is not necessary that a document should have been written by a person against whom it is sought to be used: it is sufficient if it be proved that the document has been in his possession, and that his conduct in reference to it has been such as to create an inference that he was aware of its contents and admitted their accuracy. Unless this be done, the document cannot be used as proof of its contents. What conduct would properly give rise to such an inference must necessarily depend on the circumstances of each case. Mere possession of letters would not ordinarily go for much, and the value of such possession must largely depend upon whether it can be shown that their contents have been recognized and adopted by the replies they may have elicited, or the conduct they may have inspired. If no such consequence can be traced, their value must necessarily be discounted."

In other words, as explained in Wright v. Tatham(11), the question is whether the person (here, the appellant) has in any manner identified himself with, or, in other words, has by any act, speech, or writing, manifested an acquaintance with and knowledge of the contents of all or any of these letters. The rule would apply more strongly where, as here, some of the papers and letters were received by, and others written by, the person against whom they are sought to be used.

The papers exhibited in this case may be considered in eight groups:—

(i) There is the label (Exhibit III) on the canister containing the eleven bombs. The Pandit (witness No. 8) deposed that this paper is in the handwriting of the appellant. We accept his opinion, though we should hesitate to arrive at any independent conclusion in the matter on the comparison of handwritings we have made for ourselves. The writer of Exhibit III intended to mislead anyone into whose hands the canister might fall. It was known to the appellant that his former schoolfellow, Amulya, whose name appears as the addressee on the label, was dead: yet he prefixed sree to his name. Similarly, the mention of Dacca, as the place from which the person "Kamini" was sending the canister, was calculated to conceal the residence of the appellant at Munshigunge, in the event of the article being discovered on its way to some other destination.

(ii) The next group consists of the signatures of the appellant on his two books. These are admitted, and have been used for the purpose of comparison with his other alleged signatures in English.

(iii) We come now to the 29 post cards and two letters on the wire-file and marked Exhibit VIII-1 to VIII-31. All these are, admittedly, genuine, and, being for the most part communications to the appellant, they indicate that he was living in the basha where they were found. Exhibit VIII-5, however, is an application by the appellant for a post in the Tramway Company. Exhibit VIII-6 is a letter to one Monmohun Sutradhar which is couched in very guarded language and bears the construction that the appellant and his friends were engaged in some secret enterprise: thus the writer says,—"I will shortly join the work of which I told you. See that you do not waver. Moreover, procure, if you can, a few articles for yourselves which you will carry in your own hands. The procession will be out on the 13th-14th." No attempt has been made to assign any innocent meaning to this mysterious missive, and its presence among the private correspondence of the appellant is significant of the life he was leading.

(iv) Then there are the six documents which were found under the mat of the taktposh. Of these, Exhibits XVII—XIX were written by the appellant, but not despatched. Exhibit XIX betrays much anxiety and restlessness on the part of the writer: it is impossible that such a letter could have been manufactured for the purpose of implicating the appellant in the serious offence for which he has been tried: it is a private letter on personal and domestic matters. The others, Exhibits XVII and XVIII, are on the same lines as the six post cards which witness No. 6 (the sub postmaster of Kathadia Simulia) suspected and of which he kept a copy. This part of the case will be considered later on but, here, it may be observed that if Exhibits XVII and XVIII were forged, the six post cards, also, which are missing, or, at any rate, one of them, might equally well have been prepared to bolster up the story of the sub-postmaster. There remain Exhibits XX and XXI, which are mere school boy exercises: it would have been absurd and impracticable to manufacture such writings: also, Exhibit XXII, a letter addressed to the appellant at Munshigunge; it refers to marriage as being full of responsibilities and reproaches him for his wandering habits. This paper also could not have been made up for the purposes of a criminal charge.

(v) Eight important papers were discovered in a fold of the hogla mat under which the six documents, already noticed, were found. They were in a packet, but not tied up. On Exhibit IX were written some bomb formulæ, with a diagram. The eleven bombs were not of the description indicated in this paper, and the inference is that the appellant obtained the bombs from some one else working on a different system. The

(11) 5 Cl. & F. 670 at p. 702; 2 Jur. 461; 47 R. R. 136.

Pandit (witness No. 8) identifies the writing on Exhibit IX as that of the appellant. Exhibit X is a simple cypher code, but it is not complete in the matter of vowels, and there is no evidence that it was ever used or could be effectively used. Exhibits XI—XIII are plans of houses which the Pandit cannot attribute to the appellant, but which are highly suspicious and have not been accounted for. It is a fair inference that the houses delineated were to be made the object of some attack. The next, Exhibit XIV, is identified by the Pandit as in the writing of the appellant: it contains a list of 13 names with the disposition of these persons when engaged in a dacoity. On the same paper is a seditious poem as to which the Pandit is certain that it was written by the appellant. This, also, could not have been made up for the purposes of a criminal case. The same remark applies with greater force to Exhibits XV and XVI, which are post-cards addressed to the appellant. Their presence among the other papers is most significant: they are, no doubt, mysterious, and upbraid the appellant for being absent on an important occasion, but it would have been idle, if not impossible, to forge such writings to be introduced among the other papers.

(vi) Three post-cards from the appellant, Exhibits XLII—XLIV, were found in the house of Jiban Krishna Bhadra, one of the names in Exhibit XIV, the surname, Bhadra, being prefixed in the address on Exhibit XLII. This peculiarity, also, appeared on the six post-cards spoken to by the Sub-Postmaster (No. 6) whose evidence we shall presently examine. Exhibit XLII contains instructions how to find the Munshigunge lodging of the appellant, which was evidently a kind of meeting place.

(vii) Two letters, Exhibits XLVI and XLVII, were found in the house of Ramani Mohan Ghose, another of the names in Exhibit XIV. In Exhibit XLVII the surname Ghose is prefixed as in Exhibit XLII. These letters were, admittedly, written by the appellant: in Exhibit XLVII the writer speaks of a great danger approaching.

(viii) The last group consists of two letters, Exhibits 7 and 8 (Exhibit VIII-17 being a reply), written by the appellant to the Pleader Sailendra Chandra Banerjee, one of the search witnesses (No. 20), who produced them.

In our opinion, the papers we have just examined satisfy the requirements explained in the reported cases to which we have alluded. The appellant has been shown to have identified himself with all the papers found at the house search of his premises. The argument based on the collocation of the various papers admits of no satisfactory answer in favour of the appellant. The contention on his behalf that the incriminating papers were manufactured for the purposes of this prosecution, is untenable, and we have no hesitation in rejecting it as opposed to the evidence.

We proceed to consider the evidence of the Sub-Postmaster (witness No. 6), who has deposed that on the morning of the 4th September, he received six post cards addressed in the same hand, and in the same style, to certain persons, and inviting them to join the writer (signing himself as "Choudhuri") in some expedition. The witness says he made a copy (Exhibit XXXIV) of five of the post cards and sent a copy of that copy to the Munshigunge Thana through the village watchman. The paper said to have been so sent runs thus (Exhibit 6):—

"Five letters to the following effect addressed to the undermentioned persons have been distributed at Rautbhog. 1. Gopal Krishna Basu; 2. Manasha Charan Biswas; 3. Ramani Mohan Ghose; 4. Jiban Krishna Bhadra; 5. Bimala Charan Deb.

Munshigunge"

"I have told everything at the interview. I have fixed Monday next for our auspicious work. You will, therefore, oblige me by coming to my place before evening on that day and joining in the auspicious work and giving encouragement. To write to you in detail is but to waste time.

Yours,

Choudhhri."

It is manifest that Exhibits XVII and XVIII are to the same effect as the copy we have re-produced. The names of five out of the six addressees appear in Exhibit XIV (the disposition list for a dacoity).

If the story told by the Sub-Postmaster be true, the appellant sent intimation to his associates to join him in the perpetration of some dacoity on the night of the 5th September 1910. Exhibits XVII and XVIII were never despatched. The former seems to be unduly detailed for a circular letter, but it would appear from its wording that the writer, the appellant, was not, by any means, certain that his friends would come when wanted. He beseeches Jiban Krishna Bhadra not to disappoint him and to bring others: he questions the strength of mind of his friends. The second letter, Exhibit XVIII, is much shorter, as follows:—

"My dear Ghose,—Do you remember what I said to you? The day fixed for that work is Monday next. Come just before dusk. Don't forget.

Yours,
Choudhuri."

It may be argued that Exhibit XVIII was a draft of which the Police took advantage and concocted the story of the six post-cards; but, if so, why was not at least one post-card produced and supported by the testimony of the Sub-Postmaster who, on this hypothesis, was in league with the Police? If wholesale forgeries were being committed, one more would not have made any difference. The absence of the appellant at the moment when the search was begun may be accounted for by his going to meet the friends he expected at Katakhali (see Exhibit XVII). The slipshod procedure of the Sub-Postmaster in communicating the intelligence to the Police may be explained by his being a postal official bound neither by rule nor inclination to assist the Police. His attitude was one of benevolent neutrality. The six post-cards were not in themselves seditious: the Sub-Postmaster was obliged to deliver them to the addressees. We have read his evidence carefully: it bears the impress of truth.

Among the letters we have mentioned, two were written by the appellant to the search witness (No. 20), Sailendra Chandra Banerjee (Exhibits 7 and 8), and one, Exhibit VIII—17, was a reply to the appellant. Upon these and the evidence of Sailendra Babu is founded the argument which appears to have chiefly weighed with the Assessors. There is no doubt that Sailendra Babu was a good friend to the appellant who, after a disagreement with the Head Master of the Rautbhog school, wished to enter the first class of the school owned by Sailendra Babu and went so far as to promise to get other boys to join the latter establishment. Sailendra Babu answered diplomatically (Exhibit VIII-17). The appellant, however, did not succeed in entering the school of his desire. Sailendra Babu had reason to suspect the loyalty of the appellant, and he warned him that his lodgings might be searched and advised him to leave Munshigunge at once. But, in point of fact, the appellant did not go away, though he was traced to Dacca (page 403), on or about the 27th August, a week before the search took place. Nothing is more natural than to suppose that the appellant was acting under orders, and that he had brought the box, with the canister of the eleven bombs, from Dacca, a day or two before the 5th September. The box was temporarily in the lodging of the appellant. The bombs were of a different formula and not of the kind which would have been prepared in accordance with the directions in Exhibit IX. The appellant, though watched, was not being "shadowed." From the information received, the Police had reason to believe that bombs and suspicious papers would be discovered: hence the search. The contention that the appellant would not have dared, or found opportunity, to conduct his operations from a house close to the Munshiganga Police station is not conclusive, for, in the case of Barindra Kumar Ghose v. Emperor (10), the accused had their centres in the town and suburbs of Calcutta, and it should be borne in mind that the premises of the appellant were situated in the quarters inhabited by respectable persons and resorted to by bona fide students. The vernacular saying is proverbial that "it is always darkest under the lamp." After the most anxious consideration, we have come to the conclusion that the argument of improbability which influenced the Assessors is not sound. Their other reasons have been considered in the course of this judgment.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

APPEAL FROM THE SUPREME COURT OF THE COLONY OF SIERRA LEONE.

January 26, 1912.

Present:—Lord Macnaghten, Lord Mersey and Lord Robson.

in re MOSES AMADO TAYLOR.

Solicitor—Professional misconduct—Two remedies open—Recourse to both—Contempt of Court—Irregularity—Forgery—Intention to defraud—Substituting name of another witness in subpœna—Striking name off the Roll—Charges upon which Solicitor was not heard.

If a Solicitor on behalf of his client has recourse to another tribunal and a different process, in order to get what one Court had decided he was not entitled to have, the Solicitor does not commit any contempt of the first Court.

Therefore, where a plaintiff who had been refused a warrant for the detention of the defendant by a Civil Court straightway started a criminal process on the same subject-matter, and, by means of allegations to which the Civil Court attached no credit, obtained his warrant from a different Court, almost as a matter of course, his conduct does not necessarily involve any punishable contempt of the Civil Court, because he is not restricted by law to a single form of remedy and may pursue all the legal remedies appropriate to his grievance.

The appellant, a Solicitor, was desirous of securing the attendance of two witnesses on behalf of his client. sub pœnas were issued upon them and duly served. It turned out that the witnesses said they knew nothing about the case, so the appellant asked them to return the sub pœnas to him, which they did. He then struck out their names and substituted for them the names of two other witnesses:

Held, that the appellant was not guilty of forgery, as there was no intent to defraud on the part of the appellant, and that at the most he committed an irregularity for which some pecuniary penalty on his part was an adequate punishment.

The appellant's name was struck off the Roll of Barristers and Solicitors of the Supreme Court on charges of contempt and forgery and for his conduct in other professional matters upon which he was not heard. The Privy Council set aside the order and restored his name to the Roll.

Appeal by special leave from three orders of the Supreme Court of the Colony of Sierra Leone, dated September 3, 1908, May 7 and 10, 1909.

The Attorney-General and Mr. Rowlatt, Contra.

JUDGMENT.

LORD ROBSON.—The appellant, Moses Amado Taylor, is a native of Freetown in the Colony of Sierra Leone and a Barrister of the Honourable Society of Gray's Inn, where he was called to the Bar in June 1907. He was afterwards enrolled as a Barrister and Solicitor of the Supreme Court of the said Colony, and he now appeals from three orders of that Court.

By the first of those orders, dated the 3rd September 1908, he was fined £100 and costs for an alleged contempt of Court; by the second, dated the 7th May 1909, he was fined £20 in respect of an alleged forgery in the case of Rex v. Ganson and by the third, dated the 10th May 1909, his name was removed from the Roll of Barristers and Solicitors of the said Supreme Court.

On the 6th May 1908, the appellant, acting professionally for one Michael Huggins, commenced an action in the Circuit Court of the Protectorate wherein the plaintiff Huggins, who was a native railway pointsman in the service of the Sierra Leone Government, sued one George Wright, who was a foreman platelayer in the same employ, for damages for an alleged assault by shooting on the 30th January 1908 at Kangahun, in the Protectorate. When the action was begun, Huggins had been dismissed from his employment, and on the 20th June, the appellant wrote to Wright saying that if his client had not been peremptorily dismissed from work, he would have advised him to drop the matter, and offering at the same time to settle it if Wright would agree to pay his client's wages for the six months' employment he had lost (amounting to about £10) and costs. He further stated if these terms were refused, he would apply for the Governor's fiat to have the action tried in Freetown before he (Wright) left the Colony.

No notice was taken of this letter.

On the 22nd August 1908, the Appellant applied to the Acting Chief Justice under section 2 of the Debtor's Ordinance, 1883, for a warrant for the arrest of Wright on the ground, which was true, that he was about to leave the Settlement. The appellant at the same time stated that if Wright would settle on the terms before suggested, his client would be satisfied. The Acting Chief Jusice refused this application because, as he states in his judgment delivered on the 3rd September 1908, he "saw that all he (appellant) wanted was to get some money out of Wright and to use the warrant as a lever."

On the 24th August 1908, an application was made on the information of Huggins to one of the Police Magistrates, Mr. Vergette, at Freetown for a warrant, for the arrest of Wright upon a criminal charge of assault, with intent to murder, on the 30th January 1908, and a warrant was issued accordingly. As the Magistrate who granted it had no jurisdiction over matters arising in the Protectorate, except under the authority of the fiat of the Governor, which was wanting in this case, this warrant was in excess of his jurisdiction. Afterwards, in the proceedings for the contempt, the Magistrate stated that—

"In granting the warrant, I was misled by the information, which did not go to show that the offence was committed in the Protectorate; it was brought to me while I was on the Bench."

The information was silent as to the place where the alleged assault was committed, but it so happens, however, that the warrant itself explicitly states that the offence took place at Kangahun in the Protectorate, a circumstance which must have been communicated by the appellant or Huggins. There does not appear, therefore, to have been any concealment or deceit on the part of the applicant, though there may have been inadvertence on the part of the Magistrate. The warrant was duly executed, and on the 25th August 1908, Wright was brought before the Magistrate. The Appellant appeared for Huggins, the prosecutor, and at once asked the Court to remand Wright so that he (the appellant) might apply to His Excellency the Governor to obtain a fiat to give the Magistrate jurisdiction. The Magistrte had, under the circumstances, no jurisdiction at all, and very properly refused that application, whereupon Wright was discharged.

On the 27th August 1908, a summons was issued by the acting Chief Justice and served on the appellant, calling on him to appear and show cause why an attachment should not issue against him for contempt of the Circuit Court of the Protectorate in causing Wright to be illegally arrested "in gross contempt and defiance of the refusal of the Judge of the said Court on the 22nd August 1908, to issue a warrant for the arrest" of Wright.

The summons was heard on the 29th and 31st August 1908 by the Acting Chief Justice, who called and examined Wright and the Magistrate, Mr. Vergett. The sole question then to be determined was whether or not the prosecution and arrest of Wright was a contempt of Court. The Acting Chief Justice came to the conclusion that it was. He was of opinion that the appellant and Huggins resorted to the criminal proceedings and procured the illegal arrest as a mere lever to get the money they were demanding from Wright.

"The whole proceeding" said the learned Judge "was simply an abuse of a process of Justice," and he adds:—

"I am satisfied that the contemnors, in initiating their criminal proceedings, were influenced by the intention of defying me for having refused them the civil warrant of arrest they applied for, and Taylor in particular had this object in view, for when I refused him the warrant, he became impudent and threatened to complain to the Secretary of State."

"Even if the warrant had been valid, a contempt would have been committed, and the illegality of the warrant only intensifies the contempt."

It was the recourse, which this Solicitor had on behalf of his client, to another tribunal and a different process, in order to get what the learned Judge had decided he was not entitled to have, which constituted, in the learned Judge's view, the essence of the contempt.

It is true that the learned Judge found as a fact that the appellant was not acting in good faith, but the sense in which that charge is put forward needs some explanation. It is not suggested, or certainly there is no evidence to support such a suggestion, that Huggins did not believe in the justice of his claim and did not so instruct his lawyer. It was, indeed, pointed out by the learned Judge that the alleged assault was seven months old, and that if the contemnors had been acting in the interests of justice, they would have taken their proceedings earlier, but mere delay in such circumstances can scarcely be advanced as a proof that the proceedings were fraudulent. It may be that the alleged contemnors have made themselves liable to proceedings at the instance of Wright; that is a question on which their Lordships express no opinion whatever, and have no adequate means of forming one; it may be that the conduct of the appellant may turn out to be open to strong animadversion from other points of view than that of contempt of Court, but for the purposes of the present proceeding, it has not been proved, and cannot be assumed, that the proceedings before the Magistrate were tainted by any fraud on the the part of the appellant.

The question is, therefore, narrowed down to the bare ground stated in the summons, namely, whether, under the circumstances, procurement of the warrant and the arrest consequent thereon constituted in law a contempt of the Supreme Court. Their Lordships think they did not. Where a plaintiff, who has been refused a warrant for the detention of the defendant by a Civil Court, straightway starts a criminal process on the same subject-matter, and, by means of allegations to which the Civil Court attached no credit, obtains his warrant from a different Court, almost as a matter of course, he undoubtedly runs several risks of a serious character. He is not, however, restricted by law to a single form of remedy. He may pursue all the legal remedies appropriate to his grievance, and his conduct does not necessarily involve any punishable contempt of the Civil Court, whatever may be its other consequences.

The next order complained of, that of the 7th May 1909, arose out of the case of Rex v. Ganson and others in the Supreme Court, in which the appellant was retained to defend three of the accused. He was desirous of securing the attendance of two witnesses, Ashley and Gittens, who were prison warders, and applied to the Master of the Supreme Court for sub pœnas for them. The sub pœnas were accordingly issued on the deposit by the appellant of the conduct money, or allowance usual for witnesses of that class, (there being no fees payable), and were duly served by the bailiff. It turned out that the witnesses named said they knew nothing about the case, so the appellant asked them to return the sub pœnas to him, which they did. He then struck out the names of Ashley and Gittens, and substituted for them the names of two labourers, Lamina and Sorie. The sub-pœnas, so altered, were served by the appellant on Lamina and Sorie, and one of them, Lamina, was called and gave evidence. On these facts being disclosed at the trial, the learned Chief Justice ordered Lamina's sub pœna to be impounded.

Proceedings were subsequently taken against the appellant in the Police Court at Freetown on the charge that he had forged the sub pœnas delivered to Lamina and Sorie.

The facts above stated, which were never in dispute, and which constituted the whole case against the appellant on this head, were then duly proved, with one additional circumstance worthy of note. It appeared on cross-examination of the Deputy Master and Registrar of the Supreme Court, who is also Under-Sheriff, that the appellant called on him on 27th February 1909 for a sab pœna for one Anderson. At that time the other sub pœnas, including those for Ashley and Gittens, had been issued, and the Deputy Master admitted that the appellant told him that he wanted some other witnesses substituted. He clearly referred to a proposed substitution of names in the existing sub pœnas. The Deputy Master never told him that new sub pœnas would have to be taken out. He made no protest or objection. It did not seem to strike him as being in any way a serious matter, though, possibly enough, if any one had paused to think about it, it would have been recognised as an irregularity.

The appellant was committed for trial, and on the 1st May 1909, the Attorney-General preferred an information against the appellant charging him with (1) altering two copies of a sub pœna with intent to defraud, (2) serving the copies, so altered, with intent to defraud, and (3) uttering forged sub pœnas, with intent to defraud, knowing that they were forged.

The case came on for trial before the Chief Justice on the 3rd and 7th May 1909. Some of appellant's colleagues at the Bar made a representation to his Honour, pointing out that the effect of his pleading to the information would be a conviction for an indictable offence, the consequence of which would be the removal of his name from the Roll of the Inns of Court in London. His Honour, therefore, on the application of the appellant's Counsel, consented that a plea should not be taken, the prisoner admitting his guilt and submitting to a fine of £ 20, which was paid.

Their Lordships are of opinion that the facts alleged against the appellant did not suffice to establish the very serious offence with which he was charged. The evidence does not show or suggest any intent to defraud on the part of the appellant, and, indeed, there seems to have been no motive, so far as he was concerned, which could give rise to any such intent. At the most he committed an irregularity for which some pecuniary penalty on his part was an adequate punishment.

A fresh proceeding was then immediately instituted against the appellant to have him struck off the Roll of Barristers and Solicitors of the Supreme Court of the Colony, and on the 10th May 1909, the Chief Justice made an order to that effect. This is the third order complained of. It is founded entirely on the two alleged offences already dealt with, and must stand or fall with them. It is true that the Chief Justice in giving his reasons for this order refers to the appellant's "conduct in other professional matters" as rendering him unfit to be on the Rolls of the Court, but no such matters are specified for the information of their Lordships, nor has the appellant been heard upon them. Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be allowed; that the order of the 3rd September 1908, should be discharged, and the sum of £ 100 and the costs paid thereunder by the appellant be returned to him; that the order of the 7th May 1909, be discharged, except in so far as the same accepts the offer of the appellant to pay the sum of £ 20; and that the Order of the 10th May 1909, be discharged, and the name of the appellant restored to the Roll of the Supreme Court of the Colony of Sierra Leone.

No order is made as to the costs of this appeal.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 201 OF 1912.

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Procedure—Sessions case—Inquiry by Magistrate—Evidence—Framing of charge—Cross-examination.

In every inquiry into a Sessions Court, a Magistrate is bound, before he draws up a charge, to take all such evidence as may be produced (1) in support of the prosecution, (2) on behalf of the accused and (3) as may be called for by the Magistrate. If the Magistrate does not take that evidence, he errs unless he can justify his procedure on the ground that the evidence of such and such witness is obviously irrelevant or that he considers the fact in issue between the parties proved one way or the other by the evidence already produced.

A Magistrate is further bound, if the complainant or the officers conducting the prosecution or the accused applies to him, to issue process to compel the attendance of witnesses, to issue such process and as a matter of consequence to take the evidence thus caused to be produced unless the Magistrate records reasons to show that it is unnecessary to compel the attendance of the witnesses.

As each witness out of the classes mentioned above is examined, the accused is at liberty to cross-examine him.

Application for revision against an order of the Magistrate of Cawnpore, dated the 1st of April 1912.

Mr. Dillon (with him Mr. Wallach), for the Applicant.

Mr. Sital Prashad Ghose (with him Mr. Satya Chandra Mukerji), for the Complainant.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for the revision of an order passed by the Joint Magistrate of Cawnpore, on April 1st, 1912.

The Magistrate was asked to cancel a charge-sheet, which he had drawn up against the petitioner. He was also asked to take the evidence of witnesses which the accused wished to produce before him. He declined to cancel the charge and he also declined to take the evidence. Ordinarily, this Court is most unwilling to interfere with interlocutory orders; in the present case, however, it is abundantly clear that the Court below has not adopted the procedure prescribed by law. It has followed a procedure of its own and it seems better that in an important and elaborate case like the present, the Court should be put back so far as possible upon the proper procedure, viz., that prescribed by law. My experience is that when Courts follow arbitrary procedure of their own invention, difficulties and confusions are sure to arise. In the present case, the accused, according to a charge-sheet, which has been drawn up by the Joint Magistrate, is charged with committing criminal breach of trust in respect of a sum of Rs. 46,085. A case of this kind is obviously one, which should be tried by a Court of Session and not by a Magistrate. In saying this I must not be understood to interfere with the powers of a Magistrate as given in section 213 of the Criminal Procedure Code. I have not heard the merits of the case and I know nothing further about it beyond this that according to the complaint the accused is supposed to have been entrusted with money and to have committed breach of trust over a very large sum. As soon as this was known to the Court, or perhaps I should rather say to the prosecution, the case should have been pushed on in the channel provided by Chapter XVIII of the Criminal Procedure Code. It was, on the face of it, not a case for trial in the form provided by Chapter XXI. I cannot conceive any Magistrate of experience holding the opinion that the case was not one which ought to be tried by a Court of Session.

The Magistrate in his order of 1st April says that in this case the ordinary procedure of a warrant trial was followed. I venture to doubt this, but I am not concerned with going into the question further, as I hold that the case is one in which the procedure given in Chapter XVIII should have been adopted. It is interesting to note here, that the complainant was represented in this Court by a Vakil of great ability and experience who admitted that the case is one in which the procedure allowed by Chapter XVIII should have been followed. The point I have to see is whether there has been material irregularity in the procedure by refusing to summon the witnesses of the accused and framing the charge before their evidence and whether as a result of such refusal it is expedient that the order of the 1st of April should be altered. In every inquiry into a sessions case, a Magistrate is bound, before he draws up a charge, to take all such evidence as may be produced (1) in support of the prosecution, (2) on behalf of the accused and (3) as may be called for by the Magistrate. If he does not take that evidence, he errs, unless he can justify his procedure, on some such ground as, let us say, the evidence of such and such a witness produced is obviously irrelevant or that he considers the fact in issue between the parties proved one way or the other by the evidence already produced. A Magistrate is further bound, if the complainant, or the officer conducting the prosecution or the accused applies to him, to issue process to compel the attendance of witnesses, to issue such process and, as a matter of consequence, to take the evidence thus caused to be produced. Here there is one exception provided by law, the Magistrate can record reasons showing that it is unnecessary to compel the attendance of witnesses in question and can in such a case decline to issue process. As each witness, out of the classes mentioned above, is examined, the accused is at liberty to cross-examine him. From the wording of section 208, it seems abundantly clear that the intention of the Code was that as each witness was examined, he should be then and there cross-examined and re-examined and allowed to go to his home. The Code has considerations for witnesses and their convenience, but this consideration is not, I regret, always shared by Magistrates.

The procedure under Chapter XXI is very different. Sections 208 and 256 have only to be compared to establish this. From time to time the Court may, when it is necessary under section 342, put such questions to an accused as it considers necessary. When the Court has taken all the evidence produced by either complainant or accused and examined all the witnesses compelled to attend by process, examined the accused for the purpose of enabling him to explain the circumstances appearing in the evidence against him, then, and not till then, is a Magistrate authorized to frame a charge. The procedure here differs in this point also from the procedure laid down in Chapter XXI. A charge under Chapter XXI can be framed long before this point is reached in a case, and one of the reasons, in my opinion, for this difference is again the convenience of witnesses. But for this, however, witnesses would be and too often are harassed by being kept days and days waiting for a cross-examination. In the case before me, I understand that there were one or more witnesses who would have been produced by the accused and who were in the Court precincts. I understand that no application was made to the Magistrate before the charge was drawn up to issue process to compel the attendance of any witness. I also understand that the accused was prepared to cross-examine each witness immediately after his examinntion. But as the affidavit shows, those who appeared on behalf of the accused, being cognizant that it was the usual practice of this learned Magistrate not to allow any cross-examination before he frames a charge-sheet or till such time that the examination-in-chief of all witnesses for the prosecution is over, they did not press their right to cross-examine at that stage. If such be the practice of the learned Magistrate in inquiries into cases triable by a Court of Session, the practice is contrary to law and must be avoided in future. The accused put in a special application before the charge was framed to call a number of prosecution witnesses for a short cross-examination. The learned Magistrate, so the affidavit goes on, asked the Counsel for the accused not to put more than six to eight questions to each witness. All this was quite irregular. The learned Magistrate had no power to curtail the cross-examination of witnesses, except as provided either in this Code or in the Evidence Act. The result of these departures from procedure has been that the accused considers himself prejudiced and I think he has ground for so considering. In any case, as I have already said, it is expedient that the inquiry should, as far as possible, be put on to the lines laid down by the law. I cancel the charge-sheet. I set aside the orders of the 1st of April. Under the peculiar circumstances of the case, opportunity should now be given to the accused to exercise the right conferred on him by para. 3 of section 208, provided that right is exercised at an early date. As the omission to issue process under section 208, para. 3, appears to have been partly due to the procedure adopted by the learned Magistrate, I think he would have been wiser to follow the precedent of this Court and not the precedent which he says he has followed.

Application allowed.

Evidence—Statements made by witness in course of departmenta linquiry, whether privileged—Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 123, 124, 125, 155, 162, 163—Court bound to call for statements—Allowing accused to cross-examine witnesses on them.

The statements made by witnesses in the course of a departmental inquiry into the conduct of Police officers are not privileged under sections 123, 124 or 125 of the Evidence Act, when those witnesses are subsequeutly examined in a Criminal Court on a charge against the Police officers of taking illegal gratification and they fall within the ordinary rales of evidence as laid down in sections 155 and 162 of the Evidence Act.

Empress v. Ramadhan, 2 Bom. L. R. 329, followed.

The Magistrate is bound to call for them under section 162 of the Evidence Act and to allow the accused to cross-examine the witnesses under section 155 on the statements made whether they are in favour of the accused or against them.

The provisions of section 163 entitle the prosecution to make use of them if they turn out to be not in favour of the defence.

Rule upon the Deputy Commissioner of Ranchi to show cause why the statements, made by some of the prosecution witnesses at the departmental inquiry into the conduct of the accused before the prosecution against them had been started, should not be produced at the trial of the accused upon a charge of taking illegal gratification under section 161 of the Indian Penal Code.

Those witnesses had stated in the Court of the Deputy Magistrate who was trying the case against the accused that they had made statements in the course of the departmental inquiry. The accused then prayed for the production of those statements which had been recorded. But the Police officers in whose custody the statements were kept said that they were privileged under sections 123, 124, 125 of the Evidence Act, and the statements were not called for by the Court.

Babus Atulya Charan Bose and Nagendra Nath Ghose, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—The question that arises upon this Rule is whether the statements made by witnesses in the course of a departmental inquiry into the conduct of Police officers are privileged under sections 123, 124 or 125 of the Evidence Act, when those witnesses are subsequently examined in a Criminal Court on a charge against the said Police officers of taking illegal gratification, or whether they do not fall within the ordinary rules of evidence as laid down in sections 155 and 162 of the Evidence Act. It appears to us clear that they are not so privileged, and we are supported in that finding by the decision of the Bombay Court in the case of Empress v. Ramadhan Maharum (1). The reasons which are given by the Judges in that case apply exactly to the present case. In that case, the Sessions Judge refused to allow the question to be put to the departmental superior of the accused as to where he got his information, because he was of opinion that the Superintendent was protected by sections 124 and 125 of the Indian Evidence Act, because he had evidently regarded the communication as made to him in official confidence, more especially as at the time the case was being investigated as an attempted fraud on the public revenue, and the learned Judges of the Bombay Court held that the Sessions Judge was wrong in disallowing the question. Now the reasons which the Sessions Judge erroneously held precluded him from allowing this question are precisely the reasons which have been held by the lower Court in this case to preclude it from sending for the documents in question and putting questions to the witnesses upon them. Because there was a departmental inquiry in the District Superintendent of Police's office, therefore, the Magistrate thinks that these are either unpublished official records relating to affairs of State, or that they are communications made to the District Superintendent in official confidence, or that they are sources of information which the Police officer cannot be compelled to disclose. Now, it cannot be said that any of these sections applies to the statements of these witnesses. Clearly, they are not unpublished records relating to any affairs of State. Section 123 has been held to apply to the deliberations of the Parliament, proceedings of the Privy Council, communication between public officials in the discharge of public duty and the like, and not even Government remarks with regard to the conduct of public officials have been considered to be strictly privileged, so that the statements made by witnesses before the departmental superior of the accused cannot possibly be considered to be unpublished records relating to any affairs of State. The permission of the District Superintendent was not, therefore, in any way necessary for the production of these papers; and if any permission had been necessary, that permission would have been that of the Inspector-Genaral of Police of the Province and not of any local superior.

Then, as regards sections 124, it cannot be said that when witnesses come before a Police officer and make accusations against one of his subordinates that those communications are made in official confidence so that when the accused is on his trial, he cannot ask to know what his accusers say. It seems to us that the public interest would suffer much more by the concealment of these statements than by their disclosure.

Section 125 obviously has no application. It is not pretended that those statements were the source from which the District Superintendent obtained his information that any offence had been committed.

The statements not being privileged the Magistrate was bound to call for them under section 162 of the Evidence Act, and to have allowed the accused to cross-examine the witnesses under section 155 on the statements made whether they were in favour of the accused or against him. As the provisions of section 163 clearly entitle the prosecution to make use of them if they turn out to be not in favour of the defence, the danger which the

Magistrate appears to apprehend in his explanation does not really exist.

The Rule must be made absolute and the lower Court must take steps to have the documents referred to in para. 7 of the petition produced, and the determination of the trial will be postponed until this is done, and the Magistrate has fully considered the effect of the answers made by the witnesses upon cross-examination on these documents, when he should hear the parties and proceed to decide the case in accordance with law. In the meantime, the petitioners will remain on the same bail. Rule made absolute.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 107 (4), 496—Bail—Right to be released.

The provision in section 107, clause (4), of the Criminal Procedure Code, that a Magistrate before whom a person is sent under that section "may in his discretion detain such person in custody until the completion of inquiry", is not subject to or controlled by section 496 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The latter section does not give an absolute right to bail to any person, who is not charged with a non-bailable offence and should be read along with other provisions of the Code giving a special right of detention to a Court.

Petition, praying that in the circumstances stated therein and in the affidavit filed therewith, the High Court will be pleased to release the petitioners in Miscellaneous Case No. 2 of 1912 on the file of the Joint Magistrate, Pollachi (Criminal Miscellaneous Petition No. 1 of 1912), on the file of the Sessions Court of Coimbatore.

Mr. T. Rangachariar, for the Petitioners.

Mr. M. D. Devadoss, Contra, for the Public Prosecutor.

ORDER.—This is an application for bail. The petitioners were arrested by the Police under section 151, Criminal Procedure Code, on the ground that the Police apprehended that they were about to commit housebreaking and theft. The petitioners were produced before the Sub-Magistrate of Udumalpet. He was of opinion that proceedings should be instituted against the petitioners under section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code to take security from them for keeping the peace and sent them up to the Joint Magistrate of Pollachi. The Joint Magistrate, before whom proceedings under section 107 are pending, considered it necessary to detain them in custody pending the proceedings, and he rejected their application to release them on bail. The Sessions Court of Coimbatore also dismissed an application made to it for bail. It is contended before us that the Joint Magistrate was bound to release the petitioners on bail and that he had no discretion to refuse to do so. It is also urged that if he had such discretion, the circumstances of the case did not justify his refusal of bail. The Joint Magistrate has given very good reasons for his opinion that it was necessary to detain the petitioners in custody until the completion of the inquiry under section 107 and the Sessions Judge has concurred in that opinion. We are unable to say that the discretion has been exercised wrongly, if the Magistrate was not bound to discharge the petitioners on bail. The question, therefore, for our decision is whether he was bound to do so. Mr. Rangachariar for petitioners relies on section 496 of the Criminal Procedure Code which according to him entitles any person, (other than a person accused of a non-bailable offence), who appears or is brought up before a Court, to be released on bail. We agree that the petitioner would be entitled to bail under this section, if there were no other section disentitling him to it, but section 107, clause (4), provides that a Magistrate before whom a person is sent under that section "may in his discretion detain such person in custody until the completion of inquiry hereinafter prescribed." The petitioner in this case was admittedly a person sent under the section to the Joint Magistrate. The clause expressly gives power to the Magistrate to detain the person in custody until the completion of the inquiry. The contention on behalf of the petitioner is that this provision must be taken to be qualified by section 496. It is argued for the Crown, on the other hand, that the general provision in section 496 must be taken to be subject to the special provision contained in clause (4) of section 107. Mr. Rangachariar contends that the rule laid down in section 496 is intended to give an absolute right of bail in all cases where an accused person is in custody, whether under an order of Court or otherwise, but this contention appears to us to be untenable. Section 344 lays down that in cases where it becomes necessary or advisable to postpone the commencement of or adjourn any inquiry or trial, the Court may by a warrant remand the accused, if in custody. The explanation to the section provides that if sufficient evidence has been obtained to raise a suspicion that the accused may have committed the offence, and it appears likely that further evidence may be obtained by a remand, this is a reasonable cause for a remand. It will be observed that the explanation refers to cases where further evidence may be obtained by a remand, the object of the remand being to obtain further evidence. It cannot be held that an accused person is entitled to bail where he is remanded under this provision, for to allow bail in such a case would frustrate the very object for which the remand is ordered by the Court. A similar observation would apparently apply where an order for remand is made under clause 2 of section 107. It cannot, therefore, be held that section 496 gives an absolute right to bail to any person who appears or is brought up before a Court and is not charged with a non-bailable offence, but it must be read along with any other provision giving a special right of detention to a Court, and clause 4 of section 107 gives such special power. That provision may be compared with section 337, clause (3), which gives a Magistrate tendering a pardon to an approver the power to detain him in custody until the termination of the trial by the Court of Session or High Court. The power is qualified by restricting it to cases where an approver is not on bail, but no such qualification is made in section 107. It is, no doubt, true that a person charged with a non-bailable offence is, except in cases falling within sections 334 and 167, entitled to bail, but the same considerations are not necessarily applicable to the two cases. The object of detaining in custody a person charged with an offence is generally to secure his appearance for being dealt with according to law on the charge made against him, and the taking of bail would secure that object ; but in cases of proceedings under section 107 taken for the purpose of preventing a person from committing a breach of the peace, the Legislature may have regarded it as necessary to take steps to prevent him from doing so before the Magistrate decides whether it is necessary to take security from him. This object would not be secured by merely securing his appearance at the inquiry to be made under the section There may be cases where a person charged under section 107 may appear to be so dangerous a character that it would be desirable to detain him in custody until the inquiry against him is completed. Mr. Rangachariar points out that no provision for such detention is made, where a person charged under section 107 is not sent up to the inquiring Magistrate by another Magistrate, but the inquiring Magistrate himself orders the arrest of the person charged. It is, no doubt, true that section 114 only empowers the Magistrate to order the arrest of the person concerned, and does not provide that he may detain him in custody until the completion of the enquiry ; but assuming that a person so arrested is entitled to be released on bail under section 496, we do not think that this anomaly is sufficient to justify us in not giving effect to the clear words of section 107, clause (4), which entitles the Magistrate to detain the person concerned in custody in cases to which that clause is applicable. The question is not covered by any previous decision. It was left expressly undecided in Chidambaram Pillay v Emperor (1). In Mewa Lal Thakur v. Emperor (2), all that was held was that bail cannot be demanded from a person against whom proceedings under section 107 are contemplated but no proceedings have been drawn up or issued. In Raghunandan Parshad v. Emperor (3), the Calcutta High Court held that, except in the special circumstances referred to in clauses 3 and 4 of section 107 and which were admittedly not applicable to that case, the law did not empower a Magistrate to detain a person in custody until the completion of the inquiry and that the Magistrate was bound to grant bail. On the whole, we are of opinion that in this case the Joint Magistrate had the right to refuse to enlarge the petitioner on bail and we, therefore, dismiss this petition.

Forgery—Using forged document—Presumption—Guilty knowledge—Interest in establishing contents of document—Conduct—Filing of document, if user—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 471, 474—Convictions under both sections, whether legal—Charge under ss. 465, 471—Conviction under ss. 466, 471, if legal.

The fact that a man who files a document is interested in establishing its contents, does not raise a presumption that he filed it knowing it to be forged.

Conduct is the principal criterion of guilty knowledge.

Where a man filed a document upon which he relied but when it was discovered that the document had been forged, he fled away:

Held, that his conduct was in no way consistent with his innocence.

The filing of a document as the basis of a plaint or as a necessary sequel to the pleas in the plaint is itself an user; and it then becomes incumbent on the person using it to show that he filed the document in all good faith believing it to be genuine.

Ambika Prasad Singh v. Emperor, 35 C. 820; 8 Cr. L. J. 398, explained.

Convictions under sections 471 and 474 of the Indian Penal Code cannot stand together.

Queen v. Nuzur Ali, 6 N. W. P. H. C. R. 39, followed.

Where a charge is laid against an accused under section 465 read with section 471, Indian Penal Code, he cannot be convicted and sentenced under section 466 read with section 471.

Appeal against the order of the Sessions Judge of Noakhali, dated January 10th, 1912, convicting the accused under sections 471 and 466, Indian Penal Code, and also under sections 474 and 193 and sentencing him to rigorous imprisonment for five years under the first charge.

Mr. A. Rasul, Counsel, and Babu Jyotish Chandra Sarkar, for the Appellant.

Mr. Orr, Deputy Legal Remembrancer, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the judgment and sentence of the learned Sessions Judge of Noakhali who, agreeing with both the assessors, convicted the appellant Mobarak Ali under section 471 read with sections 466, 474 and 193, Indian Penal Code and sentenced him under section 471 read with section 466 to rigorous imprisonment for five years and passed no separate sentence under section 474 and section 193.

It appears that the accused, as the plaintiff in Suit No. 245 of 1910, filed a certified copy of a decree of the Munsif dated Sraban 1302 and in the certified copy filed by him he altered Sraban 1302 to Sraban 1301. The alteration is clear and apparent on the face of the document, and it is not now disputed. Now it is alleged by the prosecution that the only object in making this alteration was to establish that his mortgage was prior to that of the defendants, and that was the plea he took in his plaint, and the list of documents by which the plaint was to be supported contained this copy of the decree as the first document on the list and obviously it was the basis of the claim made in the plaint. It was verified on affidavit by the accused himself as the plaintiff. As a matter of fact, he did not file the document till the 26th August, the plaint having been filed on the 16th July. But the forgery was not discovered till the 6th December when the defendant having taken advice from the Muktear who appears to have been concerned on behalf of the accused in the suit of 1897, that gentleman on referring to his note-book found that the proper date of the decree was 1302. The defendant Abdul Aziz thereupon brought the matter to the notice of the Court and the Court called upon Mobarak Ali to make a statement. That statement is Exhibit 7. In that statement Mobarak Ali took the responsibility for making over this decree to his Pleader, Babu Susil Chandra Chatterjee, for filing it on his behalf in Suit No. 730 of 1910, and said that the document was entered as the principal one in the list of documents. It will be observed that he says nothing there as to his brother Hasan Ali, lately deceased, whom he now suggests may have made the alteration.

The first point taken in appeal is that there is nothing to raise any presumption of guilty knowledge on the part of the accused. The learned Judge says rather vaguely in one part of his judgment that it has been held that the fact that a man is interested in establishing the contents of a forged deed raises a presumption that he filed it knowing it to be forged. The learned Judge has not given us any reference and we are unable to accept this proposition. It is a proposition which is far too wide. The authorities, on the contrary, are that there must be the using of a document by a person who knows or has reason to believe that it is forged. The element of fraud or dishonesty must be present in the mind of the accused.

Now, we are unable to accept the plea of the accused that his brother Hasan Ali was in any way responsible either for the forgery or the user. It is a very easy thing to make charges against a dead man, but those who make them certainly must be very careful to support them with the strongest evidence. No evidence whatever is produced to show that Hasan Ali had anything whatever to do with the user or the forgery of this document. On the contrary, the Legal Practitioner engaged in the case denied that he had anything to do with it. The inference which is sought to be drawn from the statement is that Hasan Ali was a cleverer man than his brother and was in fact a Pundit. We think that this is the strongest reason to suppose that he would not have committed this somewhat obvious forgery. However, though the forgery appears to us when our attention is drawn to it to be pretty obvious, it did pass muster with the ministerial officers of the Court, one of whom tells us that having examined the document, he saw nothing suspicious about it, and also with the Muktear who ought to have remembered that the decree was in 1302. He also was deceived. However, the defendant himself was suspicious of fraud and he told the Muktear, and the Muktear then looked up his notes and discovered from his professional notes that the decree was really in 1302. A true copy was then procured and the fraud was discovered. Being confronted with this, the accused dropped the case and did not appear again. His Pleader says that he went to him and made some statement about having forgotten the date. But he omitted to do what any honest man would have done, namely, instruct his Pleader to state that as he found his case was based upon a forged document, he withdrew it and would not rely upon the document. He did nothing of the kind. From first to last he appears to have relied on the document, and when he was found out, he merely fled away. We cannot hold that his conduct is in any way consistent with his innocence and conduct is the principal criterion of guilty knowledge.

Then ,the second point arises. We are asked to hold, on the authority of the case of Ambika Prasad Singh v. Emperor (1), to which one of us was a party, that the mere filing of a document in Court without tendering the same in evidence does not constitute user of it within section 471, Indian Penal Code. This head-note, as has been pointed out by Carnduff, J., in a more recent unreported case, is entirely misleading; and speaking for myself as one of the Judges who was a party to that decision, I must say that it never entered into my mind to lay down such a proposition which would obviously be contrary to the statute law on the subject. What we did hold was that there was no evidence that these receipts had been used fraudulently or dishonestly by the accused. They were produced by a third party in a case under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code. They were not documents upon which the decision of the case depends in the sense that the documents filed with the plaint are the basis of a Civil suit, and the evidence that the accused himself had anything whatever to do with these documents was very weak. He did not attempt to assert their genuine character after they had once been impugned, and under those circumstances, we were unable to hold that there had been any user. The case obviously depended upon its own facts as most criminal cases do. But the filing of a document as the basis of a plaint or as a necessary sequel to the pleas in the plaint is, in our opinion, itself an user, and it then becomes incumbent on the person using it to show that he filed the document in all good faith believing it to be genuine. We have already held that in this case it cannot be held that the accused so filed this document.

(1) 35 C. 820; 8 Cr. L. J. 398.

Lastly, there is the point of law as regards the charges. We agree with the proposition that was laid down in the case of Queen v. Nuzur Ali (2) that convictions under sections 471 and 474, Indian Penal Code, cannot stand together. The two things must be charged in the alternative; obviously, one being the use as genuine of a document he knows to be forged and the other being the possession of such document with intent to use it. It must, therefore, be taken that the charges under sections 471 and 474 are in the alternative and that there cannot be convictions for both. The conviction, therefore, under section 474 in this case must be set aside. But this is immaterial as no separate sentence has been passed.

Then we come to the fact that the charge, although it mentioned the certified copy of a decree of a Court of Justice as the forged document, is laid under section 465 read with section 471 and that was never amended in the Sessions Court. The learned Judge speaks of the charges as amended as well as a fresh charge framed by the Court under section 193; but we find that the amendment to which he refers is merely one of date, that the offence was committed between the 26th August and 6th September instead of between 16th July and 26th August as charged by the Magistrate. That being so, we are of opinion that it was not open to the learned Judge to convict and sentence the accused under section 466 read with section 471. The accused is entitled to the benefit of this somewhat fortunate error for him, and he could not receive a greater punishment than that which the law provides under section 465.

We must, therefore, alter the conviction under section 471 read with section 466 to one under section 471 read with section 465 and reduce the sentence to one of two years' rigorous imprisonment under section 465. With this modification, the appeal is dismissed.

It is unnecessary for us to say anything about the conviction under section 193 which depends on the false verification of the plaint. If the document relied on is false, then the verification is also false.

Conviction altered.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 337, 339 (3)—Pardon—Approver—Sanction of High Court for prosecution of approver, how to be obtained—Practice—Motion in open Court.

Where it is desired to obtain the sanction of the High Court to prosecute an approver for giving false evidence after the grant to him of a pardon, under section 337, Criminal Procedure Code, the proper procedure is for the Crown to move the High Court by motion made in open Court and not by letter of reference. No orders can be passed on a letter of reference.

Crown v. Bulaka Singh, 10 P. R. 1904, Cr.; 1 Cr. L. J. 793, followed.

Case referred by the Deputy Commissioner, Gujrat District, with his letter No. 560, dated 25th March 1912, requesting that sanction under section 339 (3) of the Criminal Procedure Code, be accorded for the prosecution of Raja, son of Ilm Din, Gujar, of Khawaspur.

Mr. C. Bevan-Petman, Government Advocate, for the Crown.

Mr. Lakshmi Narain, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the District Magistrate has, by letter addressed to the Registrar of this Court, requested sanction to the prosecution for the offence of giving false evidence of a man to whom a pardon under section 337 of the Criminal Precedure Code was given.

As has been ruled in Crown v. Bulaka Singh (1), the proper procedure in such cases is for the Crown to move this Court by motion made in open Court and not by letter of reference. No orders can be passed on this reference. If application on behalf of the Crown is made in due form to this Court, orders will be passed upon it in the usual manner.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 145, 526—Transfer—High Court, power of—Jurisdiction—'Criminal case,' meaning of.

The expression "Criminal case" in section 526 of the Criminal Procedure Code, includes a proceeding initiated under section 145 of the Code. The High Court has, under section 526, power to transfer such proceeding from one Court to another subject, of course, to all the conditions under which a transfer can be made.

In re Pandurang Govind Pujari, 25 B. 179, dissented from.

Mr. Benode Behari, for the Applicant.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The question referred to is whether the High Court has jurisdiction, under section 526 of the Code of Criminal Procedure or under the Letters Patent, especially section 22, to transfer from the Court of one Magistrate to the Court of another Magistrate a proceeding under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

There is a conflict of authority on the point. In In re Pandurang Govind Pujari (1), it was held that the High Court had no power, under section 526 of the Code, to transfer a proceeding under section 145 of the Code from one Court to another. The reason given is that such a proceeding is not a "criminal case" within the meaning of section 526; that a criminal case means a case arising out of and dealing with some crime already committed and does not include proceedings taken for the prevention of a crime. The Madras High Court, in In re Arumuga Tegundan (2), dissented from the Bombay case. The learned Judges said:—"We have no doubt of our power to transfer this case both under section 526 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and clause 29 of the Letters Petent. If a case under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is not a "criminal case", it is difficult to conceive what it is. With all respect, we are unable to agree with the decision of the Bombay High Court In re Pundurang Govind Pujari (1)". In Lolit Mohan Moitra v. Surja Kanta Acharjee (3), Ghose, J., held as follows:—

"An investigation under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is an inquiry within the meaning of clause (a) of section 526 of that Code.

A Magistrate trying a case under section 145 is a Criminal Court within the meaning of the Code.

The expression "criminal case" in section 526 means a case over which a Criminal Court has jurisdiction.

It is doubtful whether the High Court has power under section 526 to transfer cases other than those in which a person is charged with an offence.

The High Court may under section 15 of the Charter Act transfer a case under section 145. Taylor, J., held as follows:—

The expression "case" and "criminal case" are not co-extensive. The phrase "criminal case" is used in a limited sense and does not apply to every case cognizable by a Criminal Court. It is doutbful whether the High Court has power under section 526 to transfer cases which do not relate to matters which may strictly be described as criminal as relating to a crime or offence under the law. The power, however, exists under section 29 of the Letters Patent wherein the phrase "criminal case" appears to be used without the distinction which apparently exists in the Criminal Procedure Code in respect of cases tried by a Criminal Court as opposed to Civil cases.

In Gurudas Nag v. Gaganendra Nath Tagore (4), Rampini and Mookerji, JJ., held that a proceeding under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure was a "criminal case" and expressly dissented from In re Pudurang Govind Pujari (1).

Our answer to the question turns upon the meaning we give to the phrase "criminal case" in section 526 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. There is nothing in the section to lead us to infer that the phrase means a "criminal case" arising out of an offence which has already been committed. Had that been the intention of the Legislature, it could have easily expressed it in apt words and would not have used an expression of a larger connotation. We are of opinion that it includes proceedings taken under section 145 for the prevention of a crime.

A Magistrate who conducts those proceedings does so as a Criminal Court under the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure and it cannot be said that he performs the function of an Executive Officer. The expression "criminal case" in clause (8) of section 526 need not necessarily be taken to have been used in the narrow sense of a criminal case arising out of an offence already committed.

The High Court is the higest tribunal in these Provinces and one of its important functions is to supervise the work of all the Criminal Courts subordinate to it and there is no reason why the Legislature should deem it fit to limit the power of the High Court to transfer only such "criminal cases" as arise out of the offences already committed and for that purpose should use a phrase of a more general import.

Besides, such a limitation can serve no useful purpose. The contention of the learned Counsel for the opposite party that the expression "an accused person", which occurs in section 526 of the Code, indicates that the phrase "criminal case" refers only to such cases as arise out of the offences which have already been committed, is without force. That expression has been used in a larger sense, i.e., the person over whom a Criminal Court exercises jurisdiction. Banerji, J., in Queen-Empress v. Mutasaddi Lal (5), said:—"The Code of Criminal Procedure contains no definition of an 'accused person' but it was held by the Bombay High Court in Queen-Empress v. Mona Puna (6) that the term 'accused' means 'a person over whom a Magistrate or other (Criminal) Court is exercising jurisdiction.' The same view was taken by the Calcutta High Court in Jhoja Singh v. Queen-Empress (7). I see no reason to put a different interpretation on the words 'an accused person, in section 437.'

It was further urged that proceedings under sections 176, 488 and 491 of the Code of Criminal Procedure can hardly be called criminal case, notwithstanding the fact that they are conducted under the Code of Criminal Procedure and this shows that every proceeding held under the Code is not a criminal case. In our opinion, this contention is without substance. We are inclined to hold that, in the absence of anything to the contrary, every case over which a Criminal Court exercises jurisdiction under the Code is a "criminal case" for the purposes of that Code.

On a careful consideration of the wording of section 526 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the policy of the law and the cases to which we have referred in this judgment, we hold that the expression "criminal case" in section 526 includes a proceeding initiated under section 145 of the Code and that the High Court under section 526 has power to transfer it from one Court to another Court subject, of course, to all the conditions under which a transfer can be made.

In this view of the case, it is unnecessary to consider the effect of section 22 of the Letters Patent upon the power of the High Court to transfer a proceeding under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 114, 403—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 236, 237—Criminal breach of trust—Absence of trust—Presence at wrongful pledging—Offence—Abetment—Altering charge and finding.

Entrustment to accused is a necessary element of the offence of criminal breach of trust under section 406, Indian Penal Code.

A jewel was entrusted to A. who gave it to B. for being pledged to some person. C., who was aware that the jewel did not belong to B., took B. to a money-lender and induced him to give a loan to B. on the pledge of the jewel. Both B. & C. acted at the instance of A. C. was charged with and convicted of the offence of criminal breach of trust:

Held, (1) that C. was not guilty of the offence of criminal breach of trust under section 406, Indian Penal Code, read with section 114, as the latter section applied only where the act, at the doing of which the abettor was present, would itself amount to an offence;

(2) that though C. was charged with the offence of breach of trust, he could, without altering the charge, be convicted, under sections 236, 237, Criminal Procedure Code, of abetment of criminal breach of trust.

Petition, under sections 435 and 439, Criminal Procedure Code, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Joint Magistrate of Rajahmundry, in Criminal Appeal No. 12 of 1912, confirming the conviction and sentence passed on accused by the 2nd Class Magistrate of Kotrapeta in C. C. No. 189 of 1911.

Mr. G. Vencatramiah, for the Petitioner.

Mr. J. L. Rosario, Acting Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner in this case was the 3rd accused in Calendar Case No. 189 of 1911 on the file of the second class Magistrate of Kotrapetah. The 1st accused was a dancing girl and the 3rd accused is said to have kept her. The facts on which the prosecution was based were that the complainant lent a jewel to the 1st accused and this jewel was subsequently pledged by the 2nd and 3rd accused to the 6th prosecution witness. The money obtained by the pledge was apparently appropriated by the 2nd accused. The jewel was given to the 2nd accused by the 1st accused for being pledged. There can be no doubt that the 2nd and 3rd accused had no right to pledge the jewel. Both Courts have found as a fact that the 3rd accused was aware that the jewel did not belong to the 2nd accused and that he introduced the 2nd accused to the 6th prosecution witness as a relation of his in order to induce the witness to give a loan to the 2nd accused on the pledge of the jewel. Both of them acted at the instance of the 1st accused who gave the jewel. On these facts, the lower Courts have convicted the 3rd accused of criminal breach of trust.

It is contended that the conviction cannot be upheld as there was no entrustment of the jewel to the 3rd accused Entrustment to the accused is, according to section 406, Indian Penal Code, a necessary element of the offence of criminal breach of trust. It is urged by the learned Public Prosecutor that by combining with the 1st and 2nd accused to pledge the jewel to P.W. No. 6, the 3rd accused would be guilty of abetment of criminal breach of trust and that as he was present at the act of pledging, he would also be guilty of the principal offence itself under the provisions of section 114 of the Penal Code. That section enacts:—"Whenever any person, who being absent would be liable to be punished as an abettor is present when the act or offence for which he would be punishable in consequence of the abetment is committed, he shall be deemed to have committed such act or offence." I doubt whether under this section the principal offence would be committed where one of the elements of the offence is a particular relationship between the abettor and a third person which is absent in the case. The act of pledging may, no doubt, be taken to have been committed by the 3rd accused also in consequence of his presence at the time when the 2nd accused did the act. The language of the section, no doubt, lends itself to the argument that whenever a person is guilty of an abetment, his presence at the commission of the offence would make him guilty of the principal offence. But the section, I think, would really be applicable only where the act at the doing of which the abettor is present would itself amount to an offence. Now the mere pledging would not be an offence by itself. Another equally essential element is the entrustment.

I am inclined to think that the mere presence of the 3rd accused at the act of pledging would not make him guilty of the principal offence of criminal breach of trust. But I see no reason why he should not be held to be guilty of abetment of criminal breach of trust. The facts charged against him were that he was a party to the pledging of a jewel which was entrusted to the 1st accused. On these facts, a charge of abetment of criminal breach of trust could have been framed against him. I think the provisions of sections 236 and 237 of the Criminal Procedure Code are applicable to such a case. It was a question whether, on the facts alleged, the accused would be guilty of criminal breach of trust or of the abetment of that offence. Both charges could have been framed against him on the facts alleged by the prosecution and in such a case, it is open to the Court under section 237 to convict the accused of the abetment of criminal breach of trust though no charge was framed against him for that offence.

Mr. Venkataramiah relies on two cases in support of his argument that a person can in no case be convicted of the abetment of an offence when he was not charged with it, but only of the principal offence. The first of these cases is Reg. v. Chand Nur (1). The offence charged against the accused there was murder. The learned Judge recognized that the question must be decided by a consideration of the provisions of section 238 and he rested his judgment on the ground that the facts necessary to prove abetment would not be included in the facts required to prove the principal offence. And the facts charged against the accused were only those that were required for the principal offence of murder. The learned Judge says: "That section, (i.e., the section corresponding to section 236 of the present Code), applies to cases in which the charge is of an offence which consists of several particulars, a combination of some only of which constitutes a complete minor offence. The graver charge in such a case gives notice to the accused of all circumstances going to constitute the minor one of which he may be convicted. The latter is arrived at by mere subtraction from the former. But when this is not the case, where the circumstances embodied in the major charge do not necessarily and according to the definition of the offence imputed by that charge constitute the minor offence also, the principle no longer applies because notice of the former does not necessarily involve notice of all that constitute the latter. The section is not intended to apply to a collateral offence. It is not open to a Court to find a man guilty of the abetment of an offence on a charge of the offence itself. When a man is accused of murder, he may not be conscious that he will have to meet an imputation of collateral circumstances constituting abetment of it which may be quite distinct from the circumstances constituting the murder itself."

Similar observations may be applied to section 236 also. It is quite true that if the facts are not the same, the accused cannot be convicted for another offence the elements of which are not all included in the offence charged against him. Ordinarily, the facts required to prove the abetment would not be included in the facts constituting the principal offence. The abetment would precede the commission of the principal offence itself where it consists in the abettor being a party to a conspiracy or in instigating the principal offence or helping in the commission of it. If he be present at the commission of the offence itself, he would ordinarily be guilty of the principal offence. The abetment, therefore, would be complete before the principal offence is committed and the facts constituting the abetment need not be proved in order to prove the principal offence. No doubt, in order to bring home the offence to any particular accused, the facts preceding may be adduced in evidence which by themselves may make him the abettor. But when the charge is of the principal offence only, it cannot be said that he has to meet facts which occurred before the principal offence. I entirely accept the law as laid down by the learned Judge. The other case, Padmanabha Panji Kannaya v. Emperor (2), really also proceeds on an application of the principles of sections 236 and 237 to the facts of that case. The offence charged there was forgery. The observations I have made with regard to the acts constituting the abetment of such an offence would show that these acts may not precede the commission of the act which makes the offence itself and a person who is charged only with the principal offence is not called upon to meet a charge which relates the acts done before it. I do not think that the learned Judge who decided the case intended to lay down a universal rule that in no case can a conviction for abetment be possible where the charge was only of the principal offence The question is what were the facts charged. If on these facts, two charges could be framed, namely, the commission of the principal offence and the abetment, then by virtue of the provisions of section 237 the accused may be convicted of the offence of abetment though it was not charged separately against him. The Act lays down no specific provision with respect to the question to be decided here. But the principle is laid down in sections 236 and 237 and applying the principle I must come to the conclusion that in this case the accused may be convicted of the abetment of the criminal breach of trust.

I accordingly alter the finding into one of guilty of the offence of abetment of criminal breach of trust. I see no reason

To constitute the offence of cheating, it is not necessary that the deception should be by express words; it may be by conduct or implied in the nature of the transaction itself.

Khoda Bux v. Bakeya Mundari, 32 C. 941; 9 C. W. N. 1006; 2 Cr. L. J. 764, followed.

A., a judgment-debtor in an execution case, applied under Order XXI rule 83 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, for permission to raise the amount of the decree by a private transfer of his house which had already been sold in auction. The application was rejected by the Court and yet he induced a person to advance him money on a mortgage of the house in question on the representation that he was empowered to effect the mortgage in order to pay off the decretal amount due to the decree-holder. A. received a portion of the money himself and induced the mortgagee to pay the rest to the decree-holder, but allowed the sale to be confirmed by the Court and subsequently received from the executing Court the sale-proceeds stating that he had paid the decree-holder out of his own pocket:

Held, that a prima facie case of the offence of cheating under section 420, Indian Penal Code, existed against A.

Petition, under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, for revision of the order of the Sessions Judge, Lahore Division, dated the 8th August, 1911, confirming that of the Magistrate 1st Class, Lahore District, dated 29th June 1911, discharging the respondents.

Lala Lajpat Rai, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Nand Lal and Pandit Jowala Pershad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—After hearing arguments, I think that the order of the Magistrate discharging Jai Dial, respondent, of an offence under section 420, Indian Penal Code, was wrong and must be set aside. The Magistrate has overlooked the fact that the application made by Jai Dial in the execution case on the 8th March 1910, under Order XXI, rule 83, of the Civil Procedure Code, praying for permission to raise the amount of the decree by a private transfer of his house, which had already been sold by auction, was rejected by the executing Court the same date, and yet he (Jai Dial) induced the widow, Musammat Radhi, to advance Rs. 1,000 to him on the mortgage of the house in question on the representation that he was empowered to effect the mortgage in order to pay off the decretal amount due to the decree-holder, Thakar Das. From the order of the executing Court, dated the 21st February 1910, it is clear that under Order XXI, rule 89, Civil Procedure Code, Jai Dial was permitted to pay into Court, within the time prescribed by law, the amount of the decree together with a sum equal to 5 per cent. of the purchase-money and the 21st March was fixed as the date for passing final order. On the 21st March, Jai Dyal effected the mortgage in question in direct contravention of the order passed on his application, dated the 8th March 1910, and after having himself received Rs. 253 from the mortgagee and having got the latter to pay the balance of the mortgage-money, namely, Rs. 747 to the decree-holder, he did not put in an appearance in Court either on the 22nd or the 23rd March, with the result that on the last mentioned date, an order was passed by the executing Court confirming the auction sale and rejecting the judgment-debtor's application of the 25th February, on the ground that the necessary deposit had not been made within 30 days from the date of the sale. The decree-holder, Thakar Das, appeared in Court on the 23rd March, and stated that he had duly received the amount of the decree and asked for execution proceedings to be consigned to the record room. This was accordingly done; the sale of the house in favour of the auction-purchaser was confirmed and as a result, the motgagor, Musammat Radhi, secured no mortgage rights of any kind in the house under her mortgage-deed of the 21st March 1910. On the 17th August 1910, Jai Dial made an application in Court asking for payment to him of the sale-proceeds of the house, stating that he had paid the decree-holder out of his own pocket. This application was accepted and the money was paid to him. Subsequently, the mortgagee appears to have asked Jai Dial several times to re-pay him the mortgage-money together with interest and damages, but up to the present moment, nothing has been paid to her or to her son, the present petitioner. The Magistrate appears to me to have entirely overlooked the proceedings in the executing Court and also the subsequent conduct of Jai Dial, and I have no hesitation in holding that his order of discharge is improper.

I accordingly set aside the order of the Magistrate, and send the case back for further inquiry by another Magistrate. The Magistrate who will try the case should keep in view the principle laid down in the case of Khoda Bux v. Bakeya Mundari (1), namely, that to constitute the offence of cheating, it is not necessary that the deception should be by express words, but it may be by conduct or implied in the nature of the transaction itself.

The accused was prosecuted under section 497 of the Penal Code. The trying Magistrate held that adultery was not proved but he found the accused guilty of insult likely to provoke a breach of peace under section 504 of the Code. On appeal, the Sessions Judge held that no offence under section 504 had been committed but he was of opinion that the charge under section 497 was sustainable. The Sessions Judge, however, held that he had no power to interfere with the acquittal of the accused under section 497:

Held, that the Sessions Judge had power under section 423, Criminal Procedure Code, to interfere in the case.

If he was of opinion that accused had committed adultery, the Sessions Judge could alter the conviction to section 497 of the Penal Code, as the conviction under section 504 and the acquittal under section 497 were based on the same evidence.

If the acquittal on the one charge and the conviction on the other are based on identically the same facts, the Appellate Court has power to change the section and convict the accused of the right offence.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of the orders passed by the Sessions Judge, Mandalay Division, in which he, after reversing the conviction of the accused under section 504, Indian Penal Code, refused to deal with the charge under section 497, Indian Penal Code.

The applicant in this case, Ali Muddin, who was the complainant originally, prosecuted Meah Jan along with five other men under sections 497, 498, 500 and 109 of the Indian Penal Code, the first accused, Meah Jan, with having committed adultery with his wife, Fatima, and the others with abetting the act of adultery by Meah Jan and also in the alternative with defamation.

The facts show an extraordinary phase of Mahomedan social life in Burma. Ali Muddin married Fatima who is now 44 years of age from 22 to 30 years ago. They are both Chittagonian Mahomedans. Some years ago, Ali Muddin took a Burman wife. It would appear that Fatima, his wife, resented this and left him. It is stated that there was a tillak but this was not proved. Ali Muddin fell out with a fellow countryman, Meah Jan, and there was, as is usual, a good deal of litigation between them. Whatever were his motives it is difficult to say, but eventually it would appear that accused, Meah Jan, went in company with Fatima from Kamaing to Mogaung where the accused, Meah Jan, was bringing a case against Ali Muddin. Meah Jan denied he took her himself till Abdul Aziz, who is Fatima's son-in-law, handed her over to Meah Jan to escort to Mogaung. While on the way there and back, there cannot be the slightest doubt but that Meah Jan had every opportunity of having connection with Fatima. They were in the boat alone for three nights and were left alone there, and it is urged that this is sufficient evidence to prove that adultery did take place. Nevertheless, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Mr. Barnard, who wrote a long and carefully considered judgment, came to the conclusion, taking all the circumstances into consideration, that adultery was not committed. He had the witnesses before him ; Fatima appeared in Court ; she is a woman of 44, which in the case of a native woman of her class, is the time when the youthful charms have usually departed. The Magistrate made no distinct order of acquittal but he states, after considering all the evidence, the "age of the woman, and the circumstances under which she went to Mogaung, and the time she left Kamaing with the accused, i.e., in broad daylight, I arrived at the opinion that sexual intercourse was not in the mind of the accused, Meah Jan, when he took Fatima down with him to Mogaung, nor did he commit it, and that, therefore, I could not convict him under the charge of adultery which I had framed against him."

This, as the Sessions Judge remarks, is equivalent to an acquittal under section 497 of the Indian Penal Code, but instead of this the Sub-Divisional Magistrate found him guilty of insult under section 504, Indian Penal Code. In the special circumstances of the case, I do not think that the conviction of insult likely to provoke a breach of the peace was so unsuitable as the Sessions Judge thought it, but there seems to be some doubt in the Sessions Judg's mind that Ali Muddin was present at Mogaung and, if he were not, obviously the charge of insult must fall through.

On the other hand, it is a fact that flaunting about with another man's wife has led to innumerable duels in other countries besides India, and after all section 504, though it seems somewhat inadequate, is not so ridiculously out of place as the Sessions Judge thought.

The Sessions Judge was of opinion that the charge under section 497 was sustainable, and he called upon the accused to show cause why the charge against him should not be re-tried.

The case was argued before him by Mr. Mitter, but no notice was sent to the other side whose defence was not heard. The Sessions Judge set aside the conviction under section 504 and found that practically accused had been acquitted of adultery, and he did not think that he had any right to interfere with the acquittal.

Against this order, he has applied to this Court. The case being one of some importance, I asked the Government Prosecutor to appear in support of the finding of the Sessions Judge.

Mr. S. Mukerjee (senior) appeared for the applicant, Mr. Mitter for the respondent, and Mr. Lutter for the Crown.

It was urged by the applicant that this Court had repeatedly interfered in cases of this sort, and the learned Counsel quoted several unreported cases in which the Court had held that this Court could interfere and had interfered and ordered a re-trial, although no appeal had been filed by the Local Government and the time for appealing had not lapsed. The cases quoted by the learned Advocate for the applicant are—

Mi Hla So, Nga Lu Gyi v. Nga Than and Maung Ngwe Pyaing (1); Me So v. Mi Shwe Ma (2); Nga Pwin v. Po Min (3).

My learned predecessor has held that this power of interference under section 439 is one which can and should be exercised in Upper Burma. There is a ruling by Mr. Burgess, Maung Sein v. Maung Hmo (4), in which doubts were expressed whether a case can be taken up on revision so long as an appeal lies, and there are several cases quoted in which the High Courts in India have repeatedly held that the Courts will not ordinarily interfere. recent case (unreported) Nga Kan Gyi v. Nga Po Tha (5), the whole matter was argued before me.

In the case of Thandavan v. Perianna (6), the Madras High Court held that an appeal against an acquittal by way of revision is not contemplated by the Code, and it should, on public grounds, be discouraged. This extreme view has not been upheld by the other High Courts, but both Allahabad and Bombay have upheld that ordinarily the High Court will not exercise its powers of interference in such cases. It seems to me quite clear that the wording of section 439 does give this power to the High Courts, and my learned predecessors, Twomey and Shaw, JJ., have both held the power exists, and have repeatedly exercised it, and it would seem that though not directly mentioned that this power can well be used in Upper Burma in view of the fact that the Upper Burma Criminal Justice Regulation has largely increased the powers of interference in ordinary appeal cases with regard to the enhancement of sentences.

The Advocate for the applicant then drew attention to the facts. He has pointed out that it is not necessary now to prove the actual acts of sexual intercourse in order to prove adultery. This view has been held in the case of Queen-Empress v. Madhub Chundar Giri Mohunt (7). He pointed out that in this present instance not only were there ample opportunities for sexual intercourse but these opportunities had been created deliberately by the parties themselves, Meah Jan and Fatima.

On behalf of the Crown, Mr. Lutter pointed out that under section 423 (b) (2) of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the Sessions Judge had ample power in the present case to have given force to his own opinions and to have convicted the accused under section 497. He quoted a recent ruling of the Madras High Court which is I find exactly on all fours with the present case, namely, the case of Appanna v. Mahalakshmi (8). Here the High Court has clearly laid down that in the present case the Sessions Judge, if he finds the accused not guilty on the one charge and he has been wrongly acquitted on another, may act under this section and convict the accused on the charge which he thinks has been proven, although an actual acquittal has been entered in the lower Court. In the Madras case, an acquittal was actually entered on the first charge. Mr. Lutter urged that the question whether the Court had power to take up the case in revision, therefore, did not arise in the present case, but that the Sessions Judge was able to have dealt with the case himself, and that the case should now be sent back to him for disposal according to law.

For the respondent, Mr. Mitter urged that in the various rulings of the High Courts of India, King-Emperor v. Luchmun Singh (9), Queen-Empress v. Judoonath (10), the High Courts had held that interference with acquittal is not called for, but all these cases quoted differ from the present one, because in them there was no conviction at all and the accused was acquitted on all charges.

First, as regards the question of the power to interfere on revision.

I entirely concur with the opinion of my learned predecessor in the case, Po Han and Nga To v. Nga Tha Le Ni and Mi Tu (11), in which it was held that "as a general rule, the High Court will not interfere with an order of acquittal, but it has the power to do so, and there can be no doubt that this power may be properly exercised in certain circumstances."

I agree, however, that in the present case, this question does not arise, and that the Sessions Court had power, under section 423 of the Code of Criminal Procedure read with section 13 of the Schedule of the Criminal Justice Regulation, to interfere, as there was a conviction in the case and the accused was convicted on the same set of facts on which he was acquitted on the other charge.

This, I think, is the crucial point of this case. If the acquittal on the one charge and the conviction on the other are based identically on the same facts, it appears to me that the Sessions Court in appeal has power to change the section and convict the accused of the right offence.

Now to deal with the facts, I am bound to say after a careful perusal of the proceedings of the lower Court, I am not at all convinced that the Township Magistrate was not right in acquitting the accused of the offence of adultery. It is very well to talk about opportunities for committing this offence, and to say that near relationship would not prevent incest. On the other hand, there is good reason to believe that it was true that Fatima's son-in-law handed her over to the care of Meah Jan. I do not think it likely that a son-in-law would deliberately blacken his wife's face by encouraging his wife's mother to commit adultery. But the main fact which appears to me to render adultery exceedingly unlikely is that the Chittagonian woman in question was of the mature age 44. I do not think that a native woman of 44 belonging to the class of the complainant's wife would be very attractive from a sexual point of view, and it must be recollected the Magistrate who has great experience of the country had Fatima before him when he passed the order and distinctly drew attention to her age. Moreover, it is quite clear that this is not an odinary case of adultery. The charge seems to me to be Ali Muddin's reply to the complaint made by Meah Jan.

In these circumstances, I am not at all sure that there is any advantage to be gained by remanding the case to the Sessions Court, as I do think that there is a good deal of force in the deliberate finding of the Magistrate that no adultery was committed or intended, and, therefore, refuse to interfere.

SUNDAR SINGH AND ANOTHER—CONVICTS PETITIONERS

versus

EMPEROR—PROSECUTOR—RESPONDENT.

Riot—Constable struck while quieting riot—Discrepant evidence—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 147 and 332.

Where a public servant is struck with a stick while trying to quiet a riot, but the evidence as to who actually struck him is discrepant, it is not necessary to frame a separate charge under section 332, Penal Code, against any one of the rioters in particular.

Petition for revision, under section 439 of Criminal Procedure Code, of the order of the Sessions Judge, Hissar, dated 16th January, 1912, confirming that of the Magistrate, 1st Class, Hissar, dated 21st December 1911, convicting the petitioners.

FACTS.—The accused in this case were challaned under sections 147, 332, Indian Penal Code, and section 120 of the Railways Act. The facts of the case as alleged by the prosecution stated briefly are, that a party of Nuts consisting of five men and four women came to Gadrana (the village of the accused) and performed their performance of singing, &c. During the performance, the accused, with the exception of Gurdit Singh, began to behave indecently towards the Nut women. Not approving of this, the Nuts stopped their performance and left the village. Near the village well, the five accused, Jang Singh, Jagat Singh, Sundar Singh, Hira and Chanan, with some other villagers, came to the Nuts and requested them to stop at their village for the night, but the Nuts refused to do so. When the Nuts came near Raman Station, they were confronted by Jang Singh who asked them to return to their village but the Nuts did not agree to do so. In the meanwhile, the other five accused came thither and asked the Nuts to return to their village and on the Nuts refusing to comply with their desire, all the accused began to maltreat the Nut men and women and said that they would forcibly take back their women. Upon the Nuts raising a hue and cry, some gang-men who were doing their work close by came to the spot and one of them went to fetch the Police constable. Nidhan Singh and Hira, constables, soon came to the spot and asked the accused to desist from molesting the Nuts whereupon Hira and Jagan Singh fell upon Nidhan Singh, constable. In the meantime, several other persons arrived thither and all the accused with the exception of Jang Singh were arrested and sent up for trial.

In re CLARIDGE.

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Petitioners.

JUDGMENT.—This is a petition for revision on behalf of two only out of six men sentenced by the lower Courts. So far as the petitioner Sundar is concerned, I see no reason for interference. The circumstances of the whole affair are rather strange, but there is nothing to differentiate the case of Sundar in particular and I am not prepared to say that the lower Courts have come to an altogether wrong conclusion on the facts. It may be taken that Sundar joined in a disreputable riot for which he has been properly punished. His petition is dismissed.

The case of the other petitioner Hira is not quite the same. This man alone among the rioters has been given an additional sentence of three months' imprisonment in respect of violence to a constable. There is no doubt that the constable, also named Hira, received a somewhat violent blow from a stick in the face while trying to quiet the riot, but the evidence to show that this blow was struck by the petitioner is very discrepant. The principal witness Girdhari made two statements, ascribing the blow in his first statement to Jang Singh and in his second to Hira, and there is altogether a good deal of doubt whether any one really knew exactly how the constable came to be struck.

The attack on him was the one serious feature in the case, and it seems to me that the proper course was to hold all the rioters equally responsible. There was no necessity for framing a separate charge under section 332, Indian Penal Code, against any one of the men in particular, the attack on the constable being the main incident of the affair, which was otherwise of no great importance.

Hira's conviction and sentence will stand under section 147, Indian Penal Code, but the revision is so far allowed in his case that his separate conviction under section 332, is set aside with his additional sentence thereunder of imprisonment for three months.

Revision partly allowed.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT.

ORIGINAL CRIMINAL JURISDICTION.

February 2, 1912.

Present:—Sir Dinsha Davar, Judge.

In re G. W. CLARIDGE.

Contempt of Court—Pending trial—Comments by paper likely to prejudice fair trial—Humorous comments—Repetition of objectionable epithet—Punishment—Apology—Practice.

It amounts to a contempt of Court to make comments on a pending case, when the comments can in the least be taken to have the effect of prejudicing the fair trial of an accused person.

When during the pendency of a trial, a serious charge made against an accused person is treated by a journalist as a humorous event on which the public are invited to laugh, it is a matter that must be dealt with seriously.

The repetition by a paper of an offensive epithet against an accused person under trial is quite as objectionable as the original assertion of that epithet.

To talk humorously of an accused person's ill-health and to make light of a serious matter is a most objectionable practice on the part of a journalist.

The power of committing a citizen or a journalist to jail or of inflictiug a fine on him for contempt of Court, or punishing him in any other way, such as making him pay costs, should be exercised with the greatest caution.

Contempt matters are matters not between parties but are matters between the respondents and the Court and the Court can accept an apology which it considers sufficient.

Mr. Raikes, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—One Mahomed Khan of Hoti is the third accused in a case that has been committed by the Chief Presidency Magistrate for trial at this Sessions and Monday next has been fixed for the trial of that case.

On the 5th of February, his Counsel applied to me for a Rule against Messrs. G. W. Claridge and A. E. Claridge, who are the publishers of a weekly newspaper known as "The English Mail", calling upon them to show cause why they should not be committed for contempt or why such other order as to the Court may seem fit should not be made against them. The learned Counsel drew my attention to 2nd paragraph in the column of "Bombay Notes" in the issue of the 19th of January of that newspaper, and a Rule was granted which has been argued before me to-day.

The respondents have put in an affidavit in which apology is tendered, "if the Court is of opinion that any part of the paragraph would prejudice the Khan of Hoti." This the respondents have no right to ask. The Court's opinion would not be expressed till after the respondents had done what they may be advised to do or what they may think fit to do at the arguments of the Rule. However, on my pointing this out to Mr. Binning, the learned Counsel for the accused, he, with great wisdom, has tendered an unqualified apology for the publication. I accept the respondents' explanation in their affidavit and I absolve them from all intention to prejudice the trial of this accused. But the consideration of this question does not depend on mere intentions. It depends on what the probable effect of a publication of this kind would be on the trial of the accused, which is still pending. Knowing that this Rule was coming on, I have been looking at the authorities, the principles of which have been enumerated in Oswald on Contempt of Court, 3rd edition, beginning with page 91, and the authorities leave no doubt that the Court will resent any comment on a pending case, where these comments could in the least be taken to have the effect of prejudicing the fair trial of an accused person.

Mr. Binning has pointed out to me that this is one of a number of paragraphs which form the subject-matter of columns of humorous writing. The column is not composed of all humorous paragraphs. On the contrary, as pointed out by the learned Counsel for the accused, the column begins with a very melancholy subject —the death of the late Duke of Fife—and the third paragraph, that immediately follows the second paragraph in question, deals with a very very sad accident that took place at Mahableshwar in connection with a well-known Jewish family at Bombay.

But assuming that this was a part of the humorous columns of the newspaper, I emphatically disapprove of any journalist treating a pending criminal trial as a forthcoming humorous event in Bombay. Comments on pending trial are at all times most objectionable. But when a serious charge made against an accused person is treated as a humorous event on which the public are invited to laugh, I think it is a matter that must be dealt with very seriously.

Now, what are the comments in the paragraph? Are they likely to prejudice a fair trial of the accused person or are they not? I assume that when a paper is published in Bombay, it is likely to be read by any member of the public. It must be remembered that nine citizens of Bombay will have to be empanelled to try this case. Is it likely to have an effect on their minds? Take, for instance, the sentence beginning with this:—" The prosecution story was long and circumstantial." The use of the word "circumstantial" is most unfortunate, because it involves an inference that the story commended a certain amount of credibility by its being circumstantial even if actual proof was absent. Leaving that aside, we have the accused referred to as" a very clumsy Lothario," and the learned Counsel for the respondents says that this is only a repetition of what somebody else said. I think that a repetition of an offensive epithet against an accused person under trial is quite as objectionable as the original assertion of that epithet; besides which I am not aware that anybody in the course of his or her deposition before the Magistrate, has used the words "clumsy Lothario" in connection with the third accused. Assuming that somebody did use these words in the course of the inquiry before the Magistrate, a journalist has no business to repeat the epithets which are likely to influence the public mind adversely to the accused.

The last and the worst offence is that the accused made the most of his ill-health and appeared in Court on a sofa and secured the privilege of being under arrest in his own house. The Magistrates' Courts do not extend privileges to the accused but they give them their rights, and, when the Magistrate made the order referred to, I take it he had good grounds for believing that that order was necessary in respect of the accused, having regard to his health. To make light of a serious matter of the kind and to talk humorously of an accused person's ill-health is, to say the least of it, a most objectionable practice on the part of journalists.

Having said this, it follows that the only conclusion I can come to is that the publication of the paragraph in question is a contempt of Court. It must be remembered, and I do remember, that the power of committing a citizen or a journalist to jail or of inflicting a fine on him, or punishing him in any other way such as making him pay costs, is, as stated in the English cases cited before me, rather an arbitrary power in the hands of the Court. That power should be exercised with the greatest of caution.

In this case, the respondents, both of them, have acted like gentlemen. They have realized that it is possible that the publication was not what should have appeared in their paper, and they have explained the circumstances under which that objectionable paragraph got in. I am quite willing, under the circumstances, to take all that into consideration and absolve them from any intention wilfully to commit any contempt of Court or to prejudice the third accused in his trial. The unqualified apology tendered by Mr. Binning on behalf of the respondents is, I think, under the circumstaces sufficient for the Court. Contempt matters are matters not between parties but are matters between respondents and the Court, and I do not propose to deal harshly with the respondents. I accept their apology and make no order on the Rule so far as any punishment to them is concerned. I think the third accused in this case was perfectly justified in drawing the Court's attention to the publication of the paragraph in question. He was perfectly justified in coming to this Court and asking the Court to take notice of this publication, and under the circumstances, he is entitled to be placed in the same position in which he would be if the publication had not been made. He has incurred costs which I think the respondents must pay.

I discharge the Rule and make no order on the Rule except that the respondents do pay the costs of the third accused in the case before me. These costs to be taxed by the Taxing Master as on the original side.

Rule discharged.

CRIMINAL REVISION PETITION NO. 1700 OF 1911.

February 3, 1912.

Present:—Mr. Justice Chevis.

SADDA SINGH—CONVICT—PETITIONER

versus

EMPEROR—PROSECUTOR—RESPONDENT.

Revision—Serious discrepancy in evidence for the prosecutin—Failure of both Courts to take notice thereof—Power of High Court to set aside conviction on revision—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 439.

A conviction based on evidence containing a serious discrepancy of which no notice was taken by the lower Courts may be set aside on revision.

Petition, under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of the order of the District Magistrate, Lyallpur, dated 17th November 1911, confirming that of the Magistrate, Samundri, dated 17th October 1911, convicting the petitioner.

Mr. Nihal Chand, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—On 5th October, 1911, Musammat Ram Kaur lodged a complaint at Thana Samundri, in which she charged Sadda Singh with a criminal assault.

On the same day, Sadda Singh's mother lodged a charge of assault against Musammat Ram Kaur's husband and three other men in Court at Lyallpur.

The latter case has been dismissed. In the former case, the Magistrate has convicted, though from his judgment it would seem that he is inclined to believe the story of Sadda Singh's mother having been beaten, and to attribute Sadda Singh's offence to a desire to take revenge for the assault on his mother. I do not think it at all likely that both the charges are true.

Mussammat Ram Kaur's story is that she had gone into Sadda Singh's cotton to ease herself, and that Sadda Singh came up, and seized her by the arm, and tried to throw her down but in vain; that she cried out and Bawaria, Jat, and Phumman, Kashmiri, came up, and then Sadda Singh ran off.

This story is supported by Bawaria and Phumman. But though they were examined on 9th October 1911, i.e., only five days after the assault, Bawaria says he went into the cotton a short distance, and Phumman did not go, while Phumman says he went into the cotton, and Bawaria did not go. This seems to me a serious discrepancy, but neither the Magistrate, nor the District Magistrate, who dismissed the appeal, has taken the least notice of it. I am not inclined to attach undue weight to petty discrepancies, but considering the short time that had elapsed, I can scarcely attribute this discrepancy to want of memory or call it a petty one.

The evidence in support of the charge is scanty and also discrepant, and I accept the application, and reverse the conviction and sentence, and acquit the petitioner. The fine, if paid, will be refunded.

Petition accepted.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 353—High Court—Trial—Accused ill—Power to dispense with attendance in Court.

Under the provisions of section 353 of the Criminal Procedure Code, a High Court has the power to dispense with the attendance of an accused, during his trial before the High Court, on the ground of his ill-health.

Messrs. Inverarity and Raikes, for the Applicant.

Mr. Strangman, Advocate-General, for the Crown,

JUDGMENT.—With reference to Mr. Inverarity's application to dispense with the attendance of the third accused from the Court during the trial, I have now had the advantage of seeing the learned Chief Justice and the other Judges who presided at the recent Tribunal which tried the Nasik Conspiracy case, and I have ascertained that that Court dispensed with the attendance of one of the accused, who was suffering from appendicitis, under the powers which they held were by implication conferred on High Courts by section 353 of the Criminiminal Procedure Code. That is a precedent which I have no hesitation in following in this case. Section 205 of the Criminal Procedure Code empowers a Magistrate to dispense with the attendance of the accused in cases where he issues a summons and it seems to me that it could not have been the policy of the Legislature that the High Court should not have similar powers in all proper cases.

Major Gordon-Tucker has stated in his evidence that it would be unsafe to bring the third accused backwards and forwards into Court, that he is suffering from dilatation and fatty degeneration of the heart, accompanied by anuerism, and that it is dangerous to his life that he should be brought into Court and kept here during the trial which promises to extend over many days' hearing. This evidence is not challenged by any cross-examination.

Under these circumstances, I will dispense with the attendance of the third accused in Court till the further order of this Court. In the meanwhile, all prosecution witnesses who have to identify the third accused must do so now before he is removed from the Court.

Order accordingly.

Ejectment suit—Possessory title of plaintiff good against all but the true owner.

Second appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge's Court of South Malabar at Palghat, in Appeal Suits Nos. 492 and 493 of 1909, presented against that of the District Munsif of Tirur, in Original Suit No. 154 of 1908.

Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. P. Govinda Menon, for 1st Respondent.

Mr. C. V. Anantakrishna Iyer, for 2nd and 3rd Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal relates to the plaintiff's right to recover two of the items included in a demise made in favour of the family of defendants Nos. 1 to 10. The items with which we are concerned are Nos. 2 and 4. Of these, item 2 is in the possession of the 17th defendant. The case of the demisees is that they were evicted from this item in pursuance of a decree obtained by a stranger and that as they lost possession of the item, in taking the account between the plaintiff and them, the proportionate rent of this item must be deducted. The 17th defendant who was subsequently made a party is the person in possession of this item and he contends that he obtained possession of this item from the Thomarakavu davaswam which he says is the jenmi. The 4th issue in the suit raised the question whether the demisees lost possession of the property in the suit referred to by them and the 3th issue raised the question of the 17th defendant's title to hold the land independently of the plaintiff on the ground that the land belonged to another jenmi. The District Munsif found the 4th issue against the demisees, his view being that the 2nd item was not one of the properties from which they were ejected in the suit referred to by them, Original Suit No. 33 of 1901, on the file of the District Munsif's Court of Tirur. He found also that the 17th defendant was not entitled to hold on a different title although he dealt very briefly with that question. On appeal, the Subordinate Judge reversed the finding of the District Munsif on the 2nd issue and held that the demisees were ejected from item 2 in Suit No. 33 of 1901. He recorded no finding on the 17th defendant's right to hold it as land belonging to a different jenmi. According to the case of the plaintiff himself, the 17th defendant did not come into possession of this land under the demise sued on. He seems, no doubt, to have contended that the demisees were guilty of collusion in allowing the 17th defendant to obtain possession; still, it is not possible to hold that he contended that the 17th defendant's possession was under the demise sued on. The suit as against the 17th defendant must, therefore, be regarded as one based on title and the plaintiff would not be entitled to a decree without proving his title and possession within 12 years prior to the suit and the case would be governed by Article 142 of the Limitation Act. If the plaintiff's demisees were in possession within 12 years prior to the suit, that would no doubt be sufficient to prove his possession in law within 12 years of the suit. The 17th defendant's own possession admittedly commenced only in 1903. The Subordinate Judge having failed to record any finding on the question of the 17th defendant's jenmi's title and of the plaintiff's title to recover land from the 17th defendant, we must ask him to record a finding on the question whether the plaintiff is entitled to recover the land from the 17th defendant on the basis of his title, and, if so, whether he was in possession of the land, either directly or through his tenants, within 12 years prior to the suit.

With respect to the 4th item, the plea of the demisees is that they were not put in possession of it. The 16th defendant claimed to be a mortgagee under the demisees on an oral mortgage and admitted the plaintiff's right to recover possession and claimed payment only of the mortgage amount due to him. The 18th defendant was the person who appealed against the Munsif's decree for surrender of the properties including this item. His right was derived under a hypothecation document executed by the demisees, and he is in possession of the item. The District Munsif found that although possession was not given to the demisees, the demisor, in accordance with his promise contained in the kanom-deed, subsequently put him in possession, causing the person who was actually in possession at the date of the demise to surrender the item to the demisees. The Subordinate Judge reversed this finding. In doing so, he has referred only to the oral evidence let in by the plaintiff and has made no reference to the valuable evidence contained in Exhibits E. and VI, hypothecation documents executed by some of the demisees two years after the date of the demise, Exhibit VI being in favour of the 18th defendant himself. Both these documents state that the executants were in possession of this item as well as other items included in the demise. It is, of course, possible that this admission was made by mistake but prima facie the statement is one which it is the duty of the demisees to explain. The question, no doubt, is one of fact as urged by Mr. Ananthakrishna Aiyar, but as the finding is based purely on the oral evidence in the case and the more important documentary evidence has not been referred to by the Subordinate Judge, we think, in the circumstances, that he should be asked to record a fresh finding on the question.

The Subordinate Judge is requested to submit his findings on the evidence on record within one month from the date of the receipt of this order. Seven days will be allowed for filing objections.

In pursuance of the order contained in the above judgment, the Subordiate Judge of South Malabar at Palghat submitted the following

FINDINGS:—I am directed to submit findings on the following issues :—

Whether the plaintiff is entitled to recover the land, item No. 2, from the 17th defendant on the basis of his title, and, if so, whether he was in possession of the land, either directly or through his tenants within, 12 years prior to the suit ?

Whether the demisor put the demisees in possession of the land, item No. 4, in accordance with his promise contained in the kanom-deed ?

First issue:— * * * * *
Second issue:— * * * * *

I find that the demisee Avomma was put in possession of the land, item No. 4, in accordance with the promise contained in the kanom-deed V and its kychit A.

This second appeal coming on for final hearing after the receipt of the finding of the lower Court, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT:—We accept the finding of the Subordinate Judge on the second issue sent down by us, namely, whether the demisor put the demisees in possession of the land, item No. 4, in accordance with his promise contained in the kanom-deed.

On the first issue, he has found that item No. 2, was not the jenm of Gopala Menon and is, therefore, not the jenm of plaintiff and that the plaintiff was not in possession as jenmi either directly or through tenants at any time. But he proceeds to find that Gopala Menon and the plaintiff were in possession through Avomma, though not as jenmi, till the execution of the decree in Original Suit No. 33 of 1901, that is, till 16th August 1902. The demise by Gopala Menon to Avomma was in the year 1893 and this suit was brought in the year 1908. The plaintiff, as purchaser of the rights of Gopala Menon in the property, would be entitled to a decree for the eviction of the 17th defendant whose possession dates only from 1908, unless it be proved that Gopala Menon was in some way holding under the Thomarakavu devaswam. Of this apparently there is no evidence at all on record. The Subordinate Judge says that the 17th defendant suggested that Gopala Menon might have been a sub-demisee under Neelakantan Nambudiri. The Subordinate Judge was content to accept this suggestion. But, in our opinion, he was not entitled to do so, unless there was some evidence on record to support it. The Subordinate Judge, no doubt, finds that Gopala Menon's jenm title has not been proved. But in the absence of any better title proved on behalf of the devaswam, Gopal Menon's possessory title which passed to the plaintiff is sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to a decree in ejectment against the 17th defendant, a posses-ory title being good against all the world except the true owner. See Narayana Row v. Dharmachar(1); Shi Gopal v. Ayesha Begam (2) and Perry v. Clissold (3). The result is that the decree of lower Appellate Court must be modified and that of the District Munsif must be restored. The appellant's costs in this and in the lower Appellate Court will be paid in equal proportions by the 17th and the 18th defendants.

JUDGMENT.—The genealogical tree is to be found on page 8 of the paper-book. The dispute relates to certain land which Jia, a sonless proprietor, gifted to his son-in-law Kadu. On 3rd September 1896, Kadu gifted some of the land to his daughter Musammat Akko and on the same date he gifted some more land to Kamma, husband of another daughter Musammat Chuhri. On 11th November 1897, he executed a Will in favour of Nabi Bux, son of another daughter, Musammat Natho, declaring him to be his adopted son and heir, and on 15th May 1901, he had some of the land mutated in favour of Nabi Bux on the strength of an oral gift.

The plaintiffs, collaterals of Jia, brought declaratory suits to protect their reversionary rights alleging that Kadu had no power to make these alienations, but while these suits were pending Kadu died, and the present suit, which is one for possession, was then brought.

The first Court dismissed the suit, but the learned Divisional Judge on appeal held that the general rule was that in the absence of lineal male heirs of the donee, the land reverted to the donor's line and so decreed the claim. The defendants appeal to this Court.

Eleven issues were framed by the first Court but the appeal can be decided with reference to one point only. There are no male lineal heirs of the donee Kadu in existence except Nabi Bux, who certainly is a male and a direct descendant, but even he is only a daughter's son. The contention for the plaintiffs is that as the donee has left no heirs in the male line of descent, the property gifted reverts to the donor's collaterals. The defendants, on the other hand, rely on certain recent rulings and urge that so long as there are any direct descendants of the donee in existence, tho property does not revert.

Prior to Sita Ram v. Raja Ram (1), the rulings of this Court were to the effect that a donee became absolute owner, and that if he left no descendants, the property passed to his collaterals and not to the collaterals of the donor. Vide Moluk v. Musammat Dyan (2); Fouja v. Kasu (3); Gogan v. Taloka (4); Dasaunda Singh v. Partab Singh(5); Ditta v. Muhammad Baksh (6); Jowahir Singh v. Amrik Singh (7); Mangat v. Wazir Singh (8); Atra v. Umra (9), in which rulings the heirs of the donee were preferred to the heirs of the donor. But ever since Sita Ram v. Raja Ram (1), the existence of the custom of reversion to the line of the donor in the absence of descendants of the donee has been recognized.

(7) 9 P. R. 1885.
(8) 82 P. R. 1885.
(9) 1 P. R. 1886.

The only question for us to decide is whether the property reverts in the presence of female descendants of the donee or of males who are descendants through females such as a daughter's son.

In Khagindra Nath Das v. Nanak Chand (10), it was held by a Division Bench (Reid and Robertson, JJ.) that the donor's collaterals could not oust the female descendants of the donee in the direct line. In Lachhman v. Bhagwan Sahai (11), the same view was held by another Division Bench (Shah Din and Chevis, JJ.). The same view is also held in a Single Bench decision, Civil Appeal No. 407 of 1911 (Rattigan, J). These rulings all hold that the property gifted does not revert so long as there are any descendants, male or female, of the donee in existence.

We see no sufficient reason for not following these rulings. We hold, therefore, that the plaintiffs cannot get possession in the presence of the daughters and the daughter's son of the donee. We, therefore, accept the appeal and dismiss the suit with costs throughout.

The female issue born of the marriage would be validly affiliated if the said condition is fulfilled.

Quære:—Whether the affiliation is valid without the said condition precedent?

Second appeals against the decrees of the Subordinate Judge's Court of South Malabar at Calicut, in Appeal Suits Nos. 531 of 1908, and 609 of 1908, presented against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif of Manjeri, in Original Suit No. 308 of 1908.

Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. J. L. Rosario, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—There were three members in the Tachoor Poonkuzhi Illom, Narayanan and two women. They executed Exhibit IV in favour of one Damodaran whereby they constituted Damodaran their heir and stipulated that Damodaran should marry and beget issue for their Illom to succeed to the Tachoor Poonkuzhi Illom on the death of Narayanan. Damodaran married accordingly, and the 6th defendant, a female child, was born as the result of the union. Narayanan's wife having subsequently given birth to a male child, there were differences amongst the parties and a release was executed in Narayanan's favour by Damodaran, on his own behalf and on behalf of the minor 6th defendant, and by his wife, whereby they renounced all interest in the properties of the Tachoor Poonkuzhi Illom in consideration of a sum of Rs. 18,000 partly paid and partly promised by the father of the plaintiff in this suit. The plaintiff's father who advanced this sum at the request of Narayanan, obtained a mortgage from Narayanan and the two women of his Illom. The mortgage is impugned as invalid and several questions are argued. But before dealing with them, it is essential to know whether Exhibit IV is valid and operates to affiliate the offspring of Damodaran whether male or female. It appears to have been assumed in the Courts below that the affiliation was valid. No case has been cited to us where the question has been decided when the affiliation was made not by the sole surviving member of the Illom but as here by a male member and the two women. Our attention was drawn to two cases where the affiliation was made by two women but no question was then raised or decided as to the validity of such affiliation and it may be that those cases stand on a special footing as only one of the women might have been regarded as entitled to the Illom property. Before disposing of the second appeal, we think it necessary to have findings on the following issues:—

(1) Whether according to the usage amongst Nambudris, the members of an Illom, consisting of one male and two female members, may validly affiliate another by requiring a member of another Illom to marry and beget issue for the first Illom?

(2) Whether female issue born of such marriage would be validly affiliated as members of the first Illom?

Fresh evidence may be taken on both sides. The Judge should examine witnesses he may see fit to call in addition to the evidence which the parties may adduce. The findings should be submitted within three months from this date and seven days will be allowed for filing objections to the said findings.

In compliance with the order (after recording and discussing evidence contained in the above judgment), the Subordiate Judge of South Malabar at Calicut submitted the following

FINDINGS:—My findings on these issues referred to me for trial are:—

(1) That according to the usage amongst the Nambudris, the members of an Illom, consisting of one male and two female members, cannot validly affiliate another by requiring a member of another to marry and beget issue for the first Illom unless he or the lady proposed to be married to him is previously made legally an heir of the aforesaid Illom; and.

(2) that the female issue born of the marriage would be validly affiliated if the condition laid down by me in connection with the fist issue is fulfilled.

These second appeals coming on for final hearing on Thursday and Friday the 21st and 22nd days of March 1912, and having stood over for consideration till this day, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT:—The Subordinate Judge has now returned a finding on the first issue remitted to him to the effect that according to the usage amongst the Nambudris, the members of an Illom, consisting of one male and two female members, cannot validld affiliate another by requiring a member of any other Illom to marry and beget issue for the first Illom unless he or the lady proposed to be married to him is previously made legally an heir of the aforesaid Illom. It is argued for the appellant that the evidence shows that such an affiliation can legally be made independently of the condition precedent laid down by the Subordinate Judge and reliance is placed on the decision of the late Saddar Court in the case of Tottakara Alluttar Manakal Narrain Nambudripad v. T. M. Trivikrama Nambudripad, quoted in the case of Vasudevan v. Secretary of State for India(1). We, however, do not think it necessary to decide the question, as, in the present case, the condition precedent has been complied with. The judgment both of the District Munsif who tried the case and of the Subordinate Judge who heard the appeals and also the order of this Court calling for a finding, proceeded on the footing that all the then members of the Tachoor Poonkuzhi Illom "constituted Damodaran as heir " by Exhibit IV. No question as to this was referred to the Subordinate Judge. Damodaran, therefore, had an interest in the property of Tachoor Poonkuzhi Illom. The issue of the marriage which he contracted for the benefit of that Illom also on birth obtained an interest therein under Exhibit IV. It has been found by the the Courts below that at the time when Exhibit G was entered into, a state of things existed in that Illom which made it for the advantage of all concerned including the present appellant (6th defendant) that Damodaran and his wife and child (6th defendant, appellant in Appeal Suit No. 383) should separate from that Illom. Exhibit G was executed, no doubt, primarily to carry out arrangements contemplated as liable to arise when Exhibit IV was executed, but it may also, we think, be regarded as evidencing and part of a family arrangement in the nature of a partition entered into by all the persons who at the time of its execution had an interest in the property of the Illom either originally, i. e., Narayanan, his wife and widowed daughter-in-law, or by virtue of Exhibit IV, that is, Damodaran and his wife and child. It is found that full consideration was paid for execution of Exhibit G. We do not think that there is any reason to regard Exhibit G as invalid, or as not binding on the appellant (6th defendant) whose father Damodaran executed it on her behalf as well as on his own. There is also no reason for regarding Exhibit B as in any way invalid. It was executed by Damodaran and his wife and the 6th defendant as well as by Narayanan and his wife and widowed daughter-in-law. The 5th defendant (appellant in S. A. No. 382) was born long after the execution of Exhibit G and it is not open to him to say that he is not bound by it.

We, therefore, dismiss both the second appeals with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

SOBBA SINGH AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Punjab Pre-emption Act (II of 1905), ss. 11, 12, 12(a) 12 (c), thirdly—Right of vendee to resist—Pre-emptor himself debarred by s. 11 from claiming pre-emption—Right of only some owners to sue under s. 12 (c) thirdly.

A vendee, in order to resist a suit for pre-emption, must show that he has himself a right to purchase the property which is equal to, or superior than, the right of the person who claims to pre-empt it. A person, who is, by virtue of section 11 of the Act, entirely debarred from any right of pre-emption, cannot claim that under section 12 he has, as a defendant, a right of pre-emption which enables him to defeat the right of a person to whom the Act gives the right of claiming pre-emption. Therefore, a vendee, who is debarred under section 11 from claiming pre-emption as a plaintiff, is not entitled to resist a suit for pre-emption as defendant on the ground that as the next heir of the vendor he has a superior right to that of plaintiff under section 12 (a) of the Act.

Section 12 (c), thirdly, does not require that either all the owners should sue jointly, or only one of them should sue in respect of his individual and several right. Under it, even some, out of many owners, can sue, while the rest elect to stand aside without taking any action in the matter.

Second appeal from the order of the Divisional Judge, Ferozepore. Division, dated 30th of August 1910, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, 1st class, Ferozepore District, dated 9th December 1909, dismissing the plaintiff's claim.

The Hon'ble Rai Bahadur Shadi Lal, for the Appellants.

Lala Lajpat Rai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This judgment will determine both this further appeal and the further appeal in case No. 1136 of 1910, the points involved in them being identical.

The facts are fully set forth in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court and need not be repeated. Mr. Shadi Lal, on behalf of defendants-vendees, attacked the judgment under appeal upon the following three grounds:—

(1) That the vendees, though debarred under section 11 of the Punjab Pre-emption Act, from claiming pre-emption as plaintiffs in a suit, were nevertheless entitled to resist a suit for pre-emption as defendants on the ground that as the next heirs of the vendor, they had a superior right to that of plaintiffs under section 12 (a) of the said Act;

(2) that plaintiffs, who were some only of the owners of the estate, were not entitled to claim the benefit of section 12 (c) thirdly of the said Act, as these provisions applied only to cases in which either all the owners sued jointly, or one owner sued in respect of his individual and several right; and

(3) that the evidence on the record proved that plaintiffs had acquiesced in the sale and had waived any right of pre-emption they might have had.

In our opinion, there is no force in any of these grounds. The first is admittedly covered by authority, [see Mahmud v. Nur Ahmad (1) and Thakur Das v. Sohawa Singh (2)], and after hearing Mr. Shadi Lal's arguments to the contrary, we now say no more than that we agree entirely with the views expressed in these judgments. A vendee in order to resist a suit for pre-emption must show that he has himself a right to purchase the property which is equal to, or superior than, the right of the person who claims to pre-empt it, and a person who is, by virtue of section 11 of the Act, entirely debarred from any right of pre-emption, cannot, in our opinion, claim that under section 12 of the Act (which is expressly made subject to the provisions of section 11), he has, as a defendant, a right of pre-emption which enables him to defeat the right of a person to whom the Act gives the right of claiming pre-emption.

The second ground urged by Mr. Shadi Lal is so hopelessly untenable that we need not discuss it at length. Where there are several owners in the estate and one sells his interest therein, it is open to all the other owners to sue for pre-emption jointly. And it is further conceded that each of such other owners can claim to pre-empt the property. That being so, we fail to see any reason for holding that two or more of such owners should be debarred from bringing a joint suit for pre-emption simply because one or more of their body elect to stand aside and take no action in the matter. We cannot believe that it was the intention of the Legislature in such cases to encourage multiplicity of suits by compelling such owners as desired to pre-empt the property to institute a number of separate suits.

We have no hesitation in deciding against appellants upon the first and second points.

Lastly, there is the question of waiver of acquiescence, and here we entirely agree with the District Judge, Lala Achru Ram, and the Divisional Judge that the evidence adduced by defendants in support of this contention is far too vague and unsatisfactory to establish the plea. It is possible that some of the proprietors led the vendees to believe that no opposition would be offered to a sale in their favour by Thakur Das, but we are not satisfied that plaintiffs actively misled the vendees into so thinking, and we cannot upon such meagre evidence hold that plaintiffs have lost a right which is given to them by statute. In this connection the Divisional Judge was right in laying stress upon the fact that the deed of sale was not attested by any proprietor of the village. If defendants' story is true, it would have been no difficult task for them to secure the attestation of some leading lambardar whereas the two witnesses who attest it are entire strangers to the village.

We hold accordingly that plaintiff's suits for pre-emption have been rightly decreed and we dismiss this and the connected appeals. But as plaintiffs contested the amount of the consideration-money and failed to prove that it was not fixed in good faith, and as they were slow to enforce their rights of pre-emption, we direct that the parties shall bear their own costs throughout.

Appeal dismissed.

Malabar Law and Usage—Demise—Demise by junior member of Tarwad—Onus of proof that demise was on behalf of Tarwad—Judgment of Court—Finding based on document and on statement of witness—High Court —Second appeal—Document found not to support the conclusion—Remand.

There is no presumption that when a junior member of a Malabar tarwad makes a demise, he does so on behalf of the tarwad. The onus of proving that he acted on behalf of the tarwad lies on the party affirming it.

Where the finding of a Subordinate Court is based on documentary evidence as well as on the statement of a witness and the High Court, on second appeal, finds that the documentary evidence does not support the conclusion, it will not act on the assumption that the Court of fact would have come to the same conclusion apart from the document, but will remand the case for a fresh finding on the question.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of South Malabar in Appeal Suit No. 984 of 1909, presented against the decree of the Additional District Munsif of Calicut, in Original Suit No. 596 of of 1908.

Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Iyer, for the Appellant.

Mr. J. L. Rosario, for 1st and 5th Respondents.

Mr. K. P. Govinda Menon, for 4th Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—There are two Nair houses, Edoli and Edasseri; they are both branches of the Manholi house. There are properties belonging to the Manholi house as well as to the Edoli and Edasseri branches. The question in contest in the suit was whether the property in dispute belonged to the Manholi house or to the Edoli branch. Defendants Nos. 1 to 4 are the demisees under a kanom which was made by Chennan Nair, who admittedly belonged to the Edoli branch. The plaintiff is the present senior member of that branch. It is also admitted that Chennan Nair was not at the time of the demise (Exhibit A) the Karnavan of the Manholi house. The contention of the defendants is that the property was demised by Chennan Nair on behalf of the Manholi house. There is no presumption when a junior member makes a demise that he does so on behalf of the tarwad. The onus, therefore, of proving that Chennan Nair acted on behalf of the tarwad is on the defendants. The learned Judge in the lower Appellate Court apparently placed the onus on the plaintiff, for he says "the plaintiff has, in my opinion, failed to prove that the property in suit belongs to the Edoli Tavazhi and that he has a right to maintain the suit." It is, no doubt, true that he records a finding that the property belongs to the Manholi house, but the judgment leaves room for doubt whether the Judge would have come to this conclusion on the evidence in the case apart from his view as to the onus. Moreover, in answer to the plaintiff's contention that from the year 1876 the property has been demised by members of the Edoli branch, the Judge observes "this can hardly be the case as the Edoli Tavazhi, it appears, only came into existence about 30 years ago." The Judge apparently makes this observation as to the time when the Edoli Tavazhi came into existence from the finding of the District Munsif's Court of Calicut in Original Suit No. 245 of 1901—Exhibit B. But it is, to say the least, doubtful whether that observation can be treated as evidence in this case, for there both branches were fighting in the same interest to defeat a creditor, who had attached certain properties as belonging to the Edasseri branch. Besides, the observation itself seems to show that the members of the Edoli and Edasseri Tavazhis dealt with each other as members of a common undivided Tarwad only till 1867, and that till about 1879 the outside public treated the Edoli and Edasseri Tavazhis having community of interest with each other. This seems to show that as between the members of the family themselves, the two branches did not treat each other as persons having a community of interest after 1867. At any rate, we cannot treat this observation as affording any substantial basis for the Judge's view that the Edoli Tavazhi came into existence only from 1879. Here, again, it is true that the 5th defendant states in his evidence that the kanom of 1876 was made by the Karnavan of the Manholi house, that is to say, that the Chennan Nair who made the demise was the Karnavan of the whole house and, therefore, not a member of the Edoli branch. But when a conclusion is based on documentary evidence as well as the statement of a witness and the documentary evidence is found not to support the conclusion, it is not safe to assume that the Court of fact would have come to the same conclusion apart from that document. The Judge has not referred to two documents which appear to be of the same importance, Exhibits G and G1, which show that a decree obtained against Chennan Nair the demisor was discharged, not by the Karnavan of the Manholi house but by the plaintiff, the Karnavan of the Edoli branch. The only material documentary evidence on the side of the defendants to support the view that the property belongs to the Manholi house is the fact that the patta for the plaint lands stands in the name of the 5th defendant and the plaintiff jointly. We must hold that the judgment is vitiated by the errors we have pointed out, and we must request the present District Judge to return a fresh finding on the 4th issue. If he finds that issue in the plaintiff's favour, he will also record findings on the 2nd and 3rd issues. The findings will be on the evidence on record and will be submitted within one month from the re opening of the Court after the Christmas holidays. Seven days will be allowed for filing objections.

In compliance with the above order, the District Judge of South Malabar submitted the following

FINDINGS:—It is directed by the High Court that a finding be returned on the 4th issue in the suit, viz., "Is not the plaintiff entitled to maintain the present suit as he is only an Anandiravan in the tarwad?"

The jenmi of the property in dispute, Chathanath Nambudri, demised it to Chennan Nair in 1876 and the subsequent renewal is in his name. It is not disputed that Chennan Nair was junior to the 5th defendant nor that plaintiff is the representative of Chennan Nair and head of the Edoli branch of the Manholi tarwad of which the 5th defendant is the Karnavan. If the property belongs to the Edoli branch, plaintiff admittedly has the right to sue. But the contention of the 5th defendant in the suit is that the property belongs to Manholi and that that Chennan Nair demised it on behalf of the tarwad. The burden of proving these contentions is upon the 5th defendant, but no documents have been produced to show that the title to the property is with the Manholi house and the only documentary evidence to support this contention is the patta which stands in the name of the 5th defendant and the plaintiff jointly. There is nothing to show the state of affairs with regard to the property before 1876, but it is possible that the property was once common property of the Manholi tarwad. It has been found (vide Exhibit B) that a division has occurred in the Manholi tarwad and that by lapse of time the commuutiy of interest, which once linked its two branches, the Edasseri and Edoli Tavazhis, has been severed. It is probable that when this separation took, place the Edoli branch took some of the tarwad property as its share. There is documentary evidence (vide Exhibits G and G1) on the side of the plaintiff to show independent dealing by the Edoli branch with property part of which was common tarwad property. It is unlikely that the Karnavan of the Manholi tarwad, if he had any claim to the property so dealt with, would not have been made a party to those proceedings. For the 5th defendant reliance is placed on the written statement of the present plaintiff in Original Suit No. 466 of 1901 (Exhibit I)as an admission that Chennan Nair granted the demise (Exhibit A) on his own account and that the tarwad was not concerned in the transaction. But it is probable that this plea was made by the plaintiff to support the 5th defendant with whom he was then colluding, and it may be noted that such pleas previously put forward by the plaintiff were unsuccessful and apparently made to defeat creditors. The plea of the 5th defendant in the present suit that the demise was taken benami in the name of Chennan Nair for the Karnavan of the Manholi tarwad appears to have no satisfactory evidence to support it. The prior demise, of which Exhibit A is a renewal, is dated 1876 and no evidence is forthcoming to show that any previous demise stood in the name of a Karnavan of the Manholi tarwad. On the other hand, the Edoli Tavazhi would appear to have held possession of the property in dispute since 1876. Stress was laid by the Vakil for the 5th defendant on the fact that plaintiff does not make his claim in the plaint as Karnavan of the Edoli tavazhi, but if there has been division, it does not matter whether the plaintiff describes himself as Karnavan of Manholi or Edoli, and in paras. 3 and 4 of the plaint I find that refereuce is simply made to "the tarwad" of the plaintiff. On consideration of all the real evidence available, my finding on this issue is that it has not been proved that the property in dispute belongs to the Manholi tarwad and that plaintiff is entitled to maintain the suit.

2. On the 2nd and 3rd issues, viz ,—

(2) to what rent is the plaintiff entitled, and

(3) who are liable for the payment of rent, findings are also required. There is no dispute as to the amount of rent, and I find on the second issue that the plaintiff is entitled to the rent claimed by him. On the third issue, the 1st defendant pleaded certain payments to Koru Nayar (5th defendant), but it has not been shown that the 1st defendant paid rent to the 5th defendant after due inquiry believing that the rent was due to him and the plaintiff cannot be held to be bound by these payments. The 2nd defendant disclaimed all responsibility for the land and the plaintiff, who abandoned his claim against him in the lower Court, has not clearly proved that he is liable for any rent. The 3rd and 4th defendants, who are subtenants under the 1st defendant, do not deny their liability. I find, therefore, on the 3rd issue that the 1st, 3rd and 4th defendants are liable for the rent due to the plaintiff.

This second appeal coming on for final hearing after the return of the finding from the lower Appellate Court upon the issues referred by this Court for trial, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT:—The finding is objected to by the respondent. It is, no doubt, true, as pointed out by the learned Vakil for the respondent, that the District Judge has made a mistake in supposing that the two tavazhis, the Edasseri and Edoli, became completely divided and have now no community of interest. On the other hand, it is admitted that there are properties belonging in common to both branches, although there are also properties belonging separately to each branch. But it is difficult to say in the circumstances of the case that this mistake vitiates the conclusion arrived at by the Judge. Although there are some properties belonging to both branches in common, each branch does hold separate properties; and the question is whether the property in question belongs to both together or only to the Edoli branch. The documents in the defendant's favour on that point have been considered by the District Judge, namely, the patta which is in the names of both branches and Exhibit J; and the argument to be derived from the patta would be met in exactly the same manner whether there are some properties owned in common by both branches while other properties are held separately or whether the two branches are completely divided. We, therefore, accept the finding and set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the District Munsif with costs here and in the lower Appellate Court.

The time for redemption is extended to three months from this date.

Appeal allowed.

Custom—Alienation—Kassars of Tahsil Chakwal, District Jhelum—Childless proprietor—Will in favour of sister—Collaterals of 6th degree whether can contest the alienation.

Among Kassars of tahsil Chakwal in the Jhelum District, a childless proprietor can devise the whole of his ancestral property to his sister in the presence of his collaterals in the 6th degree.

Second appeal from the order of the Divisional Judge, Rawalpindi Division, dated the 6th July 1910, affirming that of the District Judge, Rawalpindi, dated the 29th January 1910, decreeing plaintiff's claim.

Mr. Nanak Chand, for the Appellants.

Lala Durga Das, for Rai Bahadur Lala Sukh Dyal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The parties are Kassars of tahsil Chakwal in the Jhelum district, and the question before us is whether the Will whereby one Allah Dad, a childless proprietor, devised the whole of his ancestral property to his sister, Musammat Rahmtan, is valid in the presence of plaintiffs who are collaterals related to the testator in the 6th degree. The Will was executed on the 24th September 1908 and the testator died some five or six months thereafter. His mother, Musammat Gullan, is at present in possession for her life, and consequently plaintiffs seek merely a declaratory decree.

The lower Courts are agreed that the Will is invalid in the presence of plaintiffs and have, therefore, granted them the decree for which they prayed. Musammat Rahmtan has preferred a further appeal to this Court and we have heard Mr. Nanak Chand on her behalf and Mr. Durga Das on behalf of respondents. As a result, we are unable to agree with the finding of the Courts below. The burden of proof was, no doubt, at the outset upon the appellant, and it was for her to show that the custom of the parties recognised the validity of alienations such as that now under discussion. But she has, in our opinion, been able to adduce evidence which has shifted the onus probandi from her to respondents, and the latter have failed to meet the case put up by her. In the first place, appellant relies upon the entry in the Riwaj-i-am of this village prepared in 1880 which runs as follows:—

"If an owner in his life-time gift a portion or the whole of his property and give possession, he can do so; but certainly no one has hitherto made a gift to his daughter or other person in the presence of sons.

As he can make a gift, so every one can make a Will, but he rarely does so."

The last answer is significant. In 1880 the idea of alienating property by Will was probably novel, but we find it distinctly recognised, and since 1880 the practice has undoubtedly grown in favour, and the majority of the Full Bench in Musammat Bano v. Fateh Khan (1) have laid it down as an undoubted proposition of Customary law in this Province that the recognition of a power of alienation inter vivos justifies the conclusion that a power of alienating by Will is equally recognised.

Next, we have the Riwaj-i-am of 1901 as embodied in Talbot's Tribal Custom in the Jhelum District.

Question 89 at page 59, runs as follows:—

"Can a father make a gift of the whole or any specific share of his property, moveable or immoveable, ancestral or acquired, to his daughter otherwise than as her dowry, to his daughter's son, to his sister or her sons or to his son-in-law? Is his power in this respect altered if he have (1) sons (2) near kindred and no sons? If the consent of the near kindred is essential to such gifts, state the degree of kindred towards him in which the persons must stand by whom such gift can be prohibited."

This is a very complicated and embarrassing question and it may be that the people, to whom it was put, did not fully understand it with all its various parentheses and sub-parentheses. But the reply of the Mussalman tribes of the Chakwal tahsil, the Talagang Awans and Khatris, is clear and definite: "Self-acquired and moveable property may be given; but not ancestral property without the consent of the reversioners to the fourth degree."

We see no reason to doubt that this answer was given with full understanding of the general question: "Can a proprietor make a gift of his ancestral estate?" The answer is:—"No, he cannot, if there are reversioners within the 4th degree, unless he first obtains their consent." The obvious inference from this is that the proprietor's rights can be controlled only by reversioners who stand within the degree specified and not by others more distantly related.

In the third place, we have a very early decision of this Court reported as Khodadad v. Bukshun (2). In the reported judgment no reference is made to the tribe of the parties but we find from Mr. Talbot's work (Appendix II, page xxi) that they were Kassars of tahsil Chakwal. In this case a gift to a sister's son was declared valid in the presence of collaterals. Again, in 1877, one Tora, a Kassar of this same Tahsil, made a gift of his land to his sister's son, Jahana, and no objection was taken by the collaterals. Mutation was accordingly effected in favour of the donee. Then, in the recent case of Karm Bakhsh v. Musammat Gulab Khatun, which was decided by the Munsif, 1st class, Rawalpindi, on the 1st June 1909, and on appeal by the Divisional Judge, on the 6th June 1910, we find reference made in the judgment of the Munsif to a case "No. 15 of Mauza Sang, Jhelum District," in which in 1865 a gift in favour of a sister's son was upheld as valid, the parties being Kassars. The Divisional Judge, in his judgment in Karm Bakhsh's case, states that "several instances" were given in the oral evidence produced by defendants to establish the power of a sonless Kassar to alienate by Will and he adds that those instances were not controverted. In that particular case itself, a sonless Kassar had made a gift of his ancestral property, by Will, in favour of his sisters and the gift was upheld upon the ground that the next reversioner had assented to it. The case is thus, of course, not directly in point, but it is relevant as showing the growing desire of persons of this tribe who have no children of their own, to give their property to their sisters. On the other hand, plaintiffs have not been able to point to a single instance in which a gift to a sister has been successfully challenged by collaterals related to the donor beyond the fourth degree. Nor have they been able to show that the consent of any such distant collateral has ever been obtained to a gift of that kind.

Mr. Durga Das has referred us to certain cases from the Jhelum District in which gifts to sisters or sister's sons have been declared invalid by the custom of Muhammadan Mair Rajputs; Haidar Khan v. Jahan Khan (3), Kothi Jats, Hayat v. Hidayat (4) and Kanial Jats, Bakshi v. Rahim Dad (5). But we are unable to see the relevancy of these decisions to the question now before us, and in any event the instances referred to in the judgment reported as Lachhman v. Bhagwan Sahai (6) (Kahats of Tahsil Chakwal) may be set off against them.

(2) 17 P. R. 1867.

In our opinion, appellant has been able to adduce sufficient evidence in support of the Will to throw the onus upon the respondents of proving that a devise to her is invalid in the presence of collaterals related in the sixth degree, and they have failed to discharge this onus.

We, accordingly, accept the appeal and dismiss plaintiff's suit with costs throughout.

Appeal accepted.

Custom—Chamars—Right to skins of carcases in lieu of services—Services not performed—Appointment of another person for performance of services—Jurisdiction of Civil Court—Right to sue—Wajib-ul-arz, how far binding on non-proprietors.

Plaintiffs, certain Chamars of a village, were by custom allowed the skins of animals dying in a privately managed institution known as a Go-Shala, in return for services rendered. The manager of the institution found that the plaintiffs were not performing those services satisfactorily; he, accordingly, appointed the defendant, a Chamar of a neighbouring village, in their place.

Plaintiffs, who admittedly had performed no services for over a year, sued defendant for the value of hides of carcases removed during the period:

Held, (1) that the Civil Courts had no jurisdiction to interfere in any way with the appointment of the defendant by the manager;

(2) that if the plaintiffs had been improperly ousted from the Go-Shala, their remedy was to get the proprietors of the institution to bring pressure on the manager to re-instate them or to appoint a fresh manager to carry out their instructions;

(3) that the non-proprietary residents of the village were not bound by the provisions of the Wajib-ul-arz in respect of an institution which they managed for themselves as regards their own cattle;

(4) that the suit ought to be dismissed.

Petition, under section 115 of Act V of 1908, for revision of the order of the District Judge, Delhi District, dated the 15th November 1911, reversing that of the Munsif 1st class, at Delhi, dated the 28th August 1911, dismissing plaintiff's claim.

Rai Bahadur Lala Sukh Dyal, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Raushan Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The sum of money immediately involved in this case is comparatively trifling, but the lower Appellate Court's decree has an effect much beyond the amount actually decreed to the plaintiffs, and the decision is of so extraordinary a character that I feel bound to interfere in revision on the ground that a material irregularily has been committed in respect of the attitude which Civil Courts should take upon a claim of the kind.

The plaintiffs are certain chamars of a village who were by custom allowed the skins of animals dying in a privately managed institution known as a Go-Shala, in return for services rendered. The manager of the institution found that the plaintiffs were not performing these services satisfactorily and appointed the petitioner defendant, a Chamar of a neighbouring village, in their place. The plaintiffs, though admittedly performing no services for over a year, claimed Rs. 100 as the value of hides on carcases removed during the period and had been given a decree by the District Judge for Rs. 30.

This appears to me an unjustifiable invasion of the private rights of the manager of the institution, besides being unfair to the petitioner, who is thereby made to pay on a random calculation a sum of money which is considerable to him, though there is no pretence that he is in any way responsible for the arrangement made by the manager. The decision is all the more remarkable because the District Judge has himself found that the Settlement Officer rightly refused to interfere on the application originally made to him by the plaintiffs.

If the plaintiffs have been improperly ousted from the Go-Shala, their remedy is to get the proprietors of the institution to bring pressure on the manager to re-instate them, or to appoint a fresh manager to carry out their intentions. In the meanwhile, the manager is at liberty to administer the institution in his own way without interference by the Civil Courts. In any case, plaintiffs have no such immemorial rights that they should be paid for services which they have not performed, at the expense of the man selected to do the work. The non-proprietary residents of the village are not bound by the provisions of the Wajb-ul-arz in respect of an institution which they manage for themselves as regards their own cattle, and no ruling can be traced directly bearing on a case of the kind.

Holding that Civil Courts have no jurisdiction to interfere in any way, I allow the revision, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the Munsif dismissing the suit with costs to the defendant throughout.

Revision allowed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 313—Execution sale—Sale in one lot of separate parcels of land—Power of Court to sever sale—Absence of saleable interest of judgment-debtor in some of the plots—Onus of proof.

Where, in an execution sale, several parcels of land are sold in one lot and it is found that the judgment-debtor has a saleable interest in one survey number, the Court cannot, for the purposes of section 313 of the Code of Civil Procedure, sever the single sale.

Sonaram Dass v. Mohiram Dass, 28 C. 235 referred to.

When the saleable interest of a judgment-debtor in one of the numbers thus sold is admitted, it is for the decree-holder to prove that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property sold.

Appeal against the decree of the District Court of Coimbatore, in Appeal Suit No. 114 of 1908, presented against the order of the District Munsif of Coimbatore, dated 10th June 1908, in E. P. No. 10 of 1908 in O. S. No. 495 of 1903.

Mr. T. Subrahmaniya Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. C. S. Venkatachariar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The lower Appellate Court has not found the facts necessary to entitle the decree-holder to re-open the execution proceedings. Section 315 of the Code of Civil Procedure requires that it should be found that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property sold at the time of the sale. There is no such finding recorded by the lower Appellate Court. The judgment-debtor did not admit that he had no saleable interest in Survey Nos. 443 and 460. He asserted the contrary in his memorandum of appeal to the lower Appellate Court. We must, therefore, ask the lower Appellate Court to submit a finding on the question whether the judgment-debtor had a saleable interest in Survey Nos. 443 and 460 on the date of the auction-sale. Fresh evidence relating to this question may be admitted. The finding should be submitted within two months after the re-opening of the Court after the recess. Seven days will be allowed for filing objections.

In compliance with the above judgment, the District Judge of Coimbatore submitted the following

FINDING.—1. I am required to submit a finding on the issue "whether the judgment-debtor had a saleable interest in Survey Nos. 443 and 460 on the date of the auction-sale?"

2. The petitioners (plaintiffs) in the original execution petition, Execution Petition No. 104 of 1903 examined the Kurnam of the village who clearly proves that the judgment-debtors, (counter-petitioners) had no enjoyment or interest in Survey No. 443 as far as he knows and that his experience as Kurnam of the village extends over a period of 14 years past. The counter-petitioners have adduced no rebutting evidence.

3. As regards Survey No. 460, the Kurnam proves that the first counter-petitioner in Execution Petition No. 104 of 1908, Ran-gasawmy Naicken, who is the father of the 2nd and 3rd counter-petitioners, has been in enjoyment of only one-fourth of this Survey Number since the date of the partition deed Exhibit A, dated 24th June 1889 and that his one-fourth share was situated in the north west corner of Survey No. 460. His evidence also shows that none of the counter-petitioners ever enjoyed any other portion of Survey No. 460 except the north west corner. It is contended by the petitioners' Vakil that the land mortgaged in Survey No. 460 is specifically described as 6·71 acres on the eastern side of Survey No. 460 that it was this land which he purchased in execution of his decree and that as it has been now proved by the Kurnam's evidence (which is not rebutted by any evidence adduced by the counter-petitioners, that none of the counter-petitioners ever had any interest in the eastern portion of Survey No. 460, he is entitled to a finding with regard to this field also on the issue now remanded.

4. Having regard to the wording of the issue, however, all that I am now required to find is whether the judgment-debtors had a saleable interest in Survey No. 460 and evidence adduced by the petitioners clearly shows that they had a saleable interest in the north west corner of the field consisting of a one-fourth share of the entire area. The evidence of petitioners' 2nd witness, a nephew of the 1st counter-petitioner, also shows that the one-fourth share of the 1st counter-petitioner was sold in execution of another decree subsequent to the sale in execution of the petitioners' decree. There can be no doubt, therefore, that the judgment-debtors did have a saleable interest in Survey No. 460 to the extent of a one-fourth share of the entire field on the date of the auction-sale now under consideration.

5. I would also remark that the description of the counter-petitioners' share in the mortgage-deed, Exhibit D, as consisting of 6·71 acres situated on the eastern side of Survey No. 460 appears to be only an inaccurate description and does not vitiate the mortgage as creating a lien on such property as counter-petitioners possessed in any portion of Survey No. 460. The decree, therefore, and the sale in execution of the decree must, in my opinion, be held to refer to any saleable interest which the counter-petitioners possessed in any part of Survey No. 460.

6. In the result, my finding on the issue remanded with regard to Survery No. 460 is in the affirmative and with regard to Survey No. 443 in the negative.

This Civil Miscellaneous Second Appeal coming on this day for final hearing after the receipt of the finding from the lower Appellate Court, the Court delivered the following JUDGMENT.—It is unnecessary to consider whether, on the result of the present finding of the District Court, the judgment-debtor could be held to have had any interest in Survey No. 460 at the time of the sale. The defendants' right in three Survey Nos. 443, 476 and 460 was sold for a single price in one lot. It is admitted that he had a saleable interest in Survey No. 476. The decree-holder has not, therefore, proved that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property sold. See Sonaram Dass v. Mohiram Dass (1). The Court cannot, for the purposes of section 313 of the Code of Civil Procedure, sever a single sale. The orders of the lower Courts are reversed and Execution Petition No. 104 of 1903 on the file of the Munsif's Court dismissed but without costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

REGULAR CIVIL APPEALS NOS. 421 AND 461 OF 1909.

Present:—Mr. Justice Brett and Mr. Justice Sharfuddin.

C. E. GREY, OFFICIAL TRUSTEE AND EXECUTOR TO THE ESTATE OF MANIK LAL SEAL, DECEASED—FIRST PARTY—APPELLANT IN R. A. NO. 421 AND RESPONDENT IN R. A. NO. 461

RAM SHASHI ROY AND OTHERS—SECOND PARTY—AND GURUDAS KUNDU CHOWDHURY AND OTHERS—THIRD PARTY—RESPONDENTS IN R. A. NO. 421 AND APPELLANTS IN R. A. NO. 461.

Presumption—Permanent tenure, heritable and non-enhanceable—Tenancy created 50 years ago—Residential purposes—Improvements permanent—Rent unchanged—Transfers by sale—Inheritance—No attempt to eject—Recognition of transferees as tenants.

GREY v. RAM SHASHI ROY.

A tenancy was created some years before 1861. It was granted for residential purposes and since that time the land had been enclosed and improved by the tenant to form the grounds or compound of a residential building. Expenses had been incurred by the tenant on permanent improvements to the land so as to make it fit for residential purposes. The rent during all these years remained the same, though the land had of late years increased very considerably in value. The land was transferred by sale and passed by inheritance on several occasions without any objection raised by the landlords. On the contrary, they recognised the transferees as tenants receiving rents from them, and no attempt was made to eject the tenants:

Held, that all these facts justified the conclusion that the tenancy was a permanent, transferable and heritable tenancy at a fixed rental.

The mere retention of the name of the old tenant for the purpose of identifyiug the holding in the Sherista of the landlord is not in itself sufficient to indicate that there was no recognition by the landlord that the tenancy was heritable and transferable.

Appeals frcm the decree of the District Judge of Hooghly, dated August 4th, 1909.

Mr. B. Chuckerbutty, Counsel, and Babus Shoroshi Charan Mitra and Hari Charan Ganguly, for the Appellant in R. A. No. 421 and Respondent in R. A. No. 461.

Mr. S. P. Sinha, Counsel, and Babus Baidyanath Dutt, Man Mohun Dutt and Romesh Chandra Sen, for the Respondents in R. A. No. 421 and Appellants in R. A. No. 461.

JUDGMENT.—The two appeals, Nos. 421 and 461 of 1909, are directed against the judgment and decree of the District Judge of Hooghly in a reference made to him by the Land Acquisition Collector under section 30 of the Land Acquisition Act.

It appears that Government proposed to acquire three plots of land in Ram Kristapur, Pergunnah Boro, in Howrah for the purpose of building a District Jail, Police lines and official residence. The lands were in what was described as Seal's Bagan and consisted of (1) Premises No. 36, Seal's Garden, Ram Kristapur, Howrah, and included a residence and compound covering an area of 21 bighas;

(2) Premises No. 35 Seal's Garden Lane, Ram Kristapur, Howrah, being 7 bighas of land including a residence and compound, and (3) a parcel of Bastee land 15 bighas in area.

The total of the three plots covered 43 bighas. An agreement was entered into on the 2nd October 1905 between Manik Lal Seal and the Collector of Howrah as representing Government by which Manik Lal Seal agreed to accept Rs. 3,70,660 as the price of the land to be acquired half of which, Rs. 1,85,330, was to be paid at once and the rest on conclusion of the land acquisition proceedings. It was further agreed that any amount which the Land Acquisition Deputy Collector would eventually have to pay to persons other than Manik Lal Seal would be deducted from the second half.

For the purposes of acquisition, the three plots were afterwards divided up into smaller plots, and the 10th plot, which is the only one we have to deal with in this appeal, was divided into two parts, one of seven bighas including the residence and the other of 14 bighas, 11 cottas, 3 chattaks including the garden or compound. This second plot of 14 bighas, 11 cottas, 3 chattaks is the subject of the reference out of which the appeal before us arises.

The total amount of compensation awarded by the Collector for this area of land was Rs. 77,491-6-6 and the correctness of this award is not disputed.

There were three sets of claimants for apportionment of the compensation.

(1) Manik Lal Seal who claimed to be a permanent tenure-holder of the land.

(2) Ram Shoshi Roy and others, described as the Roys, who claimed to be 8-anna landlords, and (3) Gurudass Kundu Chowdhury and others, described as the Kundus, who claimed to be the landlords of the remaining 8-annas.

The Collector apportioned the compensation among the 3 sets of claimants by giving to each of the sets of landlords a half share of 20 years' purchase of the rental amounting to Rs. 255-5 each or both together to Rs. 510-10 and the balance of Rs. 76,980-12-6 to Manik Lal Seal as his share as being a permanent tenure-holder on the land.

The landlords put in a petition of objection in which they claimed to be entitled to the whole of the compensation and alleged that Manik Lal Seal, being a mere tenant at-will, was entitled to nothing. The reference was accordingly made to the Civil Court on the 16th August 1906, and on the 7th September 1906, after the reference had been received by the Civil Court, the claimant Manik Lal Seal put in a petition alleging that the whole of the land acquired was his lakheraj land and that, therefore, he was entitled to the whole of the compensation.

The case was afterwards taken up by the District Judge. Evidence, oral and documentary, was adduced by both parties and judgment was delivered on the 4th August 1909. The claimant Manik Lal Seal died during the trial of the case before the Judge and was represented by the Official Assignee who had been appointed executor to his estate.

The Judge in disposing of the reference held that the Official Assignee on behalf of Manik Lal Seal was not entitled to raise the question that the land was lakheraj as the ground had not been taken before the Collector and no objection had been raised by Manik Lal Seal to the apportionment of the capitalised value of the rent to the two sets of proprietors. In support of that view, he relied on the case of Abu Bakir v. Peary Mohan Mukerjee (1) and the case of Gobinda Kumar Roy Chowdhury v. Debendra Kumar Roy Chowdhury (2).

He then proceeded to deal with the main dispute between the claimants, that is to say, whether Manik Lal Seal and his heirs were tenants-at-will on the land as the landlords alleged or permanent tenure-holders as was alleged on behalf of Manik Lal Seal. He found that Manik Lal Seal had a permanent right as a tenant on the land, but that it was not proved that the rent of the land was fixed in perpetuity. Accordingly, he modified the award of the Collector by allowing to Manik Lal Seal's estate two-thirds of the balance of the compensation after deducting the shares awarded to the landlords which $\frac{2}{3}$rd share amounted to Rs. 51,660-15 and by allowing to each of the sets of landlords Rs. 12,915-3-9 or half of the $\frac{1}{3}$rd share, of the balance which amounted to Rs. 25,830-5-6.

Against the judgment and decree of the Judge, both parties have appealed: the Official Assignee on behalf of Manik Lal Seal's estate in Appeal No. 421 of 1909 and the landlords in Appeal No. 461 of 1909. The appeals have been heard together and will be governed by this judgment.

(1) 34 C. 451.
(2) 12 C. W. N. 98.

In support of Appeal No. 421, the learned Counsel frankly admitted that he was not prepared to question the correctness of the view taken by the lower Court that, after his client had consented to the payment of the capitalized value of the rent to the landlords out of the compensation money, it was not open to him to seek in the present case to press his claim to the compensation on the basis that the land acquired was included in the lakheraj land which he held in Ram Kristapur but he suggests that he might be allowed to rely on the contention that the land was a part of the lakheraj land in order to support the case which he set up in the lower Court that he held the position of a permanent tenant on the land. In support of the case that the land acquired was really a portion of his client's original lakheraj land, the learned Counsel wished to rely on the map prepared for the purposes of the suit (No. 16 of 1861), under Regulation II of 1819, which was finally disposed of on appeal by the High Court. In that map, the land was divided into three plots and the learned Counsel, relying on that map and the area of the land stated to be in dispute in that case and the map prepared for the purposes of his client in this case and the report of the Engineer who prepared the map, argued that as the area given of plot No. 3 in the map (i.e., map No. 2) prepared in 1861 corresponded with the area found to have been included in plot C of the map (i.e., map No. 1) prepared for the purposes of the present case and as the map prepared for the purpose of the present case covered the lands in suit, therefore, it must be concluded that the lands in the present suit which were acquired by the Collector were also included in Suit No. 16 of 1861. The map prepared in 1861 on which the learned Counsel relies was not prepared to scale and the note given in the map with regard to an elliptical portion of the land on the south and adjoining the Garden Road does not appear to support the contention that that portion of land was included in that case. The areas and the boundaries of the lands are also not sufficiently ascertained and determined so as to render it safe on a comparison between the two maps to arrive at a distinct conclusion that the lands in suit in the present case are really the lands covered by the case in 1861

Furthermore, we do not think that it is possible for us in the present case to support the claim set up by the Official Assignee on behalf of Manik Lal Seal's estate to the compensation awarded on the basis that Manik Lal Seal's estate had a permanent tenany in the lands acquired, or the basis of a finding that the lands were, in fact, held by the predecessors of Manik Lal Seal as lakheraj lands and not as included in a permanent tenancy. We think, therefore, that in the present case, the claims advanced on behalf of Manik Lal Seal's estate by the Official Assignee must succeed or fall on proof that Manik Lal Seal and his predecessors had a permanent tenancy in the lands acquired.

Proceeding then on the basis that the lands acquired formed a part of Tawzi No. 3994, that is to say, chur Ram Kristapur and not mauza Ramkrisnapur, the evidence adduced establishes that the lands were permanently settled by Government in the year 1846. The lands were then described as in the possession of Krisna Sundari Dasi as tenant who was the wife of Srinath Mullik. These lands in 1861 appear to have passed into the hands of Hara Chandra Lahiri from whom they eventually passed to the family of the Seals and to the predecessors-in-interests of Manik Lal seal. The case now put forward on behalf of Manik Lal Seal's estate is that, at the time when the tenancy was first created or before it passed into the hands of the Seals, it was a permanent tenancy at a rental of Rs. 125 for 25 bighas of land. It appears that in 1861, these lands had passed into the possession of Hira Lal Seal and others as purchasers of the tenant's right and that, at that time, these lands with others to the south of them had been included in what is described as the Seal's garden and had been encircled by a balustrade reaching up to the Government Road. At that time, there was a building which appears to be the same as the residential building which was included in plot No. 1 previously referred to, consisting of 21 bighas and described as 36 Seal's garden, and the 17 bighas which form the subject of the present reference appear to have formed the compound of that residence. The evidence adduced shows that that condition of affairs continued from 1861 down to the time of the present acquisition. Evidence was adduced on behalf of the landlords claimants to prove that this land was low-lying land, that it was subject to inundation from the river, and that it could not have been included in any permanent tenure. It seems, however, that the inundation was considerably exaggerated, that between the lands acquired and the river there has been for years one, if not two, Government Roads with native bastis, that is to say, lands covered with native huts on the land between and that the 17 bighas appear to have had the advantages and amenities of most of the lands in the compounds of houses in that locality. The rent receipts which have been filed and the evidence adduced also go to support the conclusion that from 1861 at least, if not from earlier times, the rent of the land has been practically unchanged. The only change which has been suggested by the learned Counsel as having taken place is that the odd rent which was fixed in Sicca rupees was afterwards reduced to Government rupees. We think that that change is not sufficient to indicate that there was any real variation in the rent from the time when the tenancy was created.

The learned Judge in arriving at the conclusion that the appellant had a permanent tenure in the lands acquired relied on the following facts:—

(1). Uninterrupted possession, probably exceeding 50 years.

(2). Substantial and costly improvements on the lands effected by the tenant.

(3). Recognition by the superior landlords of the tenancy as transferable and hereditary and

(4). The absence of any attempt on the part of the superior landlords to eject the tenant during this long period of years.

The learned Counsel who appears for the respondents in this appeal does not dispute that in this case there has been uninterrupted possession for 50 years but he argues that the appellant has failed to prove that he has effected any substantial or costly improvements on the land. He suggests that the only building which the Land Acquisition Deputy Collector found on the land was the balustrade enclosing the land and this cannot be regarded as a substantial or costly improvement. He also argues that because in the receipts the tenure throughout is described as the tenancy in the name of Hara Chandra Lahiri and the Seals, the predecessors-in-interest of Manik Lal Seal, having been termed and described as sarbarakars, it shows that there was, in fact, no recognition by the superior landlords that the tenancy was hereditary or transferable: and, to oppose the argument that there has been no attempt on the part of the superior landlords to eject the tenant, the learned Counsel relies on the notice of ejectment dated 20th Aswin 1310 corresponding to October 1904 as indicating that landlords did not accept the position that the tenant could not be ejected. We have considered these arguments and we do not think that they sufficiently meet the case on which the learned Judge has based his conclusion. The land at the time when the tenancy was created appears to have been newly formed chur land and, in course of years, this has been converted into the compouud of a residential dwelling-house. This improvement could not have been effected without raising and levelling the soil of the land and there can be in this case no doubt that, whether or not costly buildings were constructed on the land itself, the land was taken for the purpose of forming a compound for such a building and for adding to the amenities of such a building and increasing its attractions and its value. The railing enclosing the land may not have been very costly but it clearly indicates that the person who had taken the tenancy was under the belief that this tenancy was something considerably higher than that of a mere tenant-at-will; and in fact, we think that the inclusion of the land within the walls for the purpose of forming a compound for the house goes a long way to indicate that the tenancy, as created at first, was intended to be permanent. The mere introduction of the words "sarbarakar" in the receipts is not, in our opinion, sufficient to indicate that there was no recognition by the superior landlords that the land was saleable and heritable. In fact, the land appears to have passed by the sale from the Mulliks to Hara Chandra Lahiri and from Hara Chandra Lahiri to the Seals and after coming into the possession of the Seals, it appears to have descended by inheritance to Manik Lal Seal. The landlords, for reasons best known to themselves, appear to have retained the name of Hara Chandra Lahiri as the tenant for a period long beyond the possible term of his natural life and, in the circumstances, we are unable to say that the landlords did not recognize the transfers of the land by sale and inheritance. The notice of ejectment appears to us to prove very little. It was served in 1904 when there can be no doubt that rumours of the acquisition were afloat and, for the reason that for the previous period of 60 years, there had been no attempt to eject the tenant, we are unable to regard it as of any value as indicating that, when the tenancy was created, it was intended to be a tenancy-at-will from which the tenant could be ejected at the wish of the landlords.

In support of Appeal No. 461 of 1909, which is preferred on behalf of the landlords, the same arguments have been used as those advanced to oppose Appeal No. 421. Further, in support of the contention that the interest which the estate of Manik Lal Seal had in the land acquired was merely that of a tenant-at-will, reliance is placed on receipts of rent Exhibit A, dated 30th Chaitra 1310 (April 1904) and Exhibit A1, dated 30th Chaitra 1312 (13th April 1906), both of which were signed by persons who on the dates mentioned were the cashiers of the Moti Lal Seal's estate. In the latter, the tenure is described as "Bastu ticca, and Gar-mauroshi", while in the former there is a note to the effect; "There is no mention of tenant's interest in the dakhila." Reliance is also placed on the plaint in a Rent Suit No. 224 of 1897, dated 10th April 1897 brought by Bishumbhar Dutt Roy against Gopal Lal Seal and others as 'sarbarakars' in possession of the lands and tenures of the late Hara Chandra Lahiri, and in which the rent is described as "Ticca rent" which was decreed on the 22nd July 1897, also on a similar plaint in Rent Suit No. 244 of 1904, dated 13th April 1909, brought by Ram Sashi Roy and another, plaintiffs, in which the defendants are Manik Lal Seal and others and are described as sarbarakars and also as ticca tenants of bastu land which was decreed and on the extracts from the general Registers of suit and of execution of decrees showing that these decrees were duly executed.

The entry "Bastu ticca Gar-mauroshi" in the receipts Exhibit A and the entry "ticca" in the copy of the plaint in Suit No. 244 of 1897, appear from the documents themselves, which have been laid before us by the Counsel for the respondent (the Manik Lal Seal's estate) not to be free from suspicion and certainly look like interpolations. The learned Counsel for the landlords appellants points, however, to a similar entry describing the rent as ticca rent in another plaint filed by the landlords in 1899.

We are not prepared to attach much importance to the entries in these documents, some of which are not free from suspicion. In themselves, they certainly fail to establish that the tenancy of Manik Lal Seal and his predecessors was only that of a tenant-at-will.

Reference on behalf of the appellants in this appeal is also made to the Settlement proceedings in 1846 Exhibit T (1), in which it is noted that nobody makes any claim of Mauroshi right, also to the deed of sale of the property executed by Bishambhar Datt Roy on the 18th August 1897 in favour of Ram Moy Roy, in which two encumbrances on the property in favour of persons other than the Seals were specifically mentioned and it was stated that no other permanent rights in any lands in the property had been given to any tenants.

These documents also do not appear to us to be entitled to much weight as proving that the rights of the Seals in the lands acquired were merely those of tenants-at-will. At the time of the Settlement in 1846, the land was all chur land and the tenure which finally passed by purchase to the Seals was evidently created later. The recital in the deed of sale of one of the predecessors-in-title of the landlord appellants is also not of much value as against the tenant respondent.

The evidence adduced on both sides, in our opinion, supports the conclusion that the tenancy or tenure was created some years before 1861, that at the time it was created it was granted for residential purposes and that since that time the land has been enclosed and improved to form the grounds or compound of a residential building, that expenses have been incurred on permanent improvements to the land so as to make it fit for the purpose for which it was purchased, and that it has from before 1861 been enclosed in a tract of land described as the Seal's garden. The rent during all these years has remained the same, though the land has of late years increased very considerably in value. The land has been transferred by sale and has passed by inheritance on several occasions without any objection raised by the landlords, and on the contrary, the landlords have recognized the transferees as tenants by receiving rents from them. The mere retention of the name of the old tenant for the purpose of identifying the holding in the Sheristá of the landlord is not in itself sufficient to indicate that there was no recognition by the landlords that the tenancy was heritable and transferable. And no attempt was made from 1861, and before that date to eject the tenants or to serve any notice of ejectment till 1904, when it must have been generally known that Government was about to acquire the land for public purposes.

All these facts are sufficient, in accordance with the principles laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the cases of Upendra Krishna Mandal v. Ismail Khan Mahomed (3); Nilratan Mandal v. Ismail Khan Mahomed (4) and Nabakumari Debi v. Behari Lal Sen (5), to justify the conclusion that the tenancy set up by the Official Assignee on behalf of the estate of Manik Lal Seal was a maurasi mokarrari tenancy, that is to say, a permanent, transferable and heritable tenancy at a fixed rental.

That being so, we must follow the principle laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the cases which we have mentioned and hold that the landlords are only entitled to the capitalised value of the rental out of the compensation and that the balance of the compensation must be awarded to the permanent tenant or tenure-holder.

The result is that we decree the Appeal No. 421 of 1909 with costs and dismiss Appeal No. 461 of 1909 with costs. The judgment and decree of the lower Court is modified and the award made by the Collector appropriating the compensation between the

The infringement of a trade-mark is a continuing wrong and so long as the infringement continues, a fresh cause of action arises de die in diem.

In India, a plaintiff can maintain a suit for infringement of trade-mark even if he has not proved registration of his trade-mark.

In a suit for infringement of trade-mark, it is not necessary to prove that any one has been actually deceived.

It is sufficient if it is proved that the defendant contemplates committing or has threatened to commit an infringement.

The question is not whether a purchaser has been deceived but whether he is likely to be deceived.

Nemi Chand v. C. W. Wallace, 34 C. 495 at p. 408; 11 C. W. N. 537; T. Barlow v. Gobind Ram, 24 C. 364; 1 C. W. N. 281, relied upon.

In deciding whether there has been an infringement of plaintiff's trade-mark, the Court has to see whether the device used by the defendant is such a colourable imitation of the plaintiffs' mark as would be calculated to deceive the ultimate purchaser. The question is not what would be the effect on brokers or large dealers but whether the mark is calculated to deceive incautious, ignorant or unwary purchasers.

Nemi Chand v. C. W. Wallace, 34 C. 495 at p. 408; 11 C. W. N. 537; Badische Aniline and Soda Fabrik v. Maneckji Shapurji Katrak, 7 B. 584, followed.

If as the result of an arbitration, another trader has been allowed to use a trade-mark more closely resembling plaintiff's mark than that of defendant, that is no reason why the defendant should not be restrained from using other marks calculated to deceive the public.

For damages to be recovered for infringement of trade-mark, it is not necessary that special damage should be proved.

It is sufficient to show that plaintiff's right has been invaded, in which case, some damages, even if only nominal, will be given.

Second appeal from the order of the Divisional Judge, Delhi Division, dated 25th June 1910, reversing that of the District Judge, Delhi, dated 29th March 1910, dismissing plaintiff's claim.

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi, for the Appellant.

Mr. Shah Nawaz and Lala Sarda Ram, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This judgment disposes of Appeals Nos. 805 and 806, and the Cross-Appeals Nos. 1147 and 1146.

Hamidullah is the plaintiff in both the cases; Abdul Salam is the defendant in one case and Muhammad Ishaq and another are defendants in the other.

The cases relate to alleged infringement of plaintiff's trade-mark, namely, a pair of scissors, under which he sells balls of thread in the Delhi market. Defendants also sell thread in similar balls and packed in similarly got up paper bags to those of the plaintiff.

The description of the bags, etc., is given in the judgments of the first Court at page 3 of the paper-books in Appeals Nos. 805 and 806. The plaintiff's trade mark is, as already stated, a pair of scissors, the blades of which are partly open. Abdul Salam, appellant in Appeal No. 805, has two marks, first, two staples with rings at one end placed crosswise at about the same angle as that at the opening of the scissor blades; second, two crossed rods, also with rings at one end, one of the 2 rods having its other end threaded like a screw, that of the other being plain.

The mark of the appellants in Appeal No. 806 is 2 crossed spoons, the handles of the spoons being shaped like knife blades and the bowls being unshaded.

The first Court dismissed the suits holding that though the defendants' marks bore a general resemblance to the scissors' mark of plaintiff, the resemblance was too slight to deceive any one and there had, therefore, been no infringement of plaintiff's trade-mark.

The lower Appellate Court, on the other hand, held that the marks of defendants were distinctly calculated to deceive the public and to induce ordinary customers to believe that they were purchasing a make which was sold under another and older mark.

It, therefore, gave plaintiff the injunctions prayed for and costs, but did not allow any damages, holding that actual damage was not proved. From these decrees the defendants have appealed, and there are cross-appeals by the plaintiff praying for Rs. 900 on account of damages in each case. Appeals Nos. 807 and 1149 which were heard along with these ones are cross-appeals in another trade-mark case in which the parties are different, though many of the facts are the same. They are disposed of by a separate judgment of to-day's date.

Mr. Shadi Lal began his argument for appellants in Appeal No. 806 by urging the two points disposed of by the Divisional Judge in the 2nd para. of his judgment (page 7 of the paper-book in Appeal No. 805). The plea of limitation was not seriously urged after we had called Counsel's attention to section 23 of the Limitation Act which deals with the case of a continuing wrong independent of contract.

We have no doubt that the infringement of a trade-mark is such a case, and that a fresh cause of action arises de die in diem so long as the infringement continues; see Sanjiva Row's Limitation Act, cases cited under section 23, pages 218 to 220. As regards the other plea that Karm Ilahi the original owner of the scissors' mark signed as an attesting witness the sale-deed whereby the original owner of the "crossed spoons" mark transferred it to others, we are in agreement with the Divisional Judge. Prima facie, the deed shows that a single spoon mark was sold, and not a crossed spoons mark.

Mr. Shadi Lal also argued that plaintiff could not maintain the suit as he had not proved registration of his trade-mark. This is the law in England since July 1st, 1876, see Kerly on Trade-marks, page 7, 3rd Edition, but it is not the law in this country.

The next point urged by Mr. Shadi Lal was that there was no proof that any one had been deceived. It is, however, not necessary that such proof should be forthcoming. Kerly at page 442 of his work says:—"The grant of an injunction in Trade-mark cases is governed by the general rules governing it where other rights are concerned. There must be some threat or probability that the infringement will be commenced, continued or repeated, or the Court will not interfere; but if an actual infringement is shown to have occurred. that is usually sufficient". Further on he says: "It is not even necessary that any actual infringement should have taken place if it is proved that the defendant contemplates committing or has threatened to commit one". This principle was followed in Nemi Chand v. C. W. Wallace (1); at page 508 the following passage occurs: "There is no evidence in this case that any body has been deceived, but the question is not whether a purchaser has been deceived, but whether he is likely to be deceived."

Mr. Shadi Lal referred us to T. Barlow v. Gobindram (2) and Muhammad Ishaq v. Alaf Khan (3). In the former, it was laid down that "it is only when the use of the name or number (in dispute) deceives, or is reasonably likely to deceive the public that it can be interfered with or prevented. There must be a reasonable probability of purchasers being deceived." There is nothing in this opposed to the passages quoted by us from Nemi Chand v. C. W. Wallace (1).

In Muhammad Ishaq v. Alaf Khan (3), it was held that the colour and size of a label could not be regarded as a constituent part of a Trade-mark. This is not in point here for though the colour and size of defendants' labels are practically identical with those of the plaintiff, that is not what he objects to; he objects to the similarity of the device.

This brings us to the real point at issue, namely, whether the marks used by the defendants so resemble plaintiff's scissors' mark that there is a reasonable probability of the ordinary purchaser being deceived.

In this connection the remarks in Sebastian on Trade-marks at pages 144 and 145 of the 3rd Edition should be borne in mind.

(1) 34 C. 495; 11 C. W. N. 537.
(2) 24 C. 364; 1 C. W. N. 281.

He says: "it would be a mistake to suppose that the resemblance must be such as would deceive persons who should see the two marks placed side by side. If a purchaser looking at the article offered to him would naturally be led, from the mark impressed on it, to suppose it to be the production of the rival manufacturer and would purchase it in that belief, the Court considers the use of such a mark to be fraudulent. But I go further. I do not consider the actual physical resemblances of the two marks to be the sole question for consideration. If the goods of a manufacturer have, from the mark or device he has used, become known in the market by a particular name, I think that the adoption by a rival trader of any mark which will cause his goods to bear the same name in the market, may be as much a violation of the right of that rival as the actual copy of his device.

The natural consequence of marking goods so as to cause them to bear the same name in the market as those of a well known firm is to deceive the ultimate purchaser, and such deception will be restrained, even though the original purchaser is not deceived".

Adopting these principles, we have to see not whether the retail dealer who purchases from defendants will be deceived, but whether the ultimate purchaser will be.

In Badische Aniline and Soda Fabrik v. Moneckji Shapurji (4), this principle was followed. Sargent, C. J. said:—"The question in a case of this description is not what would be the effect on brokers or even dealers in Bombay, but how the label would be likely to strike incautious or unwary purchasers, such as are to be found more particularly in the Mofussal".

In Nemi Chand v. C. W. Wallace (1), it was held that the Court had to consider whether the mark was calculated to deceive incautious, ignorant or unwary up-country purchasers. See also in this connection the dictum of James, L. J. in Singer Manufacturing Company v. Loog (5), quoted on page 1, Kerly on Trade-marks, 3rd Edition. We have now to decide the main question in these two cases which is as already stated whether the devices used by the defendants are such colourable imitations of the plaintiff's mark that they must be held calculated to deceive the ultimate purchaser. Upon this question, after a careful comparison of the devices in question with that of the plaintiff, we have no hesitation in agreeing with the decision of the Divisional Judge, which is set out in the 2nd paragraph at page 8 of the paper-book in Appeal No. 805.

The crossed-spoons device, even on the green labels affixed to the larger packages, is to a casual observer like a pair of scissors. The spoons are not like any spoons which we have ever seen; the bowls are left unshaded so as to look like the handles of a pair of scissors, and the handles are like the blades of a pair of scissors or like knives. There can be no reasonable doubt that the intention of the defendants-appellants in Appeal No. 806 was to have the mark resembling plaintiff's scissors' mark and so to deceive intending purchasers. The crossed staples and rods used by Abdul Salam do not on the large scale bear so much resemblance to plaintiff's Trade-mark but as pointed out by the learned Divisional Judge when the scale is reduced, as in the case of the small circular red tickets placed on each ball of thread—and it must be remembered that these are what are sold to the ultimate purchaser—, the resemblance is very striking, and there is a strong probability that the ignorant or unwary customer would be deceived; wanting to buy scissors or "khainchee" mark thread, he would generally be quite satisfied when shown the defendant's devices on the small balls and would think he was getting the well-known make of the plaintiff. The argument put forward by the first Court in its judgment (page 5 last para. of paper-book in Appeal No. 805) has not been urged before us and we do not consider it to have any force. Even if as the result of arbitration, another trader has been allowed to use a Trade-mark more closely resembling the "scissors" mark than those of the defendants, that is no reason why the latter should not be restrained from using other marks calculated to deceive the public.

We, therefore, after considering all the facts of these cases and consulting the authorities, agree with the lower Appellate Court that defendant's marks are infringements of plaintiff's Trade-mark, and that plaintiff is entitled to injunctions.

VELUSAMI TEVAR v. AROKYA UDAYAN.

With regard to plaintiff's appeals, we find there is no sufficient proof of special damage, but for damages to be recovered it is not necessary that special damage should be proved; it is sufficient to show that plaintiff's right has been invaded, in which case some damages, even if only nominal, will be given. See the Law of Trade Marks by Sebastian, page 256, 3rd Edition and Kerly on Trade Marks, page 452.

Karam Elahi v. Abdul Aziz (6) was also one of infringement of this "Scissors" mark and was brought by plaintiff's predecessor. In that this Court did not award any damages, but the case was rather different.

In the present cases, having regard to all the circumstances, we think plaintiff is entitled to some damages and have decided to allow him Rs. 100 in each.

The defendant's appeals are dismissed with costs.

The appeals of the plaintiff are accepted so far that he will be given a decree for Rs. 100 in each case in addition to the injunction; he will also get Court-fees and Pleader's fees in all Courts in proportion to the decrees and all his other costs.

AROKYA UDAYAN AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Landlord and Tenant—Grant of permanent occupancy-rights to community - Express or implied surrender of the right—Burden of proof—Sub-division of lands by grantees—Variation in extent—Presumption.

Where permanent occupancy-rights have been granted to certain individuals for the benefit of a community to which they belong, the onus of proving an express or implied surrender of such rights lies on the party affirming it.

The sub-division of the lands and even the surrender of a portion thereof by the grantees will not be inconsistent with the latter continuing to hold the lands in their occupation on the terms of the original grant, i.e., by right of permanent occupancy, although community of interest may have ceased as between themselves.

If the same lands had been held by different persons in different years, this would be prima facie evidence of the tenure being inconsistent with the continuance of the rights under the original grant.

Material variation in the extent of the lands held in each year might lead to the same inference, though it might also be explicable on the ground that the pattas for each year were only for the extent cultivated during the year.

Second appeals against the decrees of the District Court of Madura, in A. S. Nos. 248 and 250 to 273 of 1907, presented against the decrees of the District Munsif of Paramakudy, in Original Suits Nos. 25 and 27 to 50 of 1905.

Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar, for the Appellants

Mr. S. Sreenivasa Iyengar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—These are suits to eject defendant in each case from the land held by him in the Inam village of Pathur which is held by plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 as Sarva Maniyam Inam. Plaintiffs Nos. 3 and 4 are mortgagees under the 1st and 2nd plaintiffs.

According to the plaintiffs, the defendants hold their land on leases granted by the 3rd and 4th plaintiffs for the Fasli years 1311 to 1313. The defendant's case is that 500 kurukamas of land were leased to their ancestors the Nathambadi Christains by the inamdars in 1861 in the names of two persons, Sourimathu and French, on a permanent occupancy-right and that they are not liable to be ejected. The plaintiffs admitted the lease of 1861 but contended that it was made by the above-named two individuals for their own benefit only, that the lease was abandoned by those two individuals and that subsequently different portions of land were leased from time to time to the defendant's ancestors and to the defendants. The plaintiffs say that the defendants have been evicted and were out of possession during Faslis 1307 to 1310 and were let into occupation again in Fasli 1311. The lower Appellate Court has found that the letting of 1861 was really made for the benefit of the families of all the Nathambadi Christians and not for the benefit of the Sourimuthu and French alone, and we accept this finding.

We also concur with the District Judge in holding that the lease of 1861, of which Exhibit DD is a copy, conferred a permanent right of occupancy on the lessees. There is no evidence of any express surrender of their rights under Exhibit DD. On the other hand, it is admitted that the defendants were accepting separate pattas from the plaintiffs for different portions of the 500 kurukkams, that the inamdar instituted separate suits against them for rent and that some of them sued the inamdar separately in 1895 to compel him to give them separate pattas. The District Munsif, who passed a decree in favour of the plaintiffs, observes, in paragraph 12 of his judgment, with reference to the pattas issued to and accepted by the defendants: "I find that the same land is not cultivated by the same tenant in all Faslis or for any series of Faslis continuously." He then points out that the extent of the land included in the patta of each ryot varies in different years. In paragraph 16, he says: "From the above it is seen that the lands included in the pattas form only a portion of the 500 Kurukkams referred to in Exhibit DD., that the defendants have not been in possession of the lands claimed by them uniformly or for any consecutive years." He further observes that the public accounts, Exhibits D series to H series, along with the pattas show that the defendant's possession and enjoyment have not been such as to justify the finding "that the plaintiffs are not owners of the soil entitled to eject the defendants." He held that the defendants have for a long time held their lands not under Exhibit DD but under separate leases.

It is admitted by the respondent's Vakil that the lands included in Exhibit DD were sub-divided among themselves by the Nathambadi Christians. The District Judge does not say whether, as apparently found by the Munsif, the Nathambadi Christians are only in possession of a portion of the 500 kurukkams. The sub-division of the lands and even the surrender of a portion thereof would not be inconsistent with the defendants' continuing to hold the lands in their occupation on the terms contained in Exhibit DD, although community of interest may have ceased as between themselves. As no express surrender of the rights under Exhibit DD has been proved, it lies on the plaintiffs to prove that there has been an implied surrender of such rights, by showing that the lands have been held on terms inconsistent with the provisions of Exhibit DD. If the same lands have been held by different defendants in different years, this fact would be prima facie evidence of the tenure being inconsistent with the continuance of the rights under Exhibit DD. Material variations in the extent of the lands held in each year might also lead to the same inference, though such a state of things might also be explicable on the ground suggested by the learned Vakil for the respondents that the pattas for each year were only for the extents cultivated during the year, and it is stated that such is the custom in the zemindary of Ramnad. But these circumstances, which require explanation and are the most important facts relied on in favour of the plaintiffs' case by the Munsif, are not referred to in the judgment of the learned District Judge. He observes that "in the face of the cowle deed, Exhibit DD, no pattas were necessary" and that "pattas must have been tendered merely for the convenience of collecting the rent due from the individual cultivators instead of through the headman mentioned in the lease." This might be so if the circumstances relied on by the Munsif and already referred to above are properly explained. But no explanation is referred to in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court. The District Judge observes that the suits by parties for separate pattas were dismissed, because "no patta could be demanded in face of Exhibit DD, the cowle." It nowhere appears in evidence that this was the ground on which the suits were dismissed. The respondent's Vakil strongly relies on Exhibit IV series as showing that the lands are still held on the terms contained in Exhibit DD. These documents were admitted in evidence by the District Judge, the Munsif having rejected them on the ground that they were unstamped. Our attention is not drawn to any evidence regarding the circumstances under which Exhibit IV series came into existence and we are, therefore, unable to come to any definite conclusion regarding the proper inference to be drawn from them.

We think, therefore, that it is desirable to have a revised finding on issues Nos. 1 and 2 in the light of the above observations. As Exhibits IV series were not in evidence in the Court of first instance, both parties may be permitted to adduce fresh evidence relating to the circumstances in which they were executed. Mr. S. Srinivasa Aiyangar has raised a new point before us in second appeal, viz., that under section 6 of the Estates Land Act, his clients have acquired a permanent right of occupancy even if they had none before and he relies on clause 4 of the section. We cannot dispose of this contention without findings on the following questions:—

(1) Whether the Puthur village is "an estate" within the meaning of the Act?

(2) If it be an estate whether any and what portions of the lands in suit are ryoti lands?

(3) Whether any and what portions of them are tank-bed lands?

Parties may adduce fresh evidence on these issues also.

We do not deal with the question of the onus of proof which has been argued before us as it should properly be dealt with by the lower Appellate Court in dealing with these issues.

This observation is also applicable to the question what presumptions there may be in favour of either party in the decision of the 1st and 2nd issues raised in the District Munsif's Court.

The findings should be submitted within two months after the re-opening of the District Court after the recess. Seven days for objections. As the jurisdiction over the lands to which the suits relate is now vested in the District Court of Ramnad, we direct that the findings called for be submitted by that Court.

In compliance with the order, the District Judge of Ramnad submitted the following FINDINGS.—On issues Nos. 1 and 2, that the suit lands were not the absolute property of plaintiffs and that defendants held them on a permanent tenancy.

On the newly-framed issues, his findings were (1) that Puthur village was an estate within the meaning of Madras Act I of 1908; (2) that suit lands were ryoti lands except such as were tank-bed lands and (3) that 150 Krukams described in Exhibit DD were tank-bed lands.

These second appeals coming on for final hearing after return of the said findings, the High Court delivered the following JUDGMENT.—There is no legal objection to the finding of the lower Appellate Court. We accept it and dismiss the second appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

*Mortgage—Execution of mortgage admitted by mortgagor but denied by his transferee—Consideration—*Onus of proof.

A., a mortgagee, brought a suit on the basis of the mortgage against the mortgagor and his transferee. The mortgagor admitted execution of the bond but denied receipt of consideration, while the transferee denied both execution and consideration:

Held, that the burden of proving the payment of consideration lay upon the plaintiff.

First appeal from an order of the District Judge of Banda, dated the 28th of November 1911.

Mr. Bajpai, for the Appellant.

Mr. Purushottam Das Tandon, for Mr. Damodar Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for sale upon a mortgage, dated the 30th of September 1896, executed by Ganraj Gir in favour of Ram Sahai, the predecessor-in-title of the plaintiffs, for Rs. 133 with interest. Subsequent to the mortgage, the mortgagor sold the property to one Lulak Singh. The plaintiffs have made both the mortgagor and the transferee parties to the suit. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit holding that the plaintiffs had failed to prove consideration. It placed the burden of proof on the plaintiffs to establish consideration for the bond. The mortgagor admitted execution of the deed but denied receipt of consideration. The transferee put the plaintiffs to the proof of both execution and consideration. The plaintiffs produced witnesses who testified simply to the execution of the deed but knew nothing as to consideration for the bond. On appeal, the lower Appellate Court held that the burden of proof was not on the plaintiffs to establish consideration for the deed, but that the burden of proving non-payment of consideration was on the defendant-transferee. In this view, it set aside the decree of the Court of first insantce and remanded the case for trial under Order XLI, rule 23. On appeal by the transferee, it is pleaded that the burden of proof is really on the plaintiffs, and that the evidence which they have produced has not shifted the onus on to the defendant-transferee of proving non-payment of consideration. It is contended that the admission contained in the bond by the mortgagor is no evidence as against the appellant who is a transferee from the latter. There has been considerable discussion on the question whether the admission in the bond is admissible in evidence as against the transferee, the present appellant. In our opinion, for the purposes of this case, it is unnecessary to actually decide the point. In the present case, the transferee is a person who has taken property by private sale from the mortgagor, and it may well be contended that he is a representative-in-interst of the mortgagor within the meaning of section 21 of the Indian Evidence Act. Assuming, however, without deciding the point that this admission is evidence as against the present appellant, nevertheless the burden of proof in such a case is primarily on the plaintiffs to establish payment of consideration, and as against the transferee who is no party to the bond and has no sufficient knowledge of the circumstances under which it was executed, that admission is of very little value and, in our opinion, is insufficient to shift the burden of proof on the defendant transferee. In the case now before us, the major part of the consideration consisted of old debts due on former bonds. The plaintiffs had ample means, if the bond were a true one, of clearly proving the old debts and of establishing payment of consideration. In our opinion, the evidence which they produced was totally insufficient to establish such payment, and the Court of first instance was quite right in primarily placing the onus of proof upon them and in holding that the burden of proof had not been shifted. We, therefore, admit the appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below and restore that of the Court of first instance. The appellant will have his costs in all Courts including fees in this Court on the higher scale.

Appeal allowed.

GANPAT—APPELLANT

versus

PREM SINGH—RESPONDENT.

In the matter of THE STAMP ACT.

Power-of-attorney—Attorney not a Legal Practitioner—Duty leviable—Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), Sch. II, Art. 10—Stamp Act (II of 1899), s. 2 (21), Sch. I, Art. 48—"Case" -- Mukhtar—Mukhtarnama—Interpretation of statutes—Technical and popular meaning of words.

A power-of-attorney empowering a person, who is neither a Vakil of a Court nor a certificated Mukhtar of a Court, to represent another in a Civil Court is governed not by Article 48 of 1st Schedule of the Stamp Act but by Article 10 of Schedule II of the Court Fees Act.

Permanand v. Sat Prasad, 33 A. 487; 9 Ind. Cas. 617; 8 A. L. J. 378, dissented from.

The first and most elementary rule of construction is that words or phrases are used in their technical meaning if they have acquired one and in their popular meaning if they have not.

The documents specified in Article 10, Schedule II of the Court Fees Act, are the documents which it was intended to exclude from the definition of a power-of-attorney in section 2 (21) of the Stamp Act.

The word "case" in the Court Fees Act must be confined to judicial cases or quasi-judicial cases as opposed to transactions.

Article 10, Schedule II, of the Court Fees Act is not restricted to documents given to and presented by duly certificated Mukhtars and Pleaders under the Legal Practitioners Act.

A Mukhtar is an attorney, whether appointed specially or generally or certificated as a legal practitioner and Mukhtarnama is a document which empowers him to act for the person by or on whose behalf the document is executed and includes a power-of-attorney in favour of a person other than a certificated Mukhtar.

Case referred by the District Judge of Sialkote, with his letter No. 901, dated the 23rd November 1911, for orders of the Chief Court.

Mr. Bevan Petman, Government Advocate, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This is a Reference under section 60, Indian Stamp Act, II of 1899. The question referred is whether a power-of-attorney empowering a person, who is neither a Vakil of a Court nor a certificated Mukhtar of a Court, to represent another in a Civil Court is governed by article 48 of the 1st Schedule of the Stamp Act II of 1899 or by Article 10 of Schedule II of the Court Fees Act, VII of 1870. The referring Court cited Parmanand v. Sat Parsad (1). We regret that we are unable to concur with the learned Judges who decided that case, and the learned Government Advocate has argued that the conclusion arrived at by them is erroneous.

Vakil High Court,

Article 10 above referred to prescribes Court-fees of annas 8, Re. 1, Rs. 2, for mukhtar-namas or vaklatnamas when presented for the conduct of any one case, the fee varying in proportion to the status of the Court or official to which or to whom it is presented. Section 2 (21) of the Stamp Act defines power-of attorney as including "any instrument (not chargeable with a fee under the law relating to Court-fees for the time being in force) empowering a specified person to act for and in the name of the person executing it."

A Mukhtar is an attorney, whether appointed, specially or generally or certificated as a legal practitioner, and a mukhtar-nama is a document which empowers him to act for the person by or on whose behalf the document is executed.

It is significant that Article 48, Schedule I of the Stamp Act, does not mention suits or proceedings other than those under the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act. Clause (a) refers to registration of documents; clause (b) refers to suits or proceedings under the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act; clause (c) refers to a single transaction; clauses (d) and (e) refer to several transactions; clause (f) refers to sale of immoveable property; and clause (g) prescribes the stamp payable on a power-of-attorney "in any other case" not "in connection with any other cases." The Article of the Court Fees Act referred to deals, on the other hand, exclusively with "the conduct of" cases.

The word "case" is not defined and the use of the word in the Court Fees Act must, in our opinion, be confined to judicial cases or quasi-judicial cases as opposed to transactions.

In the 2nd section of Chapter I of Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes, Edition IV, page 2, it is said: "The first and most elementary rule of construction is that it is to be assumed that the words or phrases are used in their technical meaning if they have acquired one and in their popular meaning if they have not."

In the Full Bench ruling of the Allahabad Court just cited, their Lordships said, after reciting the Article of the Court Fees Act: "It appears to us that all these documents are documents which it was intended to exclude from the definition of the expression power-of-attorney in section 2 clause 21 of the Stamp Act. It, therefore, seems to us that it is clear that the documents referred to in Article 10, Schedule II, of the Court Fees Act are restricted to documents given to and presented by duly certificated Mukhtars and Pleaders under the Legal Practitioners Act."

We regret that we are unable to follow this line of argument. It does not dispose of the question whether a Mukhtar-nama includes a power-of-attorney in favour of a person other than a certificated Mukhtar. The mere juxtaposition of Vakalatnama and Mukhtarnama in the Article of the Court Fees Act does not, in our opinion, indicate that a Mukhtar or attorney must be a legal practitioner because a Vakil usually is a legal practitioner. Moreover, many persons described as Vakils who are agents of Native States are not legal practitioners.

We concur in the opinion of the Full Bench of the Allahabad Court that the documents specified in Article 10 of the 2nd Schedule of the Court Fees Act are the documents which it was intended to exclude from the definition of a power-of-attorney in section 2 (21) of the Stamp Act, but, for the decision of the interpretation to be placed on the word Mukhtarnama in the Court Fees Act, the nature of that Act and of the Stamp Act must, in our opinion, be considered.

We understand that all sums realized from Court-fees are devoted in the first instance to the maintenance of the Civil, Criminal and Revenue Courts, while sums realized from stamps are devoted to other purposes. The presumption, therefore, is that any sum payable as a condition precedent to going into Court would be levied under the Court Fees Act, and the words "not chargeable" etc., in section 2 (21) of the Stamp Act indicate that the first point for consideration is whether fees are chargeable under the Court Fees

(1) 33 A. 487; 9 Ind. Cas. 617; 8 A. L. J. 378.

Act. That Act, therefore, is the excluding Act while the Stamp Act applies to any document not excluded from its provisions by the Court Fees Act. Chapter X of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, XV of 1882 deals with fees and costs and section 77, the last of the Chapter, saves the application of sections 3, 5 and 25 of the Court Fees Act.

Section 3 of the Court Fees Act provides for the levy of fees in Presidency Small Cause Courts, section 5 provides for the procedure in case of difference as to necessity or the amount of fees in such Court and section 25 provides that all fees referred to in section 3 or chargeable under he Act shall be collected by stamps.

The rules relating to fees payable in Presidency Small Cause Courts are, therefore, not exclusively those embodied in the Court Fees Act, and the inclusion, in Article 48 of Schedule I of the Stamp Act, of powers-of-attorney required in suits or proceedings under the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act does not, in our opinion, indicate that a power-of-attorney in favour of a person who is not a legal practitioner for the conduct of a case in an ordinary Civil Court comes within the definition of section 2 (21) of the Stamp Act. The indication is in the opposite direction.

For these reasons, our answer to the reference is that the power-of-attorney in question is governed by Article 10 of Schedule II of the Court Fees Act.

RAJAH VENKATA RANGAYYA APPA ROW BAHADUR GARU—RESPONDENT.

Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908), ss. 3 (11), 19, 77, 189—Rent, suit for—Landowner's private land—Jurisdiction of Civil Courts.

A suit by a landowner against his tenant for rent in respect of his kamatam or private lands (i.e., lands not coming under the head of 'ryoti' lands, as defined in section 3, clause 16 of the Madras Estates Land Act), must be instituted in the Civil Court and not in the Revenue Court.

Appeal, under section 15 of the Letters Patent, against the judgment of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Ayling, dated 3rd May 1911, in C. R. P. No. 432 of 1910, (S. C. C. No. 1770 of 1909, on the file of the Principal District Munsif of Bezwada).

Mr. P. Nagabushanam, for the Appellant.

Mr. V. Ramesam, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, J.—I do not think we can differ from the finding that the land is kamatam land. In that view, the question whether the District Munsif has jurisdiction, depends ultimately on the proper construction of section 19 of the Estates Land Act. It is contended before us that the phrase "the relations between a land-holder and a tenant of his private land" cannot properly be held to include the right to sue for rent and the liability to be sued for it, and it was urged that these 'relations' are the conditions of the tenant's tenures as set out in Chapter III of the Act. I do not find that this narrow construction is necessary; the phrase can, without impropriety, be construed to include all the mutual rights and obligations of the landlord as such and his tenant as such, and, in the absence of anything to indicate a contrary intention, I should be disposed so to construe it. I find nothing to indicate a contrary intention and on the other hand, as my learned brother has shown in the judgment which he has prepared and which I have had an opportunity of reading, the intention of the framers of the Act appears to have been by section 19 to exclude the Collector's Court as the forum in which were to be instituted suits for rent by a land-holder against a tenant of his private land.

Finding then no reason to exclude the provision of section 19, I agree with my learned brother that there is no provision of the Act which 'specially provides' for the institution of suits for rent by a land-holder against a tenant of his private land; and it follows that the forum in which such suits are to be instituted is not regulated by the Act and a suit in a Civil Court is not prohibited.

The appeal, therefore, fails and we dismiss it with costs.

SADASIVA AIYER, J.—This is a Letters Patent Appeal and the only question seriously argued on the appellant's behalf was, whether in respect of kamatan or private lands (i.e., lands not coming under the head of "ryoti" lands as defined in section 3, clause 16 of the Madras Estates Land Act), a suit for rent by the andlord against the tenant of such lands is excluded from the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts, when section 3, clause (11) sections 77 and 189 and the Schedule part (A) No. 8 of the Estates Land Act are read, together. Section 3, clause (11), defines 'rent' as whatever is lawfully payable to a land-holder for the use of land in his estate for the purpose of agriculture. Section 77, clause (1), empowers the land-holder to "institute a suit before the Collector for the recovery of arrears of rent." Section 189 says: "A Collector or other Revenue Officer etc. shall hear and determine all suits . . . of the nature specified in parts A and B of the Schedule and no Civil Court, in its original jurisdiction, shall take cognizance of . . . such suit." The Schedule Part (A) No. 8 refers to suits by landlords to recover arrears of rent. It seems to me clear that if these provisions alone are considered, the present suit is excluded from the jurisdiction of the District Munsif who has tried it on the Small Cause side.

But the respondent relies on section 19 of the Act which is as follows:—"Except as otherwise specially provided in this Act, the relations between a ryot and his tenants or between a land-holder and a tenant of his private land and the rights of any other owners of land, are not regulated by the provisions of this Act." Such special provisions expressly applying the provisions of the Act to the relations between a land-holder and the tenant of his private land appear in sections 134 and 158 of the Act. Can we say that it is "specially provided" by section 189 (read with sections 3 (11), 77 and Part A No. 8) that the relations between the land-holder and the tenants of his private lands in the matter of the forum, in which a suit for rent by the land-holder against such a tenant should be brought, are regulated by the provisions of that section, 189? I feel grave doubts on that point. Having regard to the express reference in sections 134 and 158 to "a tenant of private land" and to the positive provisions in those sections regulating some of the relations between such a tenant and the land-holder, I do not think that the mere omission to mention in section 189 and to exclude expressly a suit for rent against such a tenant of private land from the operation of section 189 could be treated as a special positive provision making that section regulate the relations between the land-holder and a tenant of "private" land in the matter of the forum in which the land-holder should bring his suit for rent against such a tenant.

I am glad to find myself supported in this view by the proceedings before the Legislative Council when the Act was being fashioned in the Legislative anvil. Sections 77 and 134 of the Act occur in the same Chapter VI of the Act and correspond to clauses 67 and 124 A of the Bill. Sub-clauses 1 and 2 of clause 124A of the Bill [corresponding to sub-clause (1) of section 134 of the Act] refer to one of the relations between a land-holder and the tenant of his private land and to the similar relation between land-owners under the ryotwari tenure and their tenants. The Advocate-General in moving an amendment to clause 124A said: "It was not intended that these other land-owners specified in clauses 1 and 2 should be debarred from instituting suits in the Civil Courts. The provisions of this Chapter are a little too wide and clause 67 is one of the provisions of this chapter. Under that clause, sub-clause (1), the provision is 'the land-holder may institute a suit before the Collector for the recovery of the arrears,' so that the result of the enactment under clause 124 (A) as it stands will be to require land-holders mentioned in sub-clauses (1) and (2) also to institute suits for arrears of rent before the Collector. That was not intended." The Advocate-General then by his amendment introduced words which (he thought) made a contrary intention clear, evidently holding that the clause in the Bill corresponding to section 19 of the Act will prevent recourse by the land-holder to the Revenue Courts for recovery of rent against the tenants of his private lands after clause 124A is amended as proposed by him (the Advocate-General) by the addition of some words. The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Forbes, in seconding the amendment of the Advocate-

General, said:—"It was clearly the intention of the original Bill and the Council, that these other land-holders should have a right for the recovery of rent by these processes. It was never intended to give them a right to sue before the Collector." The remedies of a land-holder against the tenant of his private land and of a ryotwari landlord against his tenant for the recovery of rent were intended to be placed on the same footing and the latter can, of course, sue only in the ordinary Civil Court for rent, though he can, in certain cases, use the processes mentioned in section 134 for recovery of arrears of rent.

In the result, the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV, r. 1—Mortgage-suit against the manager of a Hindu joint family—Other members not impleaded as parties—Suit whether maintainable—Parties.

A suit can be maintained against the manager of a joint Hindu family alone to enforce a mortgage against property belonging to the family. The manager of such family sufficiently represents other members in the suit.

Banerji, J.—It is not essential that the manager when he brings his suit should state in distinct terms that he is suing as manager or that the plaintiff in a suit against the family should describe the defendant as the manager of the family. All that is essential is that the manager is in fact suing or is being sued as such in respect of a family debt.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Shabjahanpur, dated 31st of March 1911.

Mr. Benode Behari, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

RICHARDS, C. J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for sale on foot of a mortgage. The mortgage was dated the 14th of November 1870. The mortgagee was one Dharam Singh, husband of the plaintiff, and the mortgagor was one Naiti Singh. Tilok Ram purchased the mortgaged property on the 7th of January 1889 and the defendants Hori Lal and Jagan Nath are the sons of Tilok Ram who is now dead. They pleaded amongst other things that their four sons constituting with themselves a joint Hindu family were not made parties to the suit. This is the plea with which we are concerned in the present appeal. Having regard to the respective dates of the mortgage and of the institution of the suit, the non-joinder of parties, if such there was, could not be cured by making the sons of Hori Lal and Jagan Nath parties, because the suit at the time their absence was pleaded was barred by limitation. Order XXXIV, rule 1, of the Code of Civil Procedure, provides as follows:—

"Subject to the provisions of this Code, all persons having an interest either in the mortgage security or in the right of redemption shall be joined as parties to any suit relating to the mortgage".

It is contended that all the members of the joint family have an interest in the right of redemption and that as they were not made parties originally and cannot now be added as parties, the suit should be dismissed.

I do not think that the words in the rule "subject to the provisions of this Code" can help the plaintiff. It is true that the Code provides that no suit shall fail for want of parties, but this does not mean that the defendants cannot insist on having all the necessary parties before the Court, either by their being made parties when the suit was instituted or being afterwards added as parties. I, therefore, think that, unless in the circumstances of the present case, Hori Lal and Jagan Nath can be said to represent their sons, or in other words that the sons are really parties to the suit through Jagan Nath and Hori Lal, the suit should be dismissed. All the members of the joint Hindu family have beyond doubt an "interest" in this mortgaged property.

It has been found by the Court below that Hori Lal and Jagan Nath are the managers of the family and that their names alone appear in the village record. I think that we should accept this finding, and my judgment presumes that Jagan Nath and Hori Lal are the managers of the joint Hindu family made up of themselves and their four sons. I propose in the first instance to deal with the question apart from decided cases.

Prior to the passing of Act V of 1908 (the present Code of Civil Procedure), the enactment dealing with parties to a suit relating to a mortgage was section 85 of the Transfer of Property Act. That section is as follows :—

"Subject to the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, section 437, all persons having an interest in the property comprised in a mortgage must be joined as parties to any suit under this Chapter relating to such mortgage provided that the plaintiff has notice of such interest."

The only change material in any way to the present question is the dropping out of the words "provided that the plaintiff has notice of such interest" in Order XXXIV rule 1. It must be remembered that neither section 85 of the Transfer of Property Act nor Order XXXIV rule 1 was any departure from the well established practice of the Courts. It was always necessary that persons interested in the mortgaged property should be made parties to a suit relating to the mortgage. If the mortgage-debt belonged to a number of persons, they should all be parties so that the person paying off the mortgage might get a good discharge.

The persons to whom the property mortgaged belonged were entitled to be parties to enable them to defend the suit and have the amount due (if any) properly ascertained. I do not think, therefore, that any greater importance should be attached to the absence of some of the members of the joint family because their presence is now required by a rule of the Code of Civil Procedure instead of a well established rule of practice.

It seems to me that if it is intended by Order XXXIV, rule 1, to provide that in a case like the present all the members of a joint Hindu family must be defendants by name and could not be represented by the manager, the law requires the plaintiff to do what in many cases must be a practical impossibility. The members of a joint Hindu family are frequently very numerous, comprising of the absent members and infants of tender years. Furthermore, during the course of the litigation there would be in all probability frequent births of sons, and the array of defendants would never be strictly complete unless during the entire time the suit was running its course, every newly born son was added as a defendant. The plaintiff in many cases would have no possible means of ascertaining the existence of the infant members of the family.

It seems to me to be impossible to dispute the proposition that it is a general rule of Hindu law that the manager represents the family in all transactions with the outer world, provided these transactions are family matters. Indeed if it were not so, it is difficult to understand how the affairs of the family could be carried on. If the proposition is correct I can see no good reason why in a case, like the present, the manager should cease to represent the family when the family has to institute or defend a suit in a Court of justice. Before suit the manager can pay and be paid the family debts and take and give a valid discharge for the same. In the present case, the property was purchased by Tilok Ram presumably with family funds. On his death, the names of his sons, Hori Lal and Jagan Nath, alone were recorded. Every defence which can be put forward in the present suit can properly and fairly be put forward by the managers. I am very far from saying that a plaintiff in a mortgage suit would be prudent in refraining from making as many members of the family as possible parties to the suit. On the contrary, in all suits and particularly in suits in which the mortgage was made by a manager, and there is any possible question of the mortgage not having been made for legal necessity or a family purpose, the plaintiff would be wise to make all or as many members of the family as possible parties so that they may be bound by the result of the suit. Furthermore, I am of opinion that in all such suits notwithstanding that the manager is a party, the Court should not hesitate to add as a party any member of the family who applies to be made a party, so as to enable him to put forward any defence which he desires to make includiug, of course, a defence challenging the mortgage as not having been made for family necessity and family purposes.

In the course of the argument, a great mass of authority has been cited, and it seems to me that the great weight of authority of the Courts in India has been in favour of holding that a decree against a manager in a suit like the present is not void, but that on the contrary the members of the family who were not parites to the suit, are bound by the decree on the ground that they were sufficiently represented by the manager, and that they can cnly re-open the litigation by showing that the mortgage was not for family purposes. It seems to me inconsistent to hold that the family is represented by the manager when the question is raised after decree and that they are not so represented if the question is raised before decree. In Bhawani Prasad v. Kallu (1), it was, however, held that the sons, who had not been made parties to a suit for sale on a mortgage brought against their father alone, could sue for and obtain a declaration that the property being family property could not be sold in execution of the decree against the father, and that they could obtain this declaration upon the sole ground that they had not been made parties to the mortgage suit. This was a Full Bench case and was the decision of four out of the five Judges who constituted the Bench. Banerji J., dissented from the view taken by the rest of the Court. The case was not unlike the present, the difference being that the question did not arise until after a decree had actually been obtained against the father, while in the present case the plea has been taken in the suit by the defendants who were parties. There was this further difference that there was no finding that the father was the manager of the family though in all probability he was. The case seems to me to have been decided by the majority of the Court upon the express words of section 85 of the Transfer of Property Act which was the provision of law then in force, providing for the parties to a suit relating to a mortgage. It does not seem to have been argued that the absent members of the family were or could be represented by their father as the manager. The effect of the decision has to some extent been modified by the case of Debi Singh v. Jia Ram (2).

But it is, nevertheless, the decision of a Full Bench and I think it ought to be followed and treated as binding upon this Court unless we see cogent reasons for not doing so. Do such cogent reasons exist? I have already pointed out that section 85 of the Transfer of Property Act has been repealed and re-placed by a rule of the Code of Civil Procedure. It was evidently thought that a rule under the Code of Civil Procedure was a more fitting place for a provision relating entirely to a matter of procedure. It may well be that the Court might consider itself more strictly bound by the express words in a section in the Transfer of Property Act then by a rule of procedure. I think the repeal of section 85 is some reason for holding that the ruling in Bhawani Prasad v. Kallu (1) should not be followed in this case. I have also pointed out that no argument based on the manager being a party to the suit was put forward in the case. It is very probable that the father against whom the decree for sale was made was the managing member of the family but there was no finding to that effect, and it is, of course, possible that he was not. I have also pointed out that the weight of authority in India has been to hold that after decree, at any rate, the absent members of a family are bound by the decree against the manager and the ruling in Bhawani Pershad v. Kallu (1) has certainly not met with universal approval in the rest of the Courts in India. Edge, C. J., pointed out the importance of having all the parties interested in the property before the Court so as to prevent further litigation. I agree that this is desirable but, as already mentioned, this in many cases is impossible. If Bhawani Prasad v. Kallu (1) is applied to cases where the manager is a party, each member of the family who was not made a party can re-open the whole litigation on the sole ground even though it my turn out in the end that the mortgage was binding on the whole family. This it seems was the very thing the learned Chief Justice wished to avoid. As a matter of fact, there have been many such cases. In Kishun Pershad v. Har Narain Singh (3), certain persons brought a suit to recovor money. The defendants pleaded that the plaintiffs and certain other persons constituted a joint Hindu family and that the plaintiffs were not entitled to sue without joining as parties the other members of the family. The plaintiffs answered this plea by contending that they were managers and carried on the business, and, therefore, the other members of the family were not necessary parties but that if the defendant wanted to have them made parties they were willing that they should be added. The Court of first instance made the other members parties but the time it did so the suit was barred so far as the added parties were concerned. The question arose whether or not the suit was barred by limitation. It had to be admitted that if the added parties were necessary parties originally, the making of them parties later on could not cure the defect by reason of limitation. The Subordinate Judge held that the absent members were not necessary parties and gave a decree. This Court reversed the decree of the Court of first instance holding that it was necessary that all the members of the family should join in the suit. Their Lordships of the Privy Council reversed the decision of this Court and restored the decision of the Court of first instance. It is true that in that case the suit was a suit on a contract and the persons who were originally plaintiffs were the parties to the contract; while the present case is a suit for sale on a mortgage executed by the vendor of the predecessor-in-title of the defendants It seems to me, however, that there is no difference in principle in the two cases. I feel certain that their Lordships of the Privy Council intended to hold not merely that the actual parties to the contract could enforce it but also that the other members of the family would be bound by the decree and that such a decree could be enforced against the family property. I think this decision of their Lordships is a strong ground for not applying the ruling in Bhawani Prasad v Kullu (1) to the circumstances an dfindings in the present case. What seems to me to be in principle the same question as the question involved in this appeal has recently arisen in a different way. The case was argued before this Bench. It was the case of Madan Lal v. Kishen Singh (4). A father who was found to be the manager of the family brought a suit to realize a mortgage which admittedly belonged to the family. He did not make his son a party. The defendants pleaded the non-joinder of the son. The question was whether the son was a necessary party. The very same arguments were put forward as are put forward in this case. The son was interested in the mortgage security and should, therefore, it was urged, under Order XXXIV, rule 1, be made a party. In such a case, it seems to me impossible almost to argue that the father could not represent the son. If no suit had been brought, the father could have received the mortgage-money and have given a good discharge to the persons paying the money.

In my opinion, the manager of a joint Hindu family can represent the family in a case like the present and the other members need not be made parties and I would dismiss the appeal.

BANERJI, J.—The question to be determined in this appeal is whether the suit of the plaintiff, which is one for sale on a mortgage, is liable to dismissal on the sole ground that the sons of the defendants, Hori Lal and Jagan Nath, were not joined as defendants. The mortgage was made by Nait Singh who subsequently to the mortgage sold the mortgaged property to Tilok Ram, the deceased father of the aforesaid defendants. The Court of first instance found on the merits against the defendants but dismissed the suit on the ground that the sons of Hori Lal and Jagan Nath, who have an interest in the mortgaged property by reason of their being, with their fathers, members of a joint family, were omitted from the suit. The lower Appellate Court has found that Hori Lal and Jagannath are managers of the joint family properties belonging to them and their sons and that they fully represent the interest of their sons. It has accordingly decreed the claim. The finding that Hori Lal and Jagan Nath are managers of the joint family of which they and their sons are members is a finding of fact and must be accepted by us in second appeal. We have, therefore, to consider 'whether in a mortgage suit all, the persons having an interest in the mortgage security or in the right of redemption are, in the case of a joint Hindu family, represented by the manager of the family."

Order XXXIV, rule 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure, on which reliance is placed on behalf of the appellants, provides that "all persons having an interest either in the mortgage security or in the right of redemption shall be joined as parties." The requirements of this section are, in my opinion, fulfilled if all such persons are represented in the case of a joint Hindu family by the managers of the family. The powers of the manager in a joint Hindu family are well known. He represents the family in all business transactions, he can enter into contracts in regard to matters relating to the family, give discharges for debts due to the family and pay debts due by the family. When, therefore, in respect of a mortgage due to or by the joint family, he sues or is sued in his own name in his capacity as manager, all the other members of the family being represented by him must be deemed sued through him. If this view is correct, the omission to join in the array of parties members of the family other than the manager is not a defect in the frame of the suit and it cannot be said that there has been a non-joinder of parties. All the persons interested are substantially parties to the suit through the manager. This was ruled by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the recent case of Kishun Perhsad v. Har Narain (3). Their Lordships held that the managing members of a joint family business of money lending are entitled to maintain suits brought to enforce contracts made in the course of that business, without joining in the suit with them, either as plaintiffs or as defendants, the other members of the family. This decision of their Lordships seems to me to settle the point. The case was, no doubt, that of a business contract but the principle laid down applies equally to a mortgage and is applicable as well in the case of the defendant as in the case of the plaintiff. It has been held by all the High Courts that a decree obtained against the manager of a joint Hindu family binds the other members though they were not impleaded in the suit in which the decree was passed. The cases on the point have been referred to at length in the judgments of some of my learned colleagues and I do not think any useful purpose will be served by repeating them. In Ram Narain Lal v. Bhawani Prasad (5), a Full Bench of this Court held that "when a member of a joint Hindu family is sued for a family debt, it may be assumed that he is sued for the same as the representative of the family; and when the decree in such a suit is substantially one in respect of the family debt and against the representative of the family such decree may properly be executed against the family property." This case accepts the rule that the members of a joint family, are represented by the manager in a suit brought against the latter alone in respect of a debt due by the joint family. This case was, it is true, decided before the passing of the Transfer of Property Act, but it has been repeatedly held that section 85 of that Act, which with some modifications has been re-enacted in Order XXXIV, rule 1 of the present Code of Civil Procedure, only gave legislative effect to what had always been the law. It was, no doubt, held, by the majority of the Court, in Bhawani Prasad v. Kallu (1), that the omission of the son in a mortgage suit brought against the father entitled the son to bring a suit to repudiate the decree, simply on the ground that he was not joined as a party to the mortgagee's suit. This view has not found favour with the other High Courts and seems to me to be opposed to the principle laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Kishun Prasad v. Har Narain Singh (3). The latest case on the point decided by the Madras High Court is that of Sheikh Ibrahim Tharagon v. Rama Ayar (6).

The ordinary rule undoubtedly is that all persons interested in a suit should be made parties to it, but in the case of a joint Hindu family, this rule is complied with if the manager of the family is sued or sues and thus represents the other members of the family. What is required is that all persons whose interests are to be affected by the suit are sufficiently and substantially represented. In the case of a joint Hindu family, all persons interested are represented in the suit by the manager and are substantially parties to it through the manager. I do not think that it is essential that the manager, when he brings his suit, should state in distinct terms that he is suing as manager, or that the plaintiffs in a suit against the family, should describe the defendant as the manager of the family. All that is essential is that the manager is in fact suing or is being sued as such in respect of a family debt. If it is denied that the person suing or sued is the manager that fact must be proved. The question is merely one of procedure and I do not think it affects the substantive law as to the representation of members of a joint Hindu family by the manager of the family. "Procedure" said Lord Penzance in the well-known case of Kendall v. Hamilton (7) "is but the machinery of the law, after all—the channel and means whereby law is administered and justice reached. It strangely departs from its proper office when, in place of facilitating, it is permitted to obstruct, and even extinguish, legal rights and is thus made to govern where it ought to subserve." In the present case, the appellants have no defence to the suit on the merits but they are seeking to defeat it on the ground of a defect in procedure. In my judgment there is no such defect, as the sons of the appellants are substantially parties through the appellants who have been found to be the managers of the joint family of which all of them are members. I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal.

TUDBALL, J.—The facts of this case are simple. One Nait Singh mortgaged the property in suit on 14th November 1870 to one Dharam Singh.

On 7th January 1889, Nait Singh sold the property to Tilak Ram, the father of defendants Nos. 4 and 5, Hori Lal and Jagan Nath The appeal has been argued on the assumption that Tilak Ram and his sons constituted a joint Hindu family and that the purchase was made out of joint family funds. The property thus purchased became the property of the joint family. It stood recorded in the name of Tilak Ram alone who, one may presume, was the manager. Tilak Ram died and the names of Hori Lal and Jagan Nath were recorded in Government records. Dharam Singh has died and the present plaintiff, his widow and successor, has brought this suit for sale on the basis of the mortgage.

To this suit she has made parties

1. The heirs and representatives of Naiti Singh.

2. Hori Lal and Jagan Nath.

The suit was brought at the extreme limit of time allowed by law.

Among other defences, Hori Lal and Jagan Nath pleaded that they had sons who were joint with them and, therefore, interested in the mortgaged property and that these sons were necessary parties under Order XXXIV rule 1. This objection was taken at the earliest possible date.

On the merits, the Court of first instance found for the plaintiff but it dismissed the suit on the ground that the sons of Hori Lal and Jagan Nath were necessary parties to suit and not having been impleaded, the suit must fail. I presume that if there had been time to do so, the Court would, under Order I, rule 10, have made the sons parties and proceeded to decide the suit. If they had been thus made parties, however, at that stage, the suit as against them would have been barred by time.

The plaintiff appealed and urged that Hori Lal and Jagan Nath were the managers of the family and fully represented the interests of their sons and that it was not necessary to implead the latter as the joint family was fully represented through its managing members,

The lower Appellate Court held that these two defendants Nos. 4 and 5 were the managers of the joint family and that, therefore, it was unnecessary to implead their sons, and decreed the suit. Hori Lal and Jagan Nath appeal.

Two points were taken:—

(1) That the plaintiff has not proved that the appellants are the managing members.

(2) That the sons of the appellants are necessary parties and the suit must fail unless they are impleaded.

As regards the first point, there is a clear finding by the lower Appellate Court and there is no certificate that there is no evidence on record to support it. The plea, therefore, fails.

In regard to the second point, it is clear that all persons having an interest in the mortgage security or the right of redemption must be joined as parties, vide Order XXXIV, rule 1, Civil Procedure Code. The proper procedure, I take it, where such a person has not been made a party, is for the Court to make him a party and then the question of limitation, if it arises, may be decided.

But the question to be decided in the present appeal is whether or not, as a matter of fact, the sons of the appellants are virtually parties to the suit through their representatives, the managing members of the family; in other words, "Can the managing member of a joint Hindu family be sued as representing the whole family without making the other co-parceners parties in a suit for sale on a mortgage. ?"

The question is one of some difficulty by reason of the conflict of opinion disclosed in the various decisions of the High Courts in India. Order XXXIV, rule 1, Civil Procedure Code, is a rule of procedure which was formerly embodied in the Transfer of Property Act, section 85. The only differences are that the proviso of section 85 as to notice has been omitted and the words "in the property comprised in the mortgage" have also been altered.

Unless there be some other law which operates in the case of a joint Hindu family, it is clear that the members thereof other than the manager would be necessary parties to a suit for sale on a mortgage. In the case of Bhawani Prasad v. Kallu (1), it was held by a majority of a Full Bench of this Court that where a mortgagee had obtained a decree on his mortgage against a father in a joint Hindu family without impleading the sons, the latter were entitled to a declaration that the decree-holder was not entitled to sell, in execution of his decree, the interests of the sons, on the sole ground that they were not parties to the suit on the mortgage.

In the course of his judgment in that case, the learned Chief Justice remarked:—"I have not yet heard any one suggest that the father in a joint Hindu family, is, as such, a trustee, executor or administrator, within the meaning of section 437 of the Civil Procedure Code, of his son, particularly if that son is alive and sui juris.

"Consequently, we may dismiss from the consideration of this case that Pemi in Bhowani Prasad's suit for sale of the interests of the sons in the family property represented his sons or could have been treated by Bhowani Prasad or by the Court in that suit as representing them for the purpose of section 85, Act IV of 1882."

It will be noticed that there was no consideration in the above case of the position of the manager of a joint Hindu family and his power to represent the family in the course of any litigation in which it might be involved. In so far as the above ruling may have held that the sons were absolutely necessary parties to the suit against the father, the binding force of it has been considerably decreased by the Full Bench ruling in Debi Singh v. Jia Ram (2). In the latter suit, the decision in which has since, with perhaps one exception, been regularly followed in this High Court and in other High Courts as well, it was held that where the property had been actually sold, the sons could not succeed in a suit to recover it, on the sole ground that they were not parties to the suit but must base their suit on some ground which, under Hindu Law, would free them from their liability for the debt incurred by their father. The principle which is the basis of this ruling, it seems to me, must apply whether the property has been sold or not, but be that so or not, it is a clear instance of a case in which a person interested in the mortgage property was held bound by the decree and sale thereon even though he was not a party personlly to the suit.

In other words, it is a clear decision to the effect that the substantive law to which he was subject was not overridden by the rule of procedure which makes it necessary to bring on to the record all persons interested in the right of redemption on the mortgage security.

Now the general rule of Hindu Law is that a joint family is represented by its manager in all its transactions or concerns with the outer world provided they are for family necessity [vide Vishnu Dhondi v. Babaji Bairu (8)]. In certain circumstances, the manager has power to mortgage or sell the family property.

"The manager is neither a partner nor a principal nor an agent of the family but a sort of representative owner, his independent rights being limited on all sides by the correlative rights of others, etc." (vide Cowell's Tagore Law Lectures, 1870, page 105). Where the manager borrows money on promissory-notes for the purpose of a joint family business or to meet a joint family necessity, the creditor can recover the money from all the members of the family although they have not been parties to the notes [vide Baisnab Chandra De v. Ramdhon Dhar (9); Nagendra Chandra Dey v. Amar Chandra Kundu (10) and Raghunathji Tarachand v. The Bank of Bombay (11)]. One of the duties of a manager is to get in the income and pay the debts of the family (see Bhatacharya's Law of the the Joint Family, page 295).

He can give a valid discharge without the concurrence of the minor members of the family [Ahinsa Bibi v. Abdul Kader Sahib (12)].

It is difficult to see, therefore, why a manager, if he can repesent the family in its transactions and concerns with the outer world, should not be also able to represent the family in its litigations in the Courts.

In Daulat Ram v. Mehr Chand (13), the contention of the co-parceners other than the manager was that as they had not been made parties to the suit against the manager, they were not affected by the decree and their shares had not passed by the sale in execution thereof. In the original suit, the decree had been obtained against the managing members who had mortgaged the whole estate to pay off the family debt. Their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the other co-parceners were bound by the decree and that the whole estate had passed. The managers had clearly represented the family in the litigation.

In Lala Surja Pershad v. Gulab Chand (14), the two learned Judges differed on this point. Ghose, J., ruled that the share of the son in the ancestral estate was liable for the satisfaction of the decree notwithstanding the provisions of section 85, Transfer of Property Act, the father having incurred the debt in his representative capacity and as managing member of the family and the son having been substantially a party to the suit in which the said decree was passed through the representation of his father, that section 85 of the Transfer of Property Act laid down only a rule of procedure and the words "all persons" in the section could hardly have been intended to include a Mitakshara son in a suit where the father is sued in his representative capacity. He dissented from the ruling in Bhawani Prasad v. Kallu (1). Since the above decision, section 85 of the Act has been repealed and the rule laid down therein is now a rule of procedure in the Civil Procedure Code.

Harrington, J., differed and quoted the case of Bhawani Prasad v. Kallu (1) in support of his decision though pointing out that Sheppard, J., had dissented from it in Ramasamayyan v. Virasami Ayyar (15), which was followed in Palani Goundan v. Ringayya Goundan (16).

It is unnecessary to set forth at length the arguments on which the learned Judges based their opinions. In Kunj Behari Lal v. Kanth Prashad Narain Singh (17), it was held that if a decree is passed against the manager of a joint Hindu family in respect of a liability properly incurred for the necessities of the family, the binding character of the decree upon the interests of the other members depends not upon their having or not having been parties to the suit, but on the authority of the manager to incur the liability. Lutchmanan Chetti v. Siva Prokasa Modeliar (18), where the rule of representation was upheld.

In Gan Savant Bal Savant v. Narayan Dhond Savant (19), it was pointed out that "a Hindu family is regarded as a corporation whose interests are naturally centred in the manager, the presumption being that the latter is acting for the family unless the contary is shown and that before the introduction of the Civil Procedure Code, this was equally so with regard to litigation as to other transactions."

I have already noted the rule of Hindu Law as pointed out in Vishnu Dhondi v. Babaji (8). In Ramakrishna Narayan Sindhe v. Vinayak Narain Saswadkar (20), it was held that the rule of procedure laid down in section 85, Transfer of Property Act, does not interfere with the rule of Hindu Law, that it is open to the manager in a Hindu family to represent the other members (subject to certain conditions) in a suit brought upon a mortgage against him. In Chimna Sadashiv v. Sada Barka (21), the same rule was approved, dissent was expressed from the decision in Bhawani Prasad v. Kallu (1). Sheppard, J.'s decision in Ramasamayyan v. Virasamy Ayyar (15) and the decision in Debi Singh v. Jia Ram (2) were quoted with approval.

In Arunachala Pillai v. Vithialinga Mudaliar (22), it was held that no member of an undivided Hindu family (except the manager as such) is entitled to bring a suit to establish a right belonging to the family without making the other members of the family parties to the suit.

But in the case of Angamuthu Pillai v. Kolandavelu Pillai (23) it was held that the plaintiff could not sue without making his brother the other member of the undivided family a party to the suit, though he was suing as the manager to recover certain property for the family. The latest decision of the Madras High Court is to be found in Sheikh Ibrahim Tharagon v. R. K. Rama Iyer (6), in which, after an exhaustive consideration of all rulings on the point, the rule of Hindu Law, (i. e., of representation of the family by the manager), was enforced and the manager's right to sue as such was maintained. In this Court in the case of Shamrathi Singh v. Kishan Prasad (24), it was ruled that the managing members of a joint Hindu family carrying on a joint family business are not entitled to maintain a suit in their own names against debtors of the family without joining with themselves either as plaintiffs or defendants all the other members of the family. The decision in Pateshri Partab Narain Singh v. Rudra Narain Singh (25) was distinguished.

Their Lordships of the Privy Council have reversed this decision, Kishun Pershad v. Har Narain Singh (3), holding that there was no principle of law or custom applicable to such a case under which the managing members of a Hindu joint family entrusted with the management of the business could be held incompetent to enforce at law the ordinary business contracts they are entitled to make or discharge in their own names.

The decision in Arunachala Pillai v. Vithialinga Mudaliar (22) was quoted with apparent approval and the decision in Ramsebak v. Ram Lal Koondoo (26) explained, as also was that in Alagappa Chetti v. Vellian Chetti (27). In respect to the latter, their Lordships expressed the opinion that the proposition there laid down to the effect that the manager cannot sue without joining all those interested with him, if literally construed, goes too far.

In Jaddo Kuar v. Sheo Shankar Ram (28), this Court also applied the rule of representation and held that the other members of the joint Hindu family were bound by the action of their managing members. It is unnecessary to discuss any further rulings on the subject. While there, no doubt, is a conflict of opinion as to whether the rule of procedure does or does not override the rule of Hindu Law, which allows the manager to represent the family under certain conditions in the case of litigation as well as in the other concerns of ordinary life, the weight of opinion seems to me to be in favour of the rule of substantive law.

HORI LAL v. NIMMAN KUNWAR.

[Prior to the introduction of the Civil Procedure Code and the Transfer of Property Act, this latter rule had full sway. Afterwards, the pendulum has swayed both ways. Of late the rule of Hindu Law has been given precedence over the rule of procedure and the latest decision of the Privy Council in Kishan Pershad's case (3) can leave no doubt upon the point. I, therefore, am of opinion that the rule of Hindu Law must be given its full force, and that where the necessary conditions prevail, the manager of the family when acting as such can both sue and be sued in his representative capacity and suits in such circumstances cannot be dismissed simply because the other members of the family are not before the Court.

It will always be open to the opposite party to plead that the person alleged to be the manager is, as a matter of fact, not the manager and the issue as to this fact can be decided. It may also be similarly pleaded that he is not acting within the scope of his authority. The result of this no doubt will be to leave it open to the other members of the family to attack the decree on the ground of fraud etc., in a subsequent suit. This is even so now and suits by sons against their fathers and persons holding decrees against him are fairly frequent as it is.

It would, therefore, be still advisable for the Courts, where the objection of non-joinder is taken, to make the absent members parties to the suit, if possible, so as to prevent the necessity of further litigation and to decide finally whether or not the action of the manager is within his authority and binding on his co-parceners.

In the present case, Hori Lal and Jagan Nath are the managing members. The property was purchased by the joint family with the burden of the plaintiffs' mortgage already upon it. There is no defence open to their sons which is not open to them. The sons cannot plead a debt contracted by their fathers for immoral or non-family purposes. The question is as to the validity or otherwise of the mortgage as created by the original mortgagors. There is, therefore, no valid reason in this case for not applying to the parties the rule of substantive law which is binding upon them and I would, therefore, hold that the decision of the Court below is correct and would dismiss the appeal.

CHAMIER, J.— I agree that the appellants cannot be allowed to challenge the finding of the lower Appellate Court that they are the managers of the joint family to which they belong. The only question which we have to decide in this appeal is whether a suit can be maintained against the manager of a joint Hindu family alone to enforce a mortgage against property belonging to the family.

A somewhat analogous question has arisen in Lala Madan Lal v. Kishan Singh (4), which has been heard by this Bench of four Judges, namely, whether the manager of a joint Hindu family suing as such can maintain a suit for the recovery of a mortgage-debt due to the family. I have stated the question in this way because I agree with my learned colleagues that the Court below ought to have allowed the plaint to be amended and that the case should be treated now as if the Appellant had from the first sued as the manager of a joint family.

The records of cases decided in these Provinces forty or fifty years ago show that in those days a joint Hindu family ordinarily sued and was sued through the manager of the family or through the more prominent members of the family and the practice was recognized by their Lordships of the Privy Council as long ago as 1871 [see the remarks made in the case of Jogindro Deb Roy v. Funindro Deb Roy (29). But the reports show many instances of cases in which, after a decree had been obtained by or against one or more members of a joint family, attempts were made by members who had not been impleaded to show that they were not bound by the decree which had been passed. Whether on account of the difficulties which resulted from that practice or for any other reason, there is no doubt that in many parts of India a practice has been growing up of impleading as many members of a joint family as possible [see the remarks made in the cases of Kashi v. Chimnaji (30); Naranji v. Mohi Govanji (31) and Harihar Prasad v. Mathura Lal (32)]. In these Provinces, it has been for many years the practice to join all the members of a joint family in a suit relating to the property of a joint family and there are instances in this Court of suits having been dismissed on account of the non-joinder of subordinate members of a family. But objections on the score of non-joinder of members of a family have generally been met by those members being added as parties or have been overruled as having been taken too late, and I know of no case in this Court in which it has been definitely held that a manager of a joint family cannot sue or be sued on behalf of the family.

An exhaustive review of the case law in the other High Courts will be found in the recent case of Sheikh Ibrahim v. Rama Iyer (6). It shows, I think, that there has not been any uniform course of decisions in those Courts.

The case of Kishun Prasad v. Har Narain (3) has been regarded by some Courts as deciding that a manager of a joint family can sue and be sued on behalf of the family. It seems to me that all that their Lordships of the Privy Council decided in that case was that managing members of a joint family entrusted with the management of a business are competent to enforce at law the ordinary business contracts which they are entitled to make or discharge in their names; but the language used by their Lordships in more than one place in their judgment suggests that they were of opinion that, apart from the case of a family business, the managing member of a joint family suing as such is entitled to maintain a suit to establish a right belonging to the family without making other members of the family parties. Indeed, this seems to be a necessary conclusion from their decisions in such cases as that of Daulat Ram v. Mehr Chand (13). On principle, it would seem that the decision should be the same whether the question of the right of the manager to represent the family is raised in the suit brought by or against the manager or in a subsequent suit brought by or against a member of the family not impleaded in the former suit to try the effect of the decision in the former suit as against him. The manager of a joint family represents the family in its dealings with outsiders in all the ordinary affairs of life, at all events where he is acting within the scope of his authority or for the benefit of the family, and there seems to be no reason why he should not represent the family in a suit whether as plaintiff or defendant unless there is some legislative enactment to the contrary. It has been held more than once that the rule of procedure which is now Order VII, rule 4, applies to the case of a manager of joint family suing on behalf of the family. If those decisions are correct, the rule referred to shows that a manager can sue on behalf of a joint family.

Except possibly in a few cases there appears to be no presumption that a joint family has a manager or that any particular person is the manager. The question whether a person before the Court is the manager of a joint family is usually a question of fact to be dealt with like any other question of fact. In one of the cases now before us, the plaintiff claims to be the manager of a joint family and must be allowed an opportunity of proving his allegation if it is denied. In the other case, it has been found that the appellants are the managers of a joint family.

Both on principle and on authority, I am of opinion that the manager of a joint Hindu family suing as such can maintain a suit alone for the recovery of a mortgage-debt due to the family and that a suit can be maintained against the manager of a joint family alone to enforce a mortgage against property belonging to the family. If the manager sufficiently represent the family, the provisions of Order XXIV, rule 1, are complied with.

In conclusion, I desire to refer to the cases of Gendan Lal v. Babu Ram (33) and Nathi Lal v. Lala (34), in the decision of which I took part. In the former it was neither alleged nor proved that the family had a manager who could represent the absent member and, as my judgment shows, it was not even contended that the absent member was sufficiently represented by any person before the Court, a circumstance which supports what I have said about the practice of this Court in recent years. In the latter case a judgment was delivered which covered several cases. Some members of the families of the plaintiffs had not been made parties. We were disposed to hold that managing members could sue on behalf of the joint families to which they belonged, but none of the plaintiffs had sued as managers and in some of the cases at all events it was impossible to presume that the managers were before the Court. Consequently, we disposed of the appeals on another ground. I agree with the order proposed by the learned Chief Justice in this case.

(33) 9 A. L. J. 86; 13 Ind. Cas. 197.
(34) 9 A. L. J. 410; 14 Ind. Cas. 35.

BY THE COURT.—The order of the Court is that the appeal be dismissed but we make no order as to the costs in this Court. We extend the time for payment for six months from this date.

Appeal dismissed.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.
SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 1217 OF 1910.
March 6, 1912.
Present:—Mr. Justice Harington and Mr. Justice Mookerjee.

HARI LAL SINGHA AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS
versus
RUP MANJORI BURMONI AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Lease—Indefinite term—Heritability—Inference from circumstances—Lease for building and residential purposes—Degraded woman—Undegraded relation—Power to inherit—Divergence of judicial opinion.

A lease for an indefinite term is not necessarily heritable.

Tej Chund v. Sreekanth Ghose, 6 W.R. (P.C.) 48; 3 M. I. A. 261 and Burdakanth Roy v. Aluk Munjooree Dasiah, 4 M. I. A. 321, followed.

But it is open to a Court to hold from the circumstances of a particular case that the lease-hold interest was intended to be heritable.

Where there is a lease for building and residential purposes, in the absence of any intention to the contrary, indicated either in the terms of the grant or in the nature of the tenancy, the lease-hold interest is heritable.

Kishori Lal Roy Chowdhury v. Krishna Kamini Chowdhurani, 5 Ind. Cas. 500; 37 C. 377; 11 C. L. J. 401, relied upon.

There is some divergence of judicial opinion upon the point whether an undegraded relation of a degraded woman is not her heir-at-law.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal on behalf of the defendants in an action in ejectment. The subject-matter of the litigation, a parcel of homestead land, admittedly belonged to one Krishna Mohini Dasi, who died in March, 1908. On the 22nd April 1908, her interest as tenant was purchased by the plaintiff from her brother, Krishna Das. Three days later, the defendants, now appellants, purchased the property from the same person. The plaintiff seeks to eject the defendants on the ground that she has a prior title. The defendants resist her claim on a two-fold ground; namely, first, that the interest of Krishna Mohini was not heritable, and, secondly, that as Krishna Mohini was a woman of ill-fame and an outcast, her brother Krishna Das was not her legal representative. The Courts below have overruled the first contention and have held that the interest of Krishna Mohini was heritable. Upon the second question, they have held that Krishna Das was the brother of Krishna Mohini as alleged by the plaintiff and was consequently the heir-at-law.

In the present appeal, it has been argued, in the first place, on behalf of the defendants that the interest of Krishna Mohini was not heritable and that she held it for life. In support of this proposition, reliance has been placed upon the cases of Lekhraj Roy v. Kanhya Singh (1) and Tulshi Pershad v. Ram Narain Singh (2). On the strength of these decisions, it has been contended that a grant for an indefinite term is presumably for the life of the grantee and that the onus is upon the plaintiff to establish that the grant in favour of Krishna Mohini was heritable. Now it need not be disputed, as was ruled by the Judicial Commitee in the cases of Tej Chand v. Sreekanth Ghose (3) and Burdakanth Roy v. Aluk Munjooree Dasiah (4), that a lease for an indefinite term is not necessarily heritable. At the same time, it must be remembered that it is open to a Court to hold, from the circumstances of a particular case, that the lease-hold interest was intended to be heritable. It was pointed out by this Court in the case of Kishori Lal Roy Chowdhury v. Krishna Kamini Chowdhurani (5), that where there is a lease for building and residential purposes, in the absence of any intention to the contrary indicated either in the terms of the grant or in the nature of the tenancy, the lease-hold interest is heritable, and the tenancy does not determine by the death of the lessee but vests in his legal representatives who are entitled to give or to receive the usual notices to quit. In the case before us, it appears from the evidence that Krishna Mohini held under a registered kabuliyat which has not been produced in evidence; it is presumably in the custody of the superior landlords who, it has been found, have taken the side of the defendants appellants. No steps appear to have been taken for the production of that instrument and it is consequently not unfair to hold that if the deed supported the theory that the grant was personal and not heritable, it would have been produced. In addition to this circumstance, we have the further fact that both the plaintiff and the defendants have treated the interest as heritable. No doubt, as was pointed out by the learned Vakil for the appellants, upon the authority of the decisions of this Court in the case of Rup Chand Ghosh v. Sarveswar Chandra Chandra (6), which was accepted as good law in Bipin Behari v. Tincowri (7), such conduct on the part of the defendants does not create an estoppel, but it is open to a Court to hold that the conduct is evidence that the interest, accepted as heritable by the defendant, was in reality of that character; and this is the view adopted by the Courts below. We must, therefore, hold that the finding of the Courts below that the interest of Krishna Mohini was heritable cannot be successfully challenged in second appeal.

(2) 12 C. 117; 12 I. A. 205.
(3) 3 M. I. A. 261; 6 W. R. (P. C.) 48.
(4) 4 M. I. A. 321.

It has been argued, in the second place, by the learned Vakil for the appellants that even if the lease-hold interest was heritable, Krishna Das was not the heir-at-law of his sister, and in this connection, reference has been made to the case of Bhut Nath Mondol v. The Secretary of State for India (8) to show that an undegraded relation of a degraded woman is not her heir-at-law. It is not necessary for the purpose of the present case to discuss whether this proposition is well founded. It is sufficient to observe that, as is shown by an examination of the authorities in the order of reference to the Full Bench in the case of Chatu Kurmi v. Rajaram Tewari (9), there is some divergence of judicial opinion upon this point. In the case before us, however, it is clear that this point was not taken in the Courts below, and, it is undoubtedly not taken in the grounds of appeal here. The decision of the question involves the determination of a disputed question of fact, namely, whether Krishna Das was degraded in the same way as his sister was. We are of opinion, therefore, that the question ought not to be allowed to be raised at this stage, specially in view of the fact that the brother has been treated by both the parties as the heir-at-law of his sister in the course of their respective transactions.

The result is that both the contentions urged by the appellants fail and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

JUDGMENT.

RICHARDS, C. J.—This appeal arises out of a suit to realise the amount of a mortgage, dated the 11th August 1884. It was pleaded by way of defence amongst other things that the plaintiff and his minor son Bisheshar Dayal were a joint Hindu family and that the suit could not be maintained because the mortgage was of family property and the son was not made a party. Plaintiff urged against this plea that he was manager and represented the family. Plaintiff also asked that the plaint might be amended by stating therein that he sued as manager. The Court below refused to amend the plaint and dismissed the suit on the ground that the son was a necessary party to the suit.

The appeal has been referred to this Bench because of the conflict of judicial decisions on the question.

Apart from authority, I can see no reason why the son should be a necessary party to the suit. It must be assumed for the purpose of this appeal that the plaintiff is the manager of the family. If before the suit was instituted, the owners of the equity of redemption had been ready and willing to pay off the mortgage, I think it is absolutely clear the plaintiff as manager could receive the mortgage money and give the person paying off the money a good discharge and I can see no reason why the Court should require the presence of any other party.

Order XXXIV, rule 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure, no doubt requires that persons interested in the mortgage security should be parties but I think in a case like the present the son is virtually a party through the manager and that Order XXXIV, rule 1, is substantially complied with.

The same question in principle arose in Hori Lal v. Nimman Kunwar (1), which was argued before this Bench. In my judgment in that case, I gave my reasons for holding that the manager of a joint family can represent the family. I would allow the appeal and remand the suit.

BANERJI J.—The point raised in this appeal has practically been decided in Hori Lal v. Nimman Kunwar (1), in which judgment has this day been delivered.

In this case the plaintiff omitted to join with him as plaintiff his minor son who is four years old. For this omission, the suit has been dismissed. It is manifest from the plaint that the debt which the plaintiff seeks to recover is alleged to be a debt due to the joint family of which he and his minor son are members. The mortgages which form the basis of the claim are in favour of Ram Prasad, the grandfather of the plaintiff and the great-grandfather of his son. This is recited in the plaint. At an early stage of the suit, the plaintiff stated to the Court that he was suing in his capacity as manager of the joint family and applied for amendment of the plaint. The Court, in my opinion, improperly rejected the application. The defendants clearly had notice that the plaintiff was suing as manager, I have in my judgment in Hori Lal v. Nimman Kunwar (1) stated my reasons for holding that where a suit is brought by the manager of a joint Hindu family, the other members of the family must be deemed to be parties to the suit through him and the omission of the names of those members from the array of parties would not be a defect fatal to the suit. Of course, if in a suit like this the other members wish to join or apply to be added as parties the Court should never refuse to add them but the suit ought not in any event to be dismissed if in fact it has been instituted by the manager of the joint family for the recovery of a debt due to the family. As the manager is competent to give a full discharge to the debtor, the latter can have no reason to complain of the omission of the persons whom the manger represents. In this respect, the case of a joint Hindu family is different from that of other joint creditors. The matter is, in my opinion, concluded by the principle of the decision of their Lordships of the Privy

(1) 15 Ind. Cas. 126, ante.

Council in Kishan Prasad v. Harnarain Singh (2). I would allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below and remand the case to that Court for trial on the merits.

TUDBALL, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for sale on a mortgage against the heirs of the original mortgagor and certain subsequent transferees. It has been dismissed on a preliminary point, the lower Court having held that the plaintiff alone is not competent to maintain the suit.

The original mortgagee was Lala Ram Pershad, the plaintiffs' paternal grandfather, and the plaintiffs' case as disclosed in the plaint was that his grandfather, his father, his uncle and himself formed a joint Hindu family and that the three former having died, he was the sole owner of the mortgage-debt by the right of survivorship and entitled to sue. But it is an admitted fact that the plaintiff has an infant son who is joint with him.

Before the first date fixed for the case, the plaintiff applied to the Court to be allowed to amend his plaint by adding thereto that he was suing as manager of the joint family (consisting of himself and his son). The Court below, without passing any orders on this application, dismissed the suit holding that the amendment could not improve the position of the plaintiff because the manager of a Hindu family cannot sue without joining those interested with him. The decision was based on the ruling of this Court in the case of Shamrathi v. Kishan Pershad (2).

This decision has since been overruled by their Lordships of the Privy Council. In Hori Lal v. Nimman Kunwar (1) this Bench has fully discussed the right of the manager of a joint Hindu family to represent the family and have held that he can sue and be sued as such so that the decree under certain circumstances may be binding on the other co parceners. It is unnecessery to repeat what has already been said in the judgments in that case.

In my opinion, the plaintiff ought to have been allowed to amend his plaint and the suit as amended is maintainable. Of course, it is open to the defendants to plead that he is not the manager though, in the circumstances of the case, that appears to be a hopeless plea.

(5) 29 A. 311; 4 A. L. J. 194; A. W. N. (1907) 58.

I would, therefore, allow the appeal and remand the suit to the lower Court with orders to allow the plaint to be amended and to decide the suit on the merits.

CHAMIER, J.—I agree that the Court below ought to have allowed the plaint to be amended. The question for decision in this appeal appears to me to be whether the manager of a joint Hindu family suing as such can maintain a suit alone for the recovery of a mortgage debt due to the family. For the reasons which I have given in my judgment in Hori Lal v. Nimman Kunwar (1), I am of opinion that he can. I agree in the order proposed by the learned Chief Justice.

BY THE COURT.—The order of the Court is that we allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below and remand the case to that Court with directions to re-admit the suit under its original number in the register and to proceed to try it on the merits after allowing the amendment of the plaint as prayed for by the plaintiffs. Costs here and heretofore will abide the result. Costs in this Court will include fees on the higher scale.

Appeal allowed.

Limitaiton Act (IX of 1908), s. 5—Appeal—Decision of two cross-appeals—Two decrees framed—Appellant believing in the existence of only one decree—Appeal filed against one decree only—Sufficient cause—Arbitration—Award—Parties to pending suit making reference without intervention of Court—Submission and award invalid—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 21—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 12, 20, 523, 525—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sch. II, ss. 17, 20.

Two cross-appeals were decided by an Appellate Court and two separate decrees were framed, one in respect of each appeal. A second appeal was filed in respect of only one decree.

The framing of two separate decrees in the lower Appellate Court was quite unnecessary and the appellant in the second appeal was naturally misled into thinking that only one decree had been drawn up and he consequently appealed from one decree:

Held, that the appellant had sufficient cause, within the meaning of section 5 of the Limitation Act, for not filing the appeal as to the other decree within the prescribed period of limitation and should be allowed to file a copy of the other decree.

During the pendency of a suit in a Court, it is not open to the parties to refer the matters in dispute to arbitration without the intervention of the Court, or, after an award has been made by the arbitrator appointed in this way, to apply to the Court that the award be filed.

Such a submission and the award made in pursuance thereof are quite invalid.

Budha v. Haku, 130 P. R. 1882, Fakir v. Jaimal, 50 P. R. 1891, Khatija v. Ismail, 12 M. 380, Kubra Jan v. Ram Bali, 5 A. L. J. 647; A. W. N. (1908) 235; 4 M. L. T. 392, followed.

The provisions of sections 523 and 525 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882, and sections 17 and 20, Schedule II of the Code of 1908, apply only to cases when there is no suit relating to the same matter already pending between the parties who are affected by the agreement to refer or by the award.

The previously instituted suit is not barred by reason only of an agreement being made between the parties for reference to arbitration without the intervention of the Court.

An award made by an arbitrator in pursuance of such an agreement cannot be taken cognizance of by the Court so as to be made the basis of a proceeding under section 525 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882

Second appeal from the order of the Additional Divisional Judge, Ferozepore Division, dated the 17th November 1910, reversing that of the Munsif, 1st class, Ferozepore, dated 25th April 1910, decreeing the claim.

Mr. Duni Chand, for the Appellants.

Lala Lajpat Rai, for the Respondents.

ORDER.—The Pleader for the respondents urges as a preliminary objection that as two cross-appeals were filed by the parties in the Divisional Court and two separate decrees were framed, one in respect of each appeal, and as the appellants have appealed to this Court only from the decree passed in their own appeal, and not from the decree passed in the appeal preferred by the defendants, the present appeal must be dismissed on that ground alone. We think that the framing of two separate decrees in the Divisional Court was quite unnecessary in this case, and that the appellants' Counsel was, therefore, naturally miseld into thinking that only one decree had been drawn up and he consequently appealed from one decree. We have allowed him to file in this Court a copy of the other decree also, and we hold that as to that decree, his clients had sufficient cause within the meaning of section 5 of the Limitation Act for not filing the appeal within the prescribed period of limitation. We now proceed to give judgment in the merits of the case.

JUDGMENT.—The facts, so far as they are material to the decision of this appeal, are briefly as follows:—On the 24th February 1908, the plaintiffs instituted their suit in the Court of the Munsif, 1st class, for possession, by inheritance, of a half share of certain landed and house property left by a collateral relation of theirs, named Parsanna Singh, and they impleaded as defendants certain other heirs of Parsanna Singh entitled to the remaining half of the property and also certain alienees from Parsanna Singh. In the course of the suit, after the defendants had filed their written statements, and the issues were framed by the Court, two of the defendants, who were co-heirs with the plaintiffs to Parsanna Singh's property, namely, Kahn Singh and Gunna Singh, made an application asking for an adjournment of the case on the ground that the parties were contemplating a compromise. The hearing was accordingly adjourned to the 28th of April 1908, and on that date an application was filed by Kahn Singh stating that the matter in dispute between the parties had been referred to the arbitration of five persons on the 25th March 1908, that an award which consisted of an entry made by them in the bahi of one Harnama Mal had been given by the said arbitrators, and that according to the award, the defendants were entitled to receive from the plaintiffs Rs. 1,171 before giving up possession of the land. A transliteration of the entry in the bahi was filed along with the application. This application was ignored by the Court and the case was proceeded with; and after the evidence produced by the parties had been taken down, the Court proceeded to judgment on the 24th June 1908, and gave the plaintiffs a decree for possession of a half share of the land claimed on payment of Rs. 863-3-6. From the decree of the Munsif, both the parties appealed to the Divisional Court; and the Divisional Judge remanded the case under Order XLI, rule 23, Civil Procedure Code, for a fresh decision, holding that there had been no proper trial of the suit, as no issue had been framed on the alleged reference to arbitration and the delivery of the award by the arbitrators which were relied upon by the defendants in the course of the suit. On the case coming back, the Munsif allowed the parties to put in fresh pleadings, and upon those pleadings, he framed issues which are printed at page 4 of the paper-book. The third issue which is the only issue with which we are now concerned ran as follows:—

"Did the plaintiffs refer the matter in dispute to arbitration; did they (the arbitrators) make any award: and is it valid and binding on the plaintiffs?"

Upon that issue, the Munsif held that the parties could not refer the matter in difference between them to arbitration during the pendency of the suit in Court. He also held that there was no written agreement to refer to arbitration, that all the parties did not make the reference that no proper inquiry was made by the arbitrators, and that they had made no proper award. He was accordingly of opinion that the plaintiffs were not bound by the award; and he, therefore, decided the suit on the merits with reference to the other issues framed by him, with the result that a decree for the property in dispute was granted to the plaintiffs on payment of Rs. 660. On cross-appeals being filed by the parties, the Divisional Judge, Mr. T. P. Ellis, remanded the case, under Order XLI, rule 25, Civil Procedure Code, for further inquiry as to whether a certain sum of money had been raised by Parsanna Singh for legal necessity, and a return was duly made to the order of remand by the Munsif. The appeals came on for final hearing before another Divisional Judge, Mr. H. A. Rose, and without going into the merits of the case, he held that the award of the arbitrators filed in the Court of the Munsif by the defendants on the 25th April 1908 was valid and was binding upon all the plaintiffs, though one of them Dhan Singh had not been a party to the agreement to refer to arbitration. The learned Judge accordingly accepted the defendants' appeal and granted the plaintiffs a decree in terms of the award, that is to say, he gave them a decree for possession of the property in suit on payment of Rs. 1,171 to the defendants.

The plaintiffs have preferred a further appeal to this Court and the first question for decision is whether during the pendency of the suit in the Court of the Munsif, it was open to the parties to refer the matter in dispute to arbitration without the intervention of the Court and, after an award had been made by the arbitrators, to apply to the Court that the award be filed. The point is not altogether free from difficulty, but after giving our best consideration to the matter, we think that the answer to the question must be in the negative. In support of this view, we may refer to the decisions of this Court reported as Budha v. Haku (1) and Fakir v. Jaimal (2) as also to the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Ghulam Jilani v. Muhammad Hassan (3) and to the opinion expressed by Maclean, C.J., in Tincovery Dey v. Fakir Chand Dey, (4). The opposite view is supported by Harivalabdas Kalliandas v. Utam Chand Manek Chand (5); Salig Ram v. Jhunna Kuar (6) and Sheo Dut v. Shive Shankar Singh (7).

In Budha v. Haku (1), the parties to a pending litigation had referred the subject-matter of the claim to arbitration by an agreement which they had executed out of Court. No application was made to make this reference a rule of Court, nor was any proceeding taken by either party to cause the agreement to be filed under section 523 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882. At the hearing of the suit, the defendant pleaded the argeement as a bar to its further maintenance and the Court finding that both parties had made the agreement to refer, dismissed the suit leaving either party to take such action as he might be advised under section 523 of the Code. It was held by this Court that the only bar which a reference to arbitration, which had not been made a rule of Court, could be said to create was that provided for in the last clause of section 21 of the Specific Relief Act, which was inapplicable to the case, as the reference relied on by the defendant was made during the pendency, and not before the institution of the suit. The suit could, therefore, proceed notwithstanding the reference to arbitration which had been made out of Court. The question before us was, no doubt, not discussed or decided in that case, but certain observations made by the learned Judges in the course of their judgment have an important bearing on the point. They say: "Now it must be taken as clear law that unless there is something in the Code of Civil Procedure or in some other Act to oust the jurisdiction of the Court, every Civil Court must have power to proceed to a final adjudication of a suit of a civil nature which has once been properly instituted before it.....It is certainly not competent to the parties themselves, by some subsequent act of their own, to deprive the ordinary Courts of the jurisdiction which they otherwise possess. The same principle was laid down in Khatija v. Ismail (8) and in Kubra Jan v. Ram Bali (9).

In Fakir v. Jaimal (2), in which the Court of first instance had dismissed the plaintiffs' suit on the ground that during its pendency an agreement to refer to arbitration had been made between the parties and that the suit could not go on as the plaintiffs' sole remedy was under section 523, Civil Procedure Code, it was held by this Court, following Budha v. Haku (1), that there was no bar to the suit proceeding, inasmuch as the last clause of section 21, Specific Relief Act, was inapplicable to a case in which a reference to arbitration was made out of Court during the pendency, and not before the institution of a suit. The decisions of the Allahabad High Court in Salig Ram v. Jhunna Kuar (6) and Sheoambar v. Deolat (10) were dissented from.

The earlier Allahabad decision just cited is directly opposed to our view. That was a case in which the parties to a suit applied for an adjournment on the ground that they had agreed to refer the matters in difference between them in such suit to arbitration. The Court accordingly adjourned the suit, and the matters in difference therein were referred to arbitration by the parties, and an award was made therein disallowing the plaintiffs' claim. It was held by the Allahabad High Court that, under these circumstances, the further hearing of the suit was barred by the last clause of section 21 of the Specific Relief Act. As has been mentioned above, this ruling was dissented from by this Court in Fakir v. Jaimal (2), but it has been followed by the Allahabad High Court in two later decisions, namely, Sheoambar v. Deodat (10) and Sheo Dat v. Shiv Shankar Singh (7). In the last mentioned case it was held that where parties to a suit have agreed to refer the matters in dispute between them in such suit to arbitration, such an agreement ousts the jurisdiction of the Court to proceed with the suit, whether it is filed in Court under the provisions of section 523 of the Code of Civil Procedure or not. After citing the previous decisions of their own Court on the point, the learned Judges go on to observe at page 55: "It appear to us that, having regard to the sections of the Code of Civil Procedure, dealing with the subject of arbitration, section 523 was intended to have effect in a case such as the present. Section 506 and the following sections, up to section 522, deal with cases in which the parties to a suit desire to leave the matters in difference between them to arbitration and apply to the Court for an order of reference. Those are not cases like the present. In such cases, there are provisions for all the necessary steps following upon an order of reference by the Court. But section 523 refers to cases in which persons, whether they be litigants or not, themselves agree, independently of the Court, to refer the matter in difference between them to arbitraiton, and ask the Court to have the agreement filed; then section 525 enables parties who have agreed to refer their differences to arbitration and have obtained an award to have that award filed in Court. The course which the appellants in the present case ought to have taken is that provided by section 523. They omitted to follow that course, and despite the fact that they had agreed to refer the dispute to arbitration, proceeded to carry on the litigation. We think it would be most inconvenient if two simultaneous proceedings in respect of disputes were allowed, namely, arbitration proceedings and proceedings before a Court of justice."

In Harivalabdas Kalliandas v. Utam Chand Manak Chand (5), it was held that under sections 523 and 525 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), parties to a suit as well as persons not engaged in litigation may agree to refer matters in dispute between them to private arbitration without the intervention of the Court, and may apply to have the agreement filed; and that the mere fact that a suit is pending with respect to the matters in dispute, is not of itself a sufficient reason to induce the Court to refuse to file the agreement. At page 3 of the report, the learned Judges say: "It was next contended that section 523 is not applicable to matters in difference in a suit; and that the earlier sections in the Chapter, which provide for the case of parties to a suit desiring to refer matters in difference to arbitration, are alone applicable to such a case. We think, however, that the very general language of sections 523 and 525 forbids this conclusion. Those sections contemplate arbitration without the intervention of the Court by 'any persons' and with respect to 'any matter', and contain no express exception as to parties to a suit or to matters in litigation in a suit actually pending. Moreover, it is to be remarked that there is an absence of any expression in section 506 showing an intention to forbid arbitration by parties to a suit without the intervention of the Court. Undoubtedly, the procedure in such cases, as provided by sections 523 and 525, viz., a separate suit, is not the best adapted to a case where the matters are already before the Court; and will necessitate an application for stay of proceedings in that suit. It is, therefore, probable that the particular case in question was not present at the time to the minds of the framers of those sections. But, having regard to the general scope of the provisions in this Chapter, we do not think that that consideration is sufficient to outweigh the inference to be drawn from the very general language of these sections. Whether the existence of a suit, in which the matters in difference are in litigation, may under special circumstances afford sufficient cause, as contemplated by sections 523 and 525, for not filing the agreement to arbitrate, it is not necessary to decide."

With the greatest possible respect to the learned Judges of the Bombay High Court and of the Allahabad High Court, we think that the views expressed by them in their judgments in the above-mentioned cases are not tenable in the face of the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the well-known case of Ghulam Jilani v. Muhammad Hussan (3). In their judgment in that case, their Lordships analyse the provisions of Chapter XXXVII of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 relating to arbitration and divide them into three groups. Their Lordships say:—

"The Chapter in the Code of Civil Procedure on Reference to Arbitration (Chapter XXXVII) deals with arbitration under three heads:—

1. "Where the parties to a litigation desire to refer to arbitration any matter in difference between them in the suit. In that case, all proceedings from first to last are under the supervision of the Court.

2. Where parties without having recourse to litigation agree to refer their differences to arbitration, and it is desired that the agreement of reference should have the sanction of the Court. In that case all further proceedings are under the supervision of the Court."

3. "Where the agreement of reference is made and the arbitration itself takes place without the intervention of the Court, and the assistance of the Court is only sought in order to give effect to the award."..... .....

"In cases falling under Head No. 1, the agreement to refer and the application to the Court founded upon it must have the concurrence of all parties concerned, and the actual reference is the order of the Court, so that no question can arise as to the regularity of the proceedings up to that point. In cases following under Heads II and III, proceedings described as a suit and registered as such must be taken in order to bring the matter—the agreement to refer, or the award, as the case may be—under the cognizance of the Court."

It would appear from these observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council that, according to the Code of Civil Procedure, proceedings under Heads II and III as set out above are intended to be taken only in cases where the parties without having recourse to litigation agree to refer their disputes to arbitration, and it is desired either

(1) that the agreement of reference should have the sanction of the Court, for which provision is made by section 523 of the old Code, or

(2) that the award, which has been given by the arbitrators upon a private agreement of reference being made to them, should be given effect to by a Court of Justice, to which end an application under section 525 of the old Code could be made to the Court having jurisdiction over the matter to which the award relates.

If the parties have instituted a suit in Court and the Court is seized of the subject-matter of dispute between them, the only way in which, in the event of their desiring to settle the dispute by arbitration, they can interfere with the trial of the suit by that Court, according to the ordinary rules of procedure, is to apply to it for an order of reference as provided by section 506 of the old Code, and by section 1 of the second Schedule of the new Code. They cannot ignore the existence of the Court or oust its jurisdiction by adopting the expedient of either simply agreeing to refer the matter to arbitration without the sanction of the Court or allowing the arbitrators to make an award upon such reference behind the back, as it were, of the Court. In other words, section 523 and section 525 of the old Code of Civil Procedure, which correspond with section 17 and section 20, respectively, of the second Schedule to the new Code, apply only to cases where there is no pending litigation; and section 506 of the old Code, (corresponding with section 1 of the second Schedule to the new Code), was the only section which applied to arbitration during the pendency of a litigation. Maclean, C. J., expressed the same opinion in Tincovery Dey v. Fakir Chand Dey (4). At page 228 of the report the learned Chief Justice says: "..... .....Section 523 (Civil Procedure Code of 1882) does not apply to the case of an agreement to refer, where there is a pending litigation. Section 506 appears to apply to the case where parties have agreed to refer in a pending suit, and section 523 to the case where there is no pending litigation. At least, this is the way in which I read the observations of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Ghulam Jilani v. Muhammad Hassan (3) to which I have already referred. It is true that a contrary view was expressed in the case of Harivalabdas Kalliandas v. Utamchand Manekchand (5), but I doubt if this decision can stand, having regard to the Privy Council case to which I have referred."

Section 523 and section 525 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 lay down, as also do the corresponding sections of the second Schedule to the new Code, that the application referred to therein shall be in writing and shall be numbered and registered as a suit between the applicant as plaintiff and the other parties as defendants, and that the Court shall direct notice of the application to be given to the parties other than the applicant, requiring them to show cause, within a time specified, why the agreement to refer to arbitration or the award, or as the case may be, should not be filed. These provisions appear to us to indicate that the Legislature intended them to apply to cases where there is no suit relating to the same matter already pending between the parties who are affected by the agreement to refer or by the award mentioned in section 523 and section 525 respectively, for otherwise two suits between the same parties about the same subject-matter would proceed side by side in the same Court with conceivably conflicting results. It is also difficult to see how, in view of the provisions of section 12 of the Code of 1882 (which corresponds with section 10 of the present Code), the second suit between the parties initiated by an application filed under section 523 or under section 525 of the old Code (or under the corresponding sections of the second Schedule to the new Code) could be tried, seeing that the previously instituted suit between the same parties and relating to the same subject-matter had not ex-hypothesi been disposed of before the institution of the second suit. The provisions of section 20 of the old Code relating to stay of proceedings in a suit did not apply to a case of this kind; and as, in our opinion, the previously instituted suit was [as held by this Court in Budha v. Haku (1) and Fakir v. Jaimal (2)] not barred by the last clause of section 21 of the Specific Relief Act, by reason only of an agreement being made between the parties for reference to arbitration, the view taken by the Bombay and Allahabad High Courts as noticed above would lead to anomalous consequences. As was remarked by the learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court in Sheo Dat v. Shev Shankar Singh (7): "It would be most inconvenient if two simultaneous proceedings in respect of disputes were allowed, namely, arbitration proceedings and proceedings before a Court of Justice." The most reasonable view, and, in our opinion, the easiest way out of the difficulty would be to hold that proceedings before the Court were the only valid proceedings and that the Court, being properly seized of the matters in difference between the parties, could not take cognizance of arbitration proceedings to which the sanction of the Court had not been accorded in the manner laid down in section 506 of the old Civil Procedure Code or section 1 of the second Schedule to the new Code.

For the foregoing reasons, we hold that during the pendency of a suit between them, the parties in this case were precluded from entering into an agreement to refer to arbitration the subject-matter of the suit and that the award made by the arbitrators in pursuance of that agreement could not be taken cognizance of by the Court so as to be made the basis of a proceeding under section 525 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882. It follows that the Divisional Judge was in error in accepting the award as a valid adjudication upon the subject-matter of the suit and in passing a decree in accordance with it. We, therefore, accept this appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court, and remand the case under Order XLI, rule 23, Civil Procedure Code, to the lower Appellate Court for a decision on the merits. The stamp on appeal shall be refunded and other costs shall be costs in the cause.

Appeal accepted.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1557 OF 1910.

April 26, 1912.

Present:—Mr. Justice Abdur Rahim and Mr. Justice Sundara Aiyar.

AMBALAVANA CHETTY AND ANOTHER—APPELLANTS

versus

SINGARAVELU ODAYAR AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 139, 140, 142, 144—Landlord and tenant—Dispossession of tenant by stranger—Tenancy from year to year—Abandonment by tenant—Ejectment suit by landlord against trespasser—Limitation.

Where a tenant, who was holding land as a tenant from year to year, was dispossessed by a stranger who, from the date of dispossession, claimed to hold absolutely against both landlord and tenant, the landlord must sue to eject the trespasser before the expiry of 12 years from the date of such dispossession, especially where the land has been abandoned by the tenant more than 12 years before suit.

For such a suit, the cause of action does not arise on the day when the landlord gives notice to the tenant to quit.

Per Abdur Rahim, J.—Quære:—Whether, when land is in possession of a tenant, the term of whose lease is outstanding, and such tenant is ousted from possession by a trespasser, time will not run against the owner until after the expiry of the term?

Ramanadan Chetti v. Pulikutti Servai, 21 M. 288 and Malamal Illath Krishna v. Secretary of State for India, 19 M. L. J. 347; 4 Ind. Cas. 30; 5 M. L. T. 213, considered.

Per Sundara Aiyar, J.—Possession held by a person must be held to be in his own right even in cases that are governed by Article 144 of the Limitation Act, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary or any relationship between the parties or other circumstances that would throw on him the onus of proving that he intended to hold possession in denial of the owner's right.

Article 140 of the Limitation Act does not apply to a suit against a tenant, as Article 139 provides limitation for such a suit. The inference to be drawn from Article 140 is, that in a suit against a trespasser by one who had leased his land to a tenant, limitation is not postponed necessarily until his estate falls into possession. If the trespasser asserts only a right of tenancy, then, no doubt, limitation would not commence against the landlord until the tenancy (if his right to it is complete) has come to an end. If he has not acquired by his adverse possession the right of a tenant under the statute, then Article 144 would be applicable, his possession being regarded as adverse to the lessor only when the latter's estate falls into possession.

As against a stranger, the landlord is entitled to recover possession even though his tenant's lease has not been terminated, and when the stranger purports to hold absolutely and not by the acquisition of a prescriptive title as against the tenant, the landlord's cause of action arises on the date of the dispossession of the tenant.

Article 140 of the Limitation Act applies to suits by remainder-men and reversioners against all persons, including trespassers and not merely against persons, holding a limited estate, on the expiration of which the remainder or reversion falls in.

AMBALAVANA CHETTY v. SINGARAVELU ODAYAR.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Kumbakonam in Appeal Suit No. 265 of 1910, presented against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif of Kumbakonam, in Original Suit No. 443 of 1908.

Mr. T. Narasimha Aiyangar, for the Appellants.

Mr. T. Rangachariar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The Subordinate Judge has not recorded clear findings on the questions,—

(1) How long the 1st defendant or any person who derived his possession from or through him continued to be in possession; and

(2) when and how the 3rd defendant obtained possession of the land.

The findings will be submitted within one month after the recess and seven days will be allowed for filing objections.

Any further question arising in the second appeal is reserved.

In compliance with the above order, the Subordinate Judge of Kubakonam submitted the following

FINDINGS:—I have been asked to submit on the evidence on record findings on the following issues:—

(1) How long the 1st defendant or any person who derived his possession from or through him continued to be in possession?

(2) When and how the 3rd defendant obtained possession of the land?

2. The first issue requires a preliminary finding on the issue as to which persons, if any, derived their possession through or under the 1st defendant. The District Munsif found that Korangu Samu was a tenant of the 3rd defendant's father and the 3rd defendant, and that there is nothing convincing on record to connect the tenancy of plaintiffs' 4th witness with that of Korangu Samu. This Court, on the other hand, says that it is in the evidence of this witness (plaintiffs' 4th witness) that he let into possession one Korangu Samu that the 3rd defendant would appear to have taken possession of the shop from the last named individual, and that so far as the suit site is concerned, any occupation or use thereof by any number of successive persons must be traced to the original permission derived under Exhibit A. The High Court do not consider this as a definite finding, but do not say what facts should be taken as concluded by findings.

3. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 began to argue before me that the suit site or shop is not included in the title-deeds of the plaintiffs, Exhibits B, G and A. That was not the basis on which the suit was tried and heard before the District Munsif, vide para. 7 of his judgment. It was not denied in this Court, too, on the previous occasion. The question of the title being in plaintiffs was not even questioned in the grounds of second appeal. I, therefore, disallowed the new ground of objection to the title and the title-deeds of plaintiffs.

4. It may, therefore, be accepted that plaintiffs, who were the owners of the property, let the 1st defendant into possession under Exhibit A in the year 1888, and that the 1st defendant sub-let the shop to the father of plaintiffs' 4th witness who describes himself as shop-keeper in Exhibit G. The lease, Exhibit A expires, with 30th Panguni, Vikruti (11th April 1891); and the 1st defendant executed no fresh lease deed thereafter. He says: "First plaintiff did not ask me to renew the lease deed. First plaintiff asked me to execute a fresh lease deed (for) sometime. I did not execute one. I did not pay rent directly to 1st plaintiff." It is not likely that 1st defendant did continue as lessee of the shop even after the period fixed in Exhibit A without giving a renewed rent chit, especially when the 1st defendant was not himself in actual possession. It is also strange that the attestation of Nagalinga who occupied the premises was not secured even on Exhibit A, and that 1st defendant did not secure any rent chit from Nagalinga and after his death from his son (plaintiffs' 4th witness). These considerations, no doubt, throw considerable suspicion on the reality of the 1st defendadt's tenancy itself under the plaintiffs and of the subtenancy of Nagalinga and plaintiffs' 4th witness under 1st defendant. But I am not prepared to attach any importance to these vague suggestions when the 3rd defendant (defence 1st witness) does not himself know who was in possession of the shop prior to Korangu Samu, who was admittedly in actual possession prior to 1894, the date of Exhibit I, according to the case both of the plaintiffs and of the defendants. Plaintiffs' 1st witness, the agent of the plaintiffs' family, swears to having collected rent from Nagalinga and his son (plaintiffs' 4th witness) till 1892, and files accounts, Exhibits C and D, in corroboration of his evidence. No satisfactory ground is made out for discrediting these pieces of evidence as regards collection of rent: and there is no satisfactory evidence of actual enjoyment of the shop by the 3rd defendant or his father during that period. This version of the collection of rent also relates to the period expressly covered by Exhibit A. I, therefore, find that the 1st defendant through his sub-lessees, Nagalinga, and Swaminadha, (plaintiffs' 4th witness) was in possession of the shop down to the year 1892.

5. The person that came into possession next is Karangu Samu. Plaintiffs claim Korangu Samu as let into possession by their sub-lessee, Swaminatha (plaintiffs' 4th witness), while the 3rd defendent claims him to be his father's lessee. His enjoyment of the shop is admitted by both sides. The only question for consideration is as to whose lessee he was. There is no mention of this personage in any part of the pleadings. Plaintiffs' 1st witness, the agent of the plaintiffs till 1892, makes no mention of Korangu Samu or his getting the shop from plaintiffs' 4th witness or even the fact that plaintiffs' 4th witness had to leave the place for Pondicherry for treatment. Agent Sreenivasa Iyengar, who succeeded plaintiffs' 1st witness, is not put forward, and there is no evidence as to whether he is alive or not. Plaintiffs' 2nd witness who professes to have collected rents of the shop does not mention this occupant's name in his examination-in chief, and it is elicited from him by the defence for the first time, that Ammanpettai Sami Chetty (alias Korangu Samu) was also trading in the plaint shop for two or three years and was paying rent. It is curious how this witness who professes to have collected rents from the occupants did not give the names of the occupants till their names were put to him in cross-examination, and how he ridiculously blunders and knows not what he deposes to, when he says "Nagalinga (who died prior to 1890) was in possession of the shop after Sami Chetty (Korangu Samu)." Even Nagalinga's son, Swaminatha (plaintiffs' 4th witness), does not return from Pondicherry till after five or six years later. The B Diary of the suit shows there was an interval between the examination of plaintiffs' 2nd witness and that of plaintiffs' 3rd witness (21st October 1909 to 6th November 1909). This interval appears to have been utilised to put forward for the first time the story of regular letting of the shop by Swaminatha (plaintiffs' 4th witness) to Korangu Samu. Plaintiffs' second witness was not able on 21st October 1909 to depose to this letting, but was content in repeating in re-examination that Sami Chetty (Korangu Samu) was also paying rent to Udayar (plaintiffs). Plaintiffs' 3rd witness (1st defendant) was not quite willing to be the father of this new story and would only depose "Sami Pillai (plaintiffs' 4th witness) let the shop on rent to Korangu Sami Pillai. Sami Pillai (later) said that Sami Pillai had asked him to pay the rent to Sami Pillai. This he said when I asked him to pay rent." Plaintiffs' 4th witness deposes: "After my father's death, I enjoyed it for 2 years. My father died 13—18½ years ago.....I left the shop for rent to Korangu Sami Chetty. He executed lease-deed to me which I lost. I asked Samia Chetty to pay the rent to Someswara Royar (3rd plaintiff) and asked him to pay the amount in my house. I left for Pondicherry for medical treatment for five years in Pondicherry, Mayavaram and other places. I returned to Melakaveri six years ago. When I returned, I was told that Someswara Royar has purchased it from the daughter of one Kumarasawmy Pillai. I have come to Court only this day in connection with this suit. I do not know for how many years my father took the shop on rent. I have not executed any lease-deed. I was paying rent for nearly 30 years. I took no receipt for the rent paid by me. I keep no accounts. There was no settled rent when my father took the lease." It is not possible to say if this is the son of the sub-lessee Nagalinga, from the evidence he gives, and from the stage of the case when he was put forward as witness. His is the only evidence that Korangu Sawmi was his tenant. I am not prepared to attach any weight to such evidence, especially when the agents of plaintiff (plaintiffs' witnesses Nos. 1 and 2) and the 1st defendant himself do not profess any tangible knowledge of the tenant, Korangu Sawmi, in actual occupation of the shop. Defence witnesses Nos. 1 to 5 do not also say if Korangu Samu, who was in possession of the shop, was tenant of plaintiffs or of th

3rd defendant. Korangu Samu is not put forward as witness by either side and the evidence does not show whether he is alive or dead. I, therefore, find that Korangu Samu was in possession of the shop after 1892 for two or three years (vide plaintiffs' 2nd witness), but he is not shown to be either the tenant of plaintiffs' sub-lessee or the tenant of 3rd defendant's father.

6. The possession of Korangu Samu carries the history of the suit shop down to about 1894 or 1895. There is no evidence worth the name about the possession of the suit shop in favour of the plaintiffs. The vague statement of plaintiffs' witnesses Nos. 2 and 3 that rent was paid till seven or eight years ago is worthless. Plaintiffs' 4th witness who was the plaintiffs' sub-lessee was away from the place after 1892 and knows nothing about the enjoyment of the suit shop and the payment thereof. Plaintiffs' witnesses Nos. 2 and 3 could not give even the names of the occupants of the shop and how they came into possession of the shop. The defendants' evidence of possession and enjoyment of the shop is cogent and convincing at least from 1895, the date of Exhibit II, if not from 1894, the date of Exhibit I. Exhibit I is unregistered and the tenant that held under it is not called. Exhibit II to VI series show defendants' possession and enjoyment. The Municipal receipts, Exhibit E series and F, are not of much value as showing possession. I, therefore, find that plaintiffs, the 1st defendant or persons that claim under him, are not proved to have been in possession subsequent to 1892, and that the 3rd defendant's father and the 3rd defendant and their lessees have been in possession and enjoyment of the suit shop from 18th December 1895, the date of Exhibit II.

7. The plaintiffs then contended that the enjoyment and possession of the shop is not possession of the site of the shop. It will be remembered that plaintiffs acquired only the bare site under Exhibit B and rented it out to 1st defendant under Exhibit A for the express purpose of putting up a shop for three years. The shop on the site appears to have been only a thatch and was renewed from time to time by the occupants—see Exhibit V and the leases, Exhibits II to IVa. It would, no doubt, be true that persons let into possession by the 1st defendant and those that claim under him cannot set up their own title or possession as well of the thatch as of the land. But where a person whose possession of the shop could not be traced to the 1st defendant or his lessees is in possession and enjoyment of the shop, the argument that such a person must be taken to have prescribed only for the superstructure and not for the site occupied by the thatch is unintelligible. The possession and enjoyment of the thatched shop is exclusive possession of the site as well. The defendants' non-payment of the Municipal taxes till recently and the payment of the same by the plaintiffs relates as well to the title of the thatch as to the site below. Municipal taxes are generally levied for the shop and not for bare sites. I, therefore, find that the possession and enjoyment of the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 covered both the shop and the site.

8. How the 3rd defendant obtained possession of the land is not clear from the evidence. Plaintiffs' 2nd witness does not say how the 3rd defendant came to be in possession of the shop or the land. He admits that Subramania Vadyar (the father of the 3rd defendant) was also in possession of the shop for some time. He does not say that they paid rent to any person or to the plaintiffs. Plaintiffs' 2nd witness, the direct lessee under plaintiffs and his sub-lessee (plaintiffs' 4th witness), do not say anything about the point. The 3rd defendant claimed the shop as his ancestral property, but let in no evidence about it except his own oath. He has given up that case in second appeal—see the grounds of appeal. He alleged in his written statement that the suit land was measured in his name in the survey that took place more than 12 years ago as Survey No. 1338. But the plaintiffs did not choose to question that statement at the trial, and the survey papers have not been put in. It is, however, clear from this evidence set out above, that 3rd defendant's father and after him the 3rd defendant have been in possession and enjoyment of the shop and the land from even prior to 1895, the date of Exhibit II taken by the 3rd defendant only, and that they did not hold under any person but in their own right. I am unable to agree with the observation of this Court cited above in para. 2 that all possession must be traced to Exhibit A, even where there is no evidence that the persons thus in possession have paid rent or attorned to the plaintiffs or 1st defendant or the sub-lessees. The evidence is that after 3rd defendant came to be in possession, not only he but all the shop-keepers refused to pay rent—see plaintiffs' 2nd witness. I, therefore, find that it is not shown how the 3rd defendant obtained possession of the land and that he, therefore, got into possession on his account and in his own right.

9. In the result, my findings on the issue are:—

(1) That the 1st defendant and his sub-lessees, Nagalinga and Swaminadha, were in possession only till the year 1892, and that Korangu Samu was in possession thereafter till the 3rd defendant's father came into possession some time prior to December 1895, and is not shown to be a person that held under 1st defendant or his sub-lessee, and that the 3rd defendant has been in possession of the land for some time prior to December 1895, at the worst, and that, as it is not shown how he obtained possession or that he obtained possession from or under plaintiffs' lessee or sub-lessees, the 3rd defendant was in possession in his own right and on his account.

This second appeal coming on for final hearing, after the return of the findings from the lower Appellate Court, upon the issues referred by this Court for trial on Wednesday, the 27th day of March 1912, and having stood over for consideration till this day, the Court delivered the following

ABDUR RAHIM, J.—It is clear from the facts as found by the Subordinate Judge that the plaintiffs, who are suing to eject the defendants from certain land, which is actually in the possession of the 3rd defendant, have not been in possession of the property since 1892, that in that year the plaintiffs' lessee, the 1st defendant, who, on the expiry of his lease which was for a term, was holding on as a tenant from year to year abandoned the land and that the 2nd and 3rd defendants have been in possession of the land from the end of 1895 asserting an absolute right thereto. The suit was instituted in 1908, i. e., more than 12 years after defendants Nos. 2 and 3 entered upon possession of the land. There can be no doubt that the defendants purported to hold the land adversely to the plaintiffs from the day on which they took possession and unless it is shown that the plaintiffs are entitled to wait as long as they have not given a notice to quit to the 1st defendant, who in fact quitted possession of the land in 1892 and that in the meantime, time will not run against them, the suit must be held to be time-barred. The learned Vakil for the plaintiffs (respondents) has argued that Article 144 of the Limitation Act applies and not Article 142. Even if so, there can be no doubt that the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 asserted a title adverse to the plaintiffs and were in possession in pursuance of such a claim. But reliance is placed on the authority of the cases, [Ramanadan Chetti v. Pulikutti Servai (1) and Molamal Illath v. Secretary of State (2)], which lay down that when a land is in possession of a tenant, the term of whose lease is outstanding and such tenant is ousted from possession by a trespasser, time will not run against the owner until the expiry of the term. I do not propose at present to consider whether the law is correctly laid down in these cases as that question was not raised at the bar although my learned brother, whose judgment I have had the advantage of reading, having expressed a doubt as to the correctness of these decisions, the question may have to be re-considered when it is properly raised. Nor is it necessary to consider how far these rulings are applicable in a case when the land at the date of dispossession was in the possession of a tenant from year to year. It is sufficient to say in this case, that the 1st defendant, who at least was a tenant from year to year in 1892 and does not contest the claim of the plaintiff, having abandoned the land for more than 12 years before the suit, there was nothing in the way of the plaintiff's taking steps in time to eject the 2nd and 3rd defendants if he chose to do so.

The result is that the second appeal will be allowed, the decree of the first Appellate Court reversed, and that of the District Munsif restored with costs in this and in the lower Appellate Court.

AMBALAVANA CHETTY v. SINGARAVELU ODAYAR.

SUNDARA AIYAR, J.—In this case the plaintiff instituted a suit to eject the defendants from a plot of land which, according to him, he leased to the 1st defendant for a period of three years in May 1888. The 1st and 2nd defendants alone were made parties to the suit. He stated in his plaint that rent was paid by the 1st defendant up to December 1896. The 2nd defendant was made a party on the ground that he "either through the 1st defendant or by some other means has been enjoying the plaint lands by setting up shop and trading in the plaint land." It is also alleged in the plaint that he gave notice for the surrender of the land on the 4th September 1908. The 1st defendant did not appear to contest the suit. The 2nd defendant denied plaintiffs' right to the land and alleged that he was holding it on lease under one Somasundara Vathiar. The latter person was subsequently made a party to the suit as 3rd defendant. He supported the contention of the 2nd defendant and alleged that the land belonged to him, and that he and his ancestors had been in possession for a very long period. The District Munsif dismissed the suit finding that the land never belonged to the plaintiff and that the 3rd defendant had been in possession prior to the suit for more than 12 years. The Subordinate Judge on appeal reversed the Munsif's decree holding that the plaintiffs' title was proved and also the lease by him to the 1st defendant in 1888. He also found that rent was paid to the plaintiffs by 1st defendant till 1894. He was of opinion that it must be presumed, though the 3rd defendant had been in possession after 1894, that he must have derived his possession from the lessees who entered on the land under plaintiff. The 2nd and 3rd defendants appealed to this Court, a finding was called for on two issues:—

(1) How long 1st defendant or any person who derived his possession from or through him continued to be in possession? and

(2) When and how 3rd defendant obtained possession of the land?

The present Subordinate Judge has submitted findings on these two issues. They are to the effect that the 1st defendant and his sub-lessee were in possession till the year 1892, that one Korangu Samu was in possession thereafter till shortly before December, 1895 and that it was not shown that he held under 1st defendant or his sub-lessee, that 3rd defendant came into possession, at any rate, sometime prior to December 1895, that it was not shown that he obtained possession from or under plaintiffs' lessee or sub-lessees, and that he was in possession in his own right and on his own account. On these findings, it is contended by Mr. T. Rangachariar, the learded Vakil for the respondent, that the Subordinate Judge's decree in plaintiffs' favour must be maintained. He contends that as plaintiffs' lessee held over and paid rent to plaintiff after the expiration of the period of the lease originally given to him, he became a tenant from year to year, that this tenancy was never terminated by notice given either by the plaintiff or by his lessee until the plaintiff did so shortly before the suit, that the possession of the 3rd and 2nd defendants, though it might have been adverse to plaintiff's lessee, could not become adverse to plaintiff himself until the lease to his lessee was terminated by notice and the 3rd defendant did not, therefore, acquire any right against him by limitation. He also contends that the onus was on the 3rd defendant to prove that his possession was not derived from plaintiffs' lessee and that the present Subordinate Judge ought to have presumed that his possession was not adverse even to the lessee. On the latter question, we intimated our opinion at the hearing that we were not prepared to dissent from the finding of the Subordinate Judge. Possession held by a person must be held to be in his own right even in cases that are governed by Article 144 of the Limitation Act, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary or any relationship between the parties or other circumstances that would throw on him the onus of proving that he intended to hold possession in denial of the owner's right. I do not consider it necessary to make any further observations on that point. The question for decision, therefore, is what is the rule of limitation applicable to a case where a person ousts from possession one holding land as tenant of another and the owner institutes a suit for recovery of the land against him, more than 12 years after the dispossession of the tenant. It is admitted that Article 139 of the Limitation Act is not applicable to such a case as it relates only to suits by a landlord to recover possession from a tenant, in which case the period of 12 years' limitation will commence to run when the tenancy is determined. It is contended for the appellant that Article 142 is the one properly applicable to the case, "for possession of immoveable property when the plaintiff while in possession of the property has been dispossessed or has discontinued the possession, and that the plaintiff was dispossessed when his tenant was deprived of possession." The respondent contends that the dispossession of the tenant would not be dispossession of the landlord and that Article 144, the residuary Article, relating to suits for possession of immoveable property or any interest therein, is the one that is applicable to the case. Assuming that the latter Article should be applied, it would make no difference in this case if the 3rd defendants' possession is held to be adverse to the plaintiff. The finding of the Appellate Court is that 3rd defendant held possession of the land in his own right as owner, claiming it as part of his own ancestral property. There can, therefore, be no doubt that so far as his animus was concerned, he did not claim a mere tenancy over the land or anything less than the absolute ownership over it. His possession, therefore, would be adverse to the plaintiff unless it can be held as a matter of law that so long as the plaintiff did not terminate his tenant's holding by giving him notice to quit, 3rd defendant's possession could not be adverse to him. This is, in fact, the contention strenuously urged by Mr. Rangachariar. A person who has given the lease of his land to another is in the eye of the law a reversioner. Article 140 provides that in a suit by a remainder-man or reversioner for possession of immoveable property, the starting point is when his estate falls into possession and Article 141 makes special provision for a suit by one particular class of reversioners, viz., by "a Hindu or Muhammadan entitled to the possession of immoveable property on the death of a Hindu or Muhammadan female." Now Article 140 exempts from its scope a 'landlord,' by providing that it applies only to a suit by a reversioner other than a landlord. If it was intended that limitation should always start in the case of a suit by landlord against one who is not his tenant only "when his estate falls into possession," it is not apparent why the statute expressly exempts a landlord from the class of persons to whom Article 140 is applicable. That Article does not apply to a suit against a tenant as Article 139 provides for such a suit. The inference to be drawn from Article 140 appears to be that in a suit against a trespasser by one who had leased his land to a tenant, limitation is not postponed necessarily until his estate falls into possession. If the trespasser asserts only a right of tenancy then, no doubt, limitation would not commence against the landlord until the tenancy (if his right to it is complete) has come to an end. If he has not acquired by his adverse possession the right of a tenant under the statute, then Article 144 would be applicable, his possession being regarded as adverse to the lessor only when the latter's estate falls into possession. But what is the result if the trespasser has, during the period of his possession, claimed to hold as absolute owner. The respondent contends that notwithstanding such claim, the law will not regard his possession as adverse to the lessor but only to the lessee and that the lessor could not maintain a suit in ejectment against a trespasser until the tenancy of the lessee is terminated by efflux of time, by notice to quit or in some other manner provided by law. It is argued that it would be illogical and unjust to the lessor to hold that the trespasser's possession could be adverse to him. This argument would be entitled to much weight if it could be regarded as correct to lay down that a landlord could not sue a trespasser for possession until he has terminated the tenancy of the lessee. The question, therefore, is, "Is a landlord always incapable, unless he has terminated the tenancy of a lessee who has been ousted from possession by a stranger, of maintaining a suit for recovery against the latter? It is clear that a trespasser could not maintain such a proposition on the ground of privity with the tenant as he claims to hold against the tenant. The plea must be based on the broad ground that the plaintiff in a suit for ejectment must always establish his own present title to possession and that the trespasser defendant is entitled to set up the right of any third person to possession as against the plaintiff. Such a proposition, though at one time regarded as thoroughly well established, is no longer regarded as universally true, it being now recognized that the plaintiff in a suit in ejectment has only to prove a better title to possession than the defendant. Would this not be done by his showing that he was in possession through his tenant and could it not be held that such possession is enough to entitle him to recover as against the trespasser, though he might not be entitled to retain possession if his tenant claimed it against him on the ground that the tenancy had not been terminated according to law? Article 140 would seem to proceed on the basis that a trespasser's possession might be a disturbance of the right to possession not only of the tenant but of the landlord. In Krishna Gobind Dhur v. Hari Churan Dhur (3), Wilson, J., observed:—"Probably in this Article, (i.e., Article 140), the expression other than a landlord, means 'other than a landlord as such suing his tenant'." With all respect, it is difficult to accept this contention as Article 140 is intended to apply to suits by remainder-men and reversioners against all persons including trespassers, and not merely against persons holding a limited estate on the expiration of which the remainder or reversion falls in.

In cases falling under section 335 of the Civil Procedure Code, the High Courts have held in various cases that when a lessee is evicted by a purchaser in execution of a decree, the landlord is also to be regarded as evicted and may apply for relief under the section. See Braja Bala Devi v. Gurudas Mundal (4), in which the previous decisions are collated. Again it has been held that where a tenant is ousted by a trespasser, the landlord may institute a summary suit for possession under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act. See Rangaswmi Iyengar v. Krishna Govinden (5), Jagannatha Charry v. Rama Rayer (6) and Innusi Pillai v. Sivagnanam Desikar (7). In Ammu v. Ramakrishna (8), this Court held that where the mortgagee's tenants were dispossessed by the Government and subsequently held as tenants of Government, their possession as tenants of Government would be adverse not only to the mortgagee but to the mortgagor also. The learned Judges, Turner, C. J., and Muthuswami Aiyar, J., observed: "We cannot assent to the contention that so long as the mortgagor is entitled only to the equity of redemption, there can be no invasion of his interest. Of course, there may be cases in which the estate of the mortgagee is alone the subject of trespass and the interest of the mortgagor is not assailed. The title by prescription may be acquired to the estate of the mortgagee leaving the interest of the mortgagor unaffected, e.g., where a wrongful claimant establishes himself in the place of the mortgagee admitting the interest of the mortgagor and claiming rights only on the footing of the mortgage. But there are other cases in which the rights and inerests of the mortgagor and mortgagee are equally invaded, e.g., when under a sale for arrears of revenue the purchaser acquires possession and thenceforward holds adversely both to the mortgagor and mortgagee or when the mortgagor has remained in possession and a stranger ousts him from the lands." The learned Judges go on to say:—"Where the mortgagor may have made over possession to the mortgagee, if the interest of the mortgagor be invaded although he has not actual possession of the land, he cannot bring a suit for redemption against the wrong-doer, but a suit for the recovery of the interest from which he has been ousted according as he has, or has not, been actually dispossessed of the land. The limitation which would have applied to his suit under the Act of 1871 is prescribed by clause 143 or 145 to the second Schedule of the Act." The same view was held by the Bombay High Court in Chinto v. Janki (9), dissenting from the earlir decision in Vithoba v. Gonga Ram (10) and agreeing with Ammu v. Ramakrishna (8) and Puttappa v. Timmaji (11). Foulton, J., no doubt, observed that the ouster of the mortgagee unaccompanied by any further acts of aggression cannot give any cause of action to the mortgagor, and he thought that the principle laid down in Scott v. Newington (12), viz., that where the pledgee of goods in his turn pledges them and the goods ultimately find their way to a stranger, the pledger would be entitled to recover them against a stranger, might not be applicable in India; and Telang, J., observed that according to English Law ejectment against a stranger cannot be maintained in the name of the mortgagor except, perhaps, in circumstances similar to those in which the action might be maintained against the mortgagee himself, i.e, after payment of the mortgage-money. The learned Judge observed that though the rule in English Law is due to the fact that the legal title is, under English Law, conveyed to the mortgagee, still it would seem that the same rule ought to be applied in India also. Both the learned Judges, however, were of opinion that the trespasser might prove that his possession was in fact adverse to the mortgagor also. The position of a landlord, with respect to his right to eject a trespasser, would seem to stand on a better footing than that of a mortgagor would generally stand. The mortgagor, when he gives possession to the mortgagee, has generally no interest in the land until the mortgage is redeemed. But the lessor is entitled to receive rent from his tenant. If the latter is ousted by a stranger, he cannot claim to recover rent against that stranger. Would it be right then to say that he cannot also get back possession of his land from him? Suppose the tenant is in insolvent circumstnces. He would then be unable to recover his rent unless it be by obtaining a decree against the tenant and putting up the tenancy to sale. Suppose the tenancy is for 50 years and the tenant after his dispossession continues to pay the rent for 12 years but fails to do so subsequently. If the landlord has no right to recover possession against the trespasser, then it would seem that the landlord would not have any remedy at all for the recovery of his rent. For it would seem that a person who acquires a title by adverse possession against a tenant is not bound to fulfil the obligations of the tenant that arise out of his contract with the landlord. See O'Connor v. Foley (13). There appear to me to be weighty reasons for holding that as against a stranger, a landlord is entitled to recover possession even though his tenant's lease has not been terminated. In Bissessuri Dabeea v. Baroda Kanta Roy Chowdry (14), it was held that a landlord could claim against a trespasser that possession of the land should be given to his tenant. In Sarat Chundra v. Naritya Gopal (15), the same view was maintained. There is no inflexible rule of law that a trespasser can refuse to give up possession to a plaintiff, simply because a third party may be entitled to possession as against him (the plaintiff). Thus, there are cases where beneficiaries may sue to compel a trustee to restore possession to the trustee; a senior member of a Malabar tarwad is in some cases entitled to recover possession from a person wrongfully holding the property of the tarwad, although after getting possession, he may be bound to give up the property to the karnam. In Womesh Chunder Goopto v. Raj Narain Roy (16), a majority of the Court held that the possession of a trespasser would not be adverse to the landlord during the currency of an under-tenure but this decision was passed while Act XIV of 1859 was in force when there was no indication of the adoption of a contrary view by the Legislature such as we observe in Article 140 of the later Limitation Act. A contrary view was taken, on the other hand, in Lekhraj Roy v. Court of Wards (17) and Brindaban Chunder Sircar Chowdhry v. Bhoopal Chunder Biswas (18). In Krishna Gobind Dhar v. Hari Churn (3), already referred to, it was held that the landlord was not bound to sue the trespasser before the termination of the lease to his tenant. That case was followed in Sharat Sundari v. Bhobo Pershad (19), but there the trespasser asserted only a tenancy right though not on the terms on which the landlord had leased land to his real tenant. See also Gunga Kumar Mitter v. Asutosh Gosami (20). On the other hand, in Gobinda Nath Shaha Chowdhry v. Surja Kanta Lahiri (21), Bannerjee and Rampini, JJ., held that the trespasser's possession was adverse when the landlord sued for possession after obtaining relinquishment of his tenant's right and the learned Judges distinguished the earlier cases in Sharat Sundari v. Bhobo Pershad (19) and Gunga Kumar Mitter v. Asutosh Gosami (20). In Kishwar Nath Sahai Dey v. Koli Sankar Sahai (22), in which the facts were very similar to those in the present case, it was held that the trespasser's possession might be adverse to the landlord.

The learned Judges held that the principle of the decisions in Krishna Gobind v. Hari Churn (3) and Sharat Sundari v. Bhobo Pershad (19) was not applicable where the tenancy is one from year to year "inasmuch as the landlord could have determined such annual tenure if he were so minded." They directed an inquiry into the question whether, as a matter of fact, the trespasser did hold adversely to the landlord. In Thamman Pande v. The Maharaja of Vizianagaram (23), the Allahabad High Court preferred to hold that the landlord's cause of action against a trespasser would not arise until the tenancy was terminated The learned Judges draw attention to the observations of Markby, J., in Bejoy Chunder Banerjee v. Kally Prosonno Mukerjee (24), where that learned Judge said: "By adverse possession I understand to be meant possession by a person holding the land on his own behalf, or some person other than the true owner having the right to immediate possession." But the whole question is whether or not a landlord should be held to be entitled to recover possession against a stranger, notwithstanding that the tenant might be entitled to it as against the landlord. In Ramanadan Chetti v. Pulikutti Servai (1), this Court, no doubt, held that where there is a lease for a term outstanding, the landlord cannot seek to recover possession as against the trespasser during the currency of the term. See also Molamal Illath v. Secretary of State (2) and Narain Das v. Lalta Prasad (25).

But in this case, as in Kishwar Nath Sahai Dey v. Kali Sankar Sahai (22), there is no outstanding lease for any definite term. It may be doubted whether the decision in Ramanadan Chetti v. Pulikutti Servai (1) is in accordance with the view held both by this Court and by other High Courts, that a suit under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act may be maintained by the landlord against a trespasser and that the landlord can ask for relief under section 335 of the Civil Procedure Code when his tenant is ousted from possession. On the whole, I am inclined to hold that the landlord's cause of action against a trespasser arises when his tenant is dispossessed if the trespasser claims to hold the land adversely both to the tenant and to the landlord. The difficulty has been avoided in England by appropriate statutory provisions. There in the case of a tenancy from year to year or other period, the landlord's right to enter accrues at the end of the first year or other period from the last receipt of rent whichever last happens and he has 12 years from that time in which he has to assert his right. Under the old law, the landlord might re-enter at the expiration of his lease or within 20 years from that time even though he had during the lease discontinued the receipt of rent from his tenant. Now, if he has discontinued receipt of the rent, he has 12 years from such discontinuance. Both in England and in this country, an equity of redemption and the right of a landlord as reversioner might be acquired by prescription by a stranger even though the mortgage or tenancy may not have come to an end. It seems to be in accordance with this principle to hold that the equity of redemption or reversion might be extinguished during the continuance of the mortgage or tenancy, though it may not vest as such equity or reversion in the person.

The decision of this case, however, need not necessarily be rested on the conclusion I have arrived at on the general question as to the time from which limitation will run against a landlord in a suit against a trespasser. It would appear that in this case the tenant completely abandoned possession of the land in 1892 without paying any rent to the plaintiff, though he did not give any formal notice to him intimating his intention not to hold further as a tenant. In such a case, where the tenancy is only from year to year, it can hardly be said that the tenant had any right which he could successfully assert against his landlord. As pointed out in 15 American Cyclopaedia of Law and Procedure: "An outstanding title sufficient to defeat an action of ejectment must be one which has a present subsisting and operative legal force." Ram Chung v. Gora Chand Chung (26).

There is yet another ground on which the plaintiff must be held not entitled to recover.

It was not his case that the 3rd defendant acquired the title of the tenant by prescription and that he terminated the tenancy thus acquired by proper notice to quit. In paragragh 5 of the plaint he alleged that the 2nd defendant was somehow holding the land and that he had no right whatever in the plaint land. The title by prescription was acquired by the 3rd defendant and not by the 2nd. The latter was only holding under the former. Admittedly no notice terminating the tenancy was given to the former.

In the result, the second appeal must be allowed.

I concur in the decree proposed by my learned brother.

Appeal allowed.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.
SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 196 OF 1910.
December 1, 1911.
Present:—Mr. Justice Mookerjee and Mr. Justice Carnduff.

DIGBIJOY ROY AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

versus

Sheikh ATA RAHAMAN AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Landlord and tenant—Receipt of rent from transferee of holding—Receipt not as from transferee but agent of old tenant, effect of—Pleader, authority of—Receipt of claim from transferee and making it over to plaintiff—Whether amounts to recognition of validity of transfer—Pleader—Admission of question of fact, when binds client.

When rent has been received from the transferee of a holding not as a transferee but only as the agent or representative of the original tenant, there is no recognition of the validity of the transfer.

Khoodeeram Chatterjee v. Rookhinee Boistobee, 15 W. R. 197, followed.

Sreematty Kurani Dassi v. Sajoni Kant Singh, 12 C. W. N. 539, relied upon.

Baroda Charan Dutt v. Hemlata Dasi, 3 Ind. Cas. 561; 13 C. W. N. 833, 10 C. L. J. 610, referred to.

In a suit for rent, the tenant alleged that he had transferred the holding, and the transferee was added as a defendant. The latter then made a payment of the amount claimed to the plaintiff's Pleader who certified the payment to the Court and made over the amount to the plaintiff:

Held, that the acceptance of the sum paid by the transferee did not amount in law to a recognition of the validity of the transfer.

Gaur Lal Sirkar v. Rameshwar Bhumik, 6 B. L. R. App. 92; Wilson v. Radha Dulari, 2 C. W. N. 63 and Rasamory Purkait v. Srinath Moyra, 7 C. W. N. 132, followed.

A Pleader can bind his client by an admission upon a question of fact, provided that such question falls within the scope of the suit in which he has been retained.

Kower Narain Roy v. Sreenath, 9 W. R. 485; Rajunder Narain v. Bijai Govind, 2 M. I. A. 253; Hingan Lal v. Mansa Ram, 18 A. 384; Venkata v. Bhashyakarlu, 22 M. 538 and Nundo Lal v. Nistarinee Dassi, 27 C. 428; 4 C. W. N. 169, referred to.

Therefore, where there is no question as to the liability of a transferee-defendant in a suit against the transferor-tenant, much less is there any question as to the validity of the alleged transfer, it would be beyond the scope of the authority of the Pleader to bind his client by an admission of the validity of the transfer.

Appeal from the decree of the Sub Judge of Hooghly, dated December 9th, 1909, reversing that of the Munsif of that place, dated January 25th, 1909.

Babu Atul Krishna Roy, for the Appellants.

Babu Jadu Nath Kanjilal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is directed against a decision by which the Subordinate Judge, in reversal of the decree of the original Court, has made a decree in favour of the defendant in a suit for ejectment. There is no controversy as to the circumstances under which the action has been commenced. The plaintiff alleges that the holding in dispute is non-transferable, and that nevertheless the original tenant has transferred it to the defendant by a conveyance executed on the 26th March 1906. He, therefore, seeks to eject the defendant as a trespasser. The grounds upon which the claim is resisted, are three-fold: first, that the plaintiff has recognised the defendant as his tenant; secondly, that the holding is permanent and transferable, and thirdly, that if it is an ordinary occupancy-holding, it is transferable by custom or local usage.

The Court of first instance found in favour of the plaintiff upon each of these points and made a decree in his favour. Upon appeal, the Subordinate Judge has reversed that decision upon the first of the points stated and has dismissed the suit; he has expressed no opinion as to the second and third grounds on which the claim is resisted.

On behalf of the plaintiff, it has been contended in this Court that upon the facts found there has been no recognition of the defendant as tenant by the plaintiff. It is not disputed that on the 17th March 1908, the plaintiff instituted a suit for rent against the original tenant for the period between April 1904 and December 1907. On the 9th April 1908, the tenant filed a written statement in which he alleged that he had transferred his interest in the holding to the present defendant on the 26th March 1906. The transferee appeared in Court at the same time and prayed that he might be added as a defendant. The Court granted this application and the result was that the transferee was treated as a party defendant. On the same day, the transferee made a payment of the amount claimed in the suit to the Pleader of the plaintiff who certified the payment to the Court. The Court thereupon recorded an order that the suit was dismissed on full satisfaction. It is not disputed that the sum paid to the Pleader was on that very day made over by him to the plaintiff.

The Court of first instance upon these facts held that the acceptance of the sum paid by the transferee to the Pleader of the plaintiff did not amount in law to a recognition of the validity of the transfer. The Sub-Judge has taken a different view and has held that the plaintiff is estopped from questioning the validity of the purchase by the defendant. On behalf of the plaintiff, this view has been controverted on two grounds, namely, first, that as the Pleader in his petition to the Court stated explicitly that he had received the money from the transferee marfatwari, there was no recognition, and secondly, that the act of the Pleader was not binding upon the plaintiff as the Pleader had no authority to recognise the alleged transfer. In our opinion, there is no room for reasonable controversy that the acceptance of the sum paid by the transferee did not amount to a recognition of the validity of the transfer. It is clear from an examination of the terms of the petition that the Pleader acted very cautiously. The petition recited that the sum had been paid through the transferee. The Bengali word used is marfatwari. The learned Vakil for the appellant has invited our attention to the cases of Gaur Lal Sarkar v. Rameswar Bhumik (1), Wilson v. Radha Dulari (2) and Rasamoy Purkait v. Srinath Moyra (3), where the earlier authorities on the point will be found collected to show that an acceptance of rent under circumstances similar to those of the present case does not in law operate as a recognition of the validity of the transfer. The cases mentioned undoubtedly support the contention of the appellant. But the case nearest in point is that of Khoodeeram Chatterjee v. Rookhinee Boistobee (4), which is a direct authority for the proposition that when rent has been received from a transferee not as a transferee but only as the agent or representative of the original tenant, there is no recognition of the validity of the transfer. A similar view underlies the decision in Kurani Dassi v. Sajoni Kant Singh (5). The view we take is not opposed to the decision in Baroda Churn Dutt v. Hemlata Dasi (6), where it was ruled that acceptance of rent from a mortgagee of an occupancy-holding in his character as mortgagee amounted to a recognition of the validity of the mortgage. It is obvious that in that case the money was accepted by the landlord from the transferee who professed to act in a particular character and that character was recognised by the landlord. Similar observations apply to the decision in Thomas Barclay v. Syed Hossain Ali Khan (7), where money was accepted by the landlord with notice that it was deposited by a transferee who claimed protection in that character. The decision of the Judicial Committee in Naba Kumari Debi v. Behari Lal Sen (8), upon which much reliance was placed by the learned Vakil for the respondent, is also clearly distinguishable. In that case, the money was paid by the occupier who claimed to be a transferee of the disputed tenure, and the receipt granted to him showed that the landlord recognised that he made the payment in his character as transferee. Consequently, the acceptance of money under such circumstances was equivalent to a recognition of the validity of the transfer. It has been argued, however, by the learned Vakil for the respondent that the language of the petition is ambiguous and that as the transferee was an infant on whose behalf the rent was paid by his guardian, the statement in the petition might well be interpreted to mean that the money was received from the infant transferee through his guardian. We are not prepared to accept this ingenious construction. We cannot overlook the fact that the presumption is that the Pleader acted within the scope of his authority. It is now well settled, as is clear from the decision in Bhut Nath Sircar v. Ram Lal Sircar (9) and Jagapati v. Ekambara (10), that although a Pleader has no power to compromise a suit unless he is specially authorised in that behalf, he can bind his client by an admission upon a question of fact, [Kower Narain v. Sreenath (11); Rajunder Narain v. Bijai Govind (12); Hingan Lal v. Mansa Ram (13) and Venkata Narasimha v. Bhashyakarlu (14)], provided that question falls within the scope of the suit in which he has been retained [Nundo Lal v. Nistarinee Dassi (15); Swinfer v. Chelmsford (16).] In the case before us, the question in controversy in the suit for rent was the liability of the original tenant defendant to pay to the plaintiff landlord the rent claimed. There was no question as to the liability of the transferee defendant, much less was there any question as to the validity of the transfer alleged. Under these circumstances, it would clearly be beyond the scope of the authority of the Pleader to bind his client by an admission of the validity of the transfer. It was possibly this fact which led the Pleader to act with caution and justifies the language used by him in the petition. We are, therefore, of opinion that there has been no recognition of the validity of the transfer in favour of the present defendant. In this view, the decree made by the Subordinate Judge cannot be sustained.

The learned Vakil for the respondent has, however, strenuously contended that it is possible to support the decision upon a different ground. He has argued that if the payment of the 9th April, 1908, be deemed to have been made not by the transferee as such but as on behalf and for the benefit of the original tenant, there was a recognition of the subsistence of the tenancy in spite of the transfer of the 26th March 1906. Consequently, there has been no abandonment of the tenancy and the defendant is entitled to resist the claim for ejectment on the ground that a subsisting tenancy still intervenes between the plaintiff and the defendant. In support of this proposition, reliance has been placed upon the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Gridhari Lall Roy v. Bengal Government (17). That decision, however, is clearly distinguishable and is of no assistance to the respondent. The decision is merely an authority for the elementary proposition that the plaintiff in an action in ejectment must succeed on the strength of his own title and that it is open to the defendant, though he may have no title, to plead jus tertii to defeat the claim of the plaintiff. In the case before us, even if it be assumed that the effect of the acceptance of the money paid on the 9th April 1908, is the recognition of the subsistence of the tenancy up to December 1907, it does not follow that there was any tenancy in existence at the date of the institution of the suit. It is not disputed that at the time when the present action was commenced, the original tenant was not in occupation, and the person in possession was the defendant. It is also not disputed that the defendant came into occupation on the assumption that he had acquired a valid title by purchase, and that his transferee had severed his connection with the holding. Under these circumstances, the legitimate inference is that there had been an abandonment of the tenancy by the original tenant. The defendant, therefore, if the holding is not proved to be transferable, is a trespasser in occupation and is liable to be ejected.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, and the decree of the Subordinate Judge set aside. As the questions raised in the third and fourth issues have been found against the defendant by the Subordinate Judge, the decree of the Court of first instance will be restored. In view of the fact that the defendant paid a sum of money which found its way into the hands of the plaintiff, we direct that each party bear his own costs of the litigation throughout.

Appeal allowed.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.
SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 31 OF 1910.
November 21, 1911.
Present:—Mr. Justice Mookerjee and Mr. Justice Carnduff.
SAJJAD HOSSAIN AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS
versus
RAM LAL SHAHU—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Suit—Institution—Failure to carry out strictly judicial order or statutory direction—Suit allowed to be withdrawn—Payment of defendant's costs made condition precedent to institution of fresh suit—Institution of fresh suit without paying defendant's costs—Costs paid subsequently on date fixed by Court—Suit to be treated as filed on day costs were paid—Judgment—Judgment based on decision of question not in issue, bad.

It cannot be laid down as an inflexible proposition of law that failure to strictly carry out statutory directions or judicial orders does always make it obligatory upon a Court of Justice to dismiss the suit as improperly instituted.

Jagat Tarini Dasi v. Naba Gopal Chaki, 34 C. 305; 5 C. L. J. 270 and Sarat Chandra Banerjee v. Apurba Krishna Roy, 11 Ind. Cas. 187; 15 C. W. N. 925; 14 C. L. J. 55, relied upon.

A suit was allowed to be withdrawn with liberty to bring a fresh suit on the same cause of action, but the payment of the defendant's costs was made a condition precedent to the institution of the fresh suit. The plaintiff brought a fresh suit without paying the costs of the defendant. The Court, upon an objection taken on behalf of the defendant, directed that those costs must be paid within a day, and they were duly deposited:

Held, that the suit was competent, but it must be taken to have been validly instituted only on the day on which the costs were deposited.

Jogi Ahir v. Bishen Dayal, 18 C. 83; Jeun Muchi v. Budhiram Muchi, 32 C. 339; 1 C. L. J. 43 and Gopi Lal v. Lala Naggu Lal, 10 Ind. Cas. 6; 14 C. L. J. 105; 15 C. W. N. 998, relied upon.

Chandu Lal Khusalji v. Awad bin Umed Sultan, 21 B. 351, distinguished.

A judgment based upon the decision of a question which was neither raised in the written statement, nor is covered by any of the issues, is bad.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge of Saran, dated September 29th, 1909, reversing that of the Second Sub-Judge of that District, dated April 19th, 1907.

Moulvis Syed Shamsul Huda and Syed Enayet Karim, for the Appellants.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghose and Babu Dwarka Nath Mitter, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The subject-matter of the litigation which has given rise to this appeal is one-fourth share of Mouza Ordewa. The plaintiffs-appellants base their title on a mortgage-deed executed by the owners on the 27th February 1893. The defendant founds his title on a subsequent purchase at a sale held under the Public Demands Recovery Act. The case for the plaintiffs is that the mortgagee enforced his security and obtained a decree on the 16th December 1898, which was subsequently made absolute on the 30th June 1899; thereafter the decree was assigned in their favour on the 19th May 1901. The decree was executed in due course and the property purchased by the plaintiffs. The defendant resisted the claim substantially on the ground that the mortgage was fictitious and that, consequently, the plaintiffs had not acquired any valid title to the property.

In the Court of first instance, the Subordinate Judge held that the mortgage, bond relied upon by the plaintiffs was a genuine transaction. He also found that the consideration for the assignment of the mortgage-decree had been sufficiently proved. In this view, the Subordinate Judge made a decree in favour of the plaintiffs. Upon appeal, the District Judge has reversed that decision. In, an elaborate judgment he has held that the assignment in favour of the plaintiffs was fraudulent, and, so far as we can gather, he was also inclined to doubt the genuineness of the mortgage transaction.

The plaintiffs have now appealed to this Court and on their behalf it has been contended that the judgment of the District Judge is vitiated, because his conclusions are based upon the decision of a question, namely, the true nature of the assignment of the mortgage-decree, which was neither raised in the written statement nor is covered by any of the issues. In answer to this argument, it has been contended on behalf of the defendant that the findings of the District Judge are conclusive and cannot be questioned in second appeal. An attempt has also been made to support the decree of dismissal made by the District Judge on the ground that inasmuch as the suit had been instituted without the previous payment of the costs incurred by the defendant in an earlier litigation relating to the same subject-matter which was withdrawn by the plaintiffs, the suit was not maintainable and was liable to be dismissed on that ground alone. It is necessary to consider, in the first place, the validity of this objection.

SAJJAD HOSSAIN v. RAM LAL SHAHU.

It appears from an examination of the record that in the previous suit, the Court granted the plaintiffs leave to withdraw from their suit, with liberty to bring a fresh suit on the same cause of action, provided the defendant was paid his costs of the suit. It was further stated that the payment of costs would be a condition precedent to the institution of a fresh suit, if any, by the plaintiffs. This order was made on the 10th April 1906. It is admitted that on the 5th October 1907, the plaintiffs commenced the present action without the payment of the costs awarded to the defendant. A preliminary objection was thereupon taken by the defendant and the Court directed, on the 26th August 1908, that the costs must be paid within a day. The costs were duly deposited on the day following and the Subordinate Judge held that the suit was competent. In support of this view, the Subordinate Judge appears to have relied upon the case of Abdul Aziz Molla v. Ebrahim Molla (1). The District Judge has, upon this part of the case, accepted the view of the Subordinate Judge and has distinguished the case of Hare Nath Das v. Syed Hossain Ali (2), upon which reliance was placed on behalf of the defendant. In this Court, it has been argued by the respondent that as payment of costs was a condition precedent to the institution of a fresh suit by the plaintiffs, the suit cannot be treated as properly instituted. In support of this position, reliance has been placed upon the decision in Chandu Lal Khusalji v. Awad bin Umar Sultan (3). In our opinion, the case just mentioned is distinguishable. No doubt, the order made on the 18th April 1906 ought to have been carried out before the suit was instituted and the suit must be taken to have been validly instituted only on the day on which the costs were deposited. This, however, does not affect the position of the defendant, because no question of limitation arises whether the suit be taken to have been instituted on the 5th October 1907 or on the 27th August 1908. We are, therefore, of opinion that it is not obligatory upon the Court to dismiss the suit on the technical ground that the plaint had been presented before the costs were paid to the defendant. The view we take is supported by the decisions of this Court in the cases of Jogi Ahir v. Bishen Dayal (4); Jeun Muchi v. Budhiram Muchi (5) and Gopilal v. Lala Naggu Lal (6). The cases of Jagat Tarini Dasi v. Nabu Gopal Chaki (7) and Sara Chandra Banerjee v. Apurba Krishna Roy (8), show that it cannot be laid down as an inflexible proposition of law that failure to carry out strictly statutory directions or judicial orders does always make it obligatory upon a Court of Justice to dismiss the suit as improperly instituted. We must, therefore, overrule the objection taken on behalf of the respondent.

In so far as the appeal is concerned, it is clear from an examinatien of the written statement and the issues framed in the case that no question was raised as to the fraudulent nature of the assignment of the decree in favour of the plaintiffs. Reliance was particularly placed on behalf of the respondent upon the sixth and the seventh paragraph of the written statement. But it is clear that in these paragraphs, although the mortgage transaction is impugned as fraudulent, no reference is made directly or indirectly to the assignment in favour of the plaintiffs. It is further manifest that no such question was raised in the third issue which is in the following terms:—"Was the mortgage-bond relied on by the plaintiff a sham transaction. Were the decree obtained on it and the sale in execution thereof tainted with fraud?" In our opinion, the District Judge ought not to have determined the question of the true character of the assignment which was not impeached as fraudulent in the Court of first instance. The only question before him was whether the mortgage-bond, which was the foundation of the title of the plaintiffs, was or was not a genuine transaction

The result, therefore, is that this appeal must be allowed, the decree of the District Judge set aside and the case remanded to him in order that the appeal may be re-heard.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.
FULL BENCH.
SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 43 OF 1910.
May 23, 1912.
Present:—Mr. Justice Robertson, Mr. Justice Rattigan and Mr. Justice Shah Din.
GANESHA AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS
MUL CHAND AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 462, 506—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXII, r. 7, and Sch. II, Para. 1—Application to Court for reference to arbitration, whether an "agreement"—Guardian ad litem or next friend of minor, whether can make application without leave of Court, or whether he can agree to be bound by oath of the other party without such leave—Leave to be expressly recorded—Effect of absence of such leave—Agreement void against minor but only voidable against other parties—Minor—Duty of Court.

Under the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, as well as under the Code of 1908, the guardian ad litem of a minor defendant, or the next friend of a minor plaintiff, must obtain the express sanction of the Court, if he wishes, on behalf of his ward, to refer the matter in dispute or any question involved in the suit to arbitration; and an omission, on the part of such guardian or next friend, to obtain such sanction has the effect of making all proceedings consequent on such reference voidable against all parties other than the minor. In other words, an application of the guardian or next friend under section 506 of the former Code or under Schedule II, para. 1 of the present Code, comes within the purview of section 462 of the former Code or Order XXXII, rule 7 of the present Code, as the case may be, and unless the leave of the Court is expressly obtained and recorded, the application to refer will have the same effect, and be open to the same objections, as would any other agreement or compromise entered into by such guardian or next friend with reference to the suit without the leave of the Court expressly recorded in the proceedings.

The leave or sanction of the Court must be obtained and must be expressly recorded if the reference to arbitration is to be valid for all purposes and against all parties including the minor, but in a case where such sanction has not been obtained, the reference is not necessarily invalid or void. The minor alone can claim to avoid it.

A reference to arbitration, is an agreement with reference to the suit and as such within the purview of the general provisions of law embodied in section 462 of the former Code and Order XXXII, rule 7 of the present Code.

A reference to arbitration, under section 462 of the Code of 1882, or under the first para. of the second Schedule to the present Code, has "reference to the suit," for it is only matters in difference in the suit that can be so referred to arbitration through the Court. Therefore, an application preferred to the Court by the parties, agreeing to make such reference, is an "agreement."

The provisions of section 462 of the Code of 1882 or of Order XXXII, rule 7 of the present Code are enacted for the protection of minors who are unable to look after their own interests and to whom the Court stands in a quasi-tutelary position. The guardians and next friends of minors are not invariably honest, and even if honest, are sometimes careless and occasionally lacking in intelligence. Therefore, the duty of safeguarding the interests of the minors, so far as is practicable, is thrown upon the Courts.

Quære—Whether the express sanction of the Court is not needed when a guardian or next friend of a minor agrees, on his behalf, to be bound by the oath of the other party to the suit?

Second appeal from the order of the Additional Divisional Judge, Ferozepore, Division, dated 2nd August 1909, confirming that of the District Judge, Hissar, dated 18th January 1909, dismissing the claim.

Mr. Beni Parshad Khosla and Lala Lajpat Rai, for the Appellants.

Lala Dwarka Das, for the Respondents.

ORDER OF REFERENCE.

The facts of the present case are as follows:—

The village manza Bhoda Khera, in the Hissar District, was originally owned by the Skinner family and was sold in its entirety on the 7th January 1893 to one Sheikh Allah Dia of Delhi.

Fourteen persons, who owned occupancy-rights in the village, brought a suit for pre-emption in respect of the sale, and among the plaintiffs was Rawal, the grandfather of the present plaintiffs. The claim for pre-emption was dismissed by the Sub Judge, Hissar, whereupon the pre-emptors appealed to this Court and it was during the pendency of that appeal that Rawal died and as his son Lakha, the father of plaintiffs, had pre-deceased him, the plaintiffs were brought on the record as his representatives with Bishna, their paternal grand-uncle, as their guardian ad litem. The appeal was decided in favour of the pre-emptors on the 12th April 1897, and they were accordingly granted a decree conditional on the payment of Rs. 11,320 to the vendee.

It appears that the pre-emptors had been compelled to borrow large sums of money from one Jallu for the purposes of this case. Subsequently, Jallu pressed for payment, and in order to pay him off, the pre-emptors had recourse to present defendants, Mul Chand and Behari Lal, and executed a mortgage-deed (containing a conditional sale clause) in favour of the latter for Rs. 28,000. This mortgage-deed was signed among others by Bishna acting both for himself and as guardian of the present plaintiffs who were then minors.

The consideration for the mortgage was stated to be,—

(1) Rs. 13,716 and Rs. 457 both due to Jallu.

(1) Rs. 1,800 due on book accounts by Rawal, deceased, and Purkha, another of the pre-emptors, and

(3) Rs. 12,027 received in cash at home on the 27th April 1897, i.e., two days before the execution and registration of the mortgage-deed.

On the 19th August 1898, the said mortgagees sued for possession of the land in accordance with the terms of the mortgage-deed and on, the 8th October 1898, obtained an ex parte decree against all the mortgagors, Bishna being specified in that plaint as the guardian ad litem of the minors. Subsequently, Bishna and others applied to have the ex parte decree set aside on the ground that no summons had been received by them, and that they had no notice of the suit. It is not clear whether the Court was satisfied of the truth of this allegation or not, but it passed an order to the effect that the ex parte decree would be set aside on the applicants' paying a sum of about Rs. 300 to the mortgagees within a specified period. This sum was not paid and the application was consequently dismissed.

The mortgagees thereafter pressed for payment of the debt due on the mortgage with the result that a fresh arrangement was come to between the parties, and on the 6th January 1899, a sale-deed was executed by the original mortgagors whereby $\frac{1}{3}$rd of the village was sold outright to Mul Chand and Behari Lal for an ostensible consideration of Rs. 17,940. On this occasion, no cash was paid to the vendors but the original mortgage-debt was reduced by the said amount and the remaining $\frac{2}{3}$rds of the village continued under mortgage for Rs. 16,000. This sale-deed was executed on behalf of the present plaintiffs (who were then still minors) by their mother, Musammat Shero, acting as their guardian. The original mortgage-deed of the 29th of April 1897 still remained in force as regards the $\frac{2}{3}$rds of the village and on the 19th of January 1903, the mortgagees sued for foreclosure of that mortgage. In that suit the present plaintiffs were represented by their mother, Musammat Shero, as guardian ad litem, and notice was issued to her in that capacity though we are unable to find upon the record any order formally appointing her guardian ad litem.

The mortgagees' claim for foreclosure was contested by all the parties interested including Musammat Shero, and it was pleaded in answer to the claim that the consideration for the mortgage of the 29th April 1897 had not fully passed, and that in any event the sale of the one-third of the village on the 6th January 1899 had been intended to put an end to the mortgage and to relieve the remaining $\frac{2}{3}$rds of the property from that incumbrance. Issues were framed, and evidence was taken but on the 18th of November 1903, all the mortgagors including Musammat Shero, who purported to act on behalf of the present plaintiffs, and the mortgagees presented a joint application under section 506, Civil Procedure Code of 1882, to the Court to the effect that they desired to refer the dispute to the arbitration of two men, namely, Lala Har Sarup, Sahukar, and Sanwan, Bishnoi, Sarbrah Lambardar of this village. The dispute was referred accordingly, and on the 14th of January 1904, the said arbitrators gave an award in which all the points involved in the dispute were decided in favour of the mortgagees. Various objections to the award were taken by the mortgagors but were all overruled by the Additional District Judge who, on the 23rd of January 1904, passed a decree in favour of the mortgagees based on that award. The mortgagors including Musammat Shero appealed from that decree to this Court, but it was held that no appeal lay and that there was no ground for interference on the revision side. After this decision, four suits were brought by some or other of the representatives of mortgagors with a view of escaping the consequences of the decree of the 23rd of January 1904, and in one of these cases, namely that of Sada Sukh v. Mul Chand, which was finally decided by a Division Bench of this Court, the questions involved were very similar to the questions before us for decision in the present case, (See Civil Appeal No. 129 of 1908). In all these cases, the mortgagees were successful, and the present suit constitutes the fifth occasion since the decree on the award on which they have had to meet objections on the part of the mortgagors.

The present plaintiffs claim possession of 1/31st share of the said land in Mauza Bhoda Khera and the claim is based upon the grounds,—

(a) that the decree based on the award of the arbitrators is not binding upon the plaintiffs because

(1) the Court did not in express terms sanction the reference to arbitration so far as the interests of plaintiffs (minors) were concerned (section 462 and section 506, Civil Procedure Code of 1882), and

(2) Musammat Shero was guilty, as guardian, of gross negligence in permitting the dispute to be referred to arbitration, especially to the arbitration of a man who was partial to the mortgagees and of a man (Sanwan Mall) who, though a Bishnoi and Sarbrah Lambardar, was illiterate and a creature of the mortgagees; and

(b) that in any event the sale of the 6th of January 1899, is assailable by the plaintiffs and that it should not be held to be binding on them as it was in no sense effected for their benefit or for any necessary purpose.

Plaintiffs concede that the two items of Rs. 13,716 and Rs. 457, which formed part of the consideration for the mortgage of the 29th April 1897, cannot be assailed, as these sums were unquestionably paid to Jallu, the man who originally advanced money for the purposes of the pre-emption suit. In the lower Courts, there was some dispute regarding the item of Rs. 1,800 alleged to have been due from Rawal and Purkha on book accounts, but it was tacitly admitted before us that this item also could not be successfully challenged. The real contention between the parties centres round the item of Rs. 12,027 and with this item we shall have to deal presently. But before proceeding to do so, we may note that plaintiffs' claim has been dismissed in its entirety by the Courts below.

The District Judge found that plaintiffs were bound by the acts of their grand-uncle and mother, and that their suit was, in his words, "quite absurd."

The learned Divisional Judge agreed that the plaintiffs' claim, however viewed, was unsustainable. He admitted that there were some points about the alleged payment of Rs. 12,027 which were open to suspicion, but after a careful consideration of the facts and the argument addressed to him, he found that that sum had in fact been paid to the mortgagors, that there was good reason for holding that the minors' share of that amount (which at the most amounted to about Rs. 370) had been paid to their guardian and had been used in settling the claim which one Sewa had against the estate of their grandfather, Rawal, and that neither Bishna nor Musammat Shero had been guilty of any such negligence as would enable the plaintiffs to undo what those persons, acting as their guardians, had done on their behalf. The learned Judge accordingly dismissed their appeal with costs.

Plaintiffs' further appeal to this Court has been argued before us at great length, and we have very carefully listened to the arguments and studied the evidence on the record. We may conveniently discuss the case first with regard to the merits, and secondly with regard to the law points involved.

As regards the first part of the case, we may say at once that we are not satisfied that plaintiffs have shown that their mother and de facto guardian, Musammat Shero, was guilty of such negligence as would justify us in setting aside the sale of the 6th January 1899 in which she joined, or (apart from other considerations) the mortgage of the 29th April 1897 and subsequent proceedings thereupon. The whole of the argument upon this part of the case revolves round the alleged payment of Rs. 12,027 to the mortgagors; and it may beriefly be thus summarised:—There is no proof that this large sum of money was actually paid to the mortgagors, while the fact that it was said to have been paid at home two days before the registration of the mortgage-deed raises strong suspicion as to its genuineness; that in any event it is not shown that any part of the said sum was received by the minors, or was for their benefit, that Bishna acted negligently in not having the ex parte decree obtained by the mortgagees on the 8th October 1898 set aside, so far as the minors were concerned; that in view of the above mentioned facts, Musammat Shero, when purporting to act as the guardian of her minor sons, was grossly negligent of their interests when she

(1) joined in the sale of the 6th January 1899, which was in no way for their benefit:

(2) consented to the dispute in the subsequent foreclosure proceedings being referred to arbitration at all; and

(3) agreed to accept Har Sarup and Sanwan as arbitrators.

In our opinion, Musammat Shero was guilty of no negligence and acted throughout in the best interests of the minors. There may be some suspicion as to whether the full sum of Rs. 12,027 was actually paid to the mortgagees, and the fact that so large a sum was not paid before the Sub-Registrar does undoubtedly lend colour to the suggestion that there was something not quite above board in connection with it. But we cannot lose sight of the fact that in every decision which has been given upon this point, up to date payment of the amount has been found established, and in the present case the Courts below are agreed in holding that, it was made and there are good and substantial reasons in support of this finding, for it is almost incredible that 14 adult men of understanding would on several occasions have admitted receipt of so large a sum if in fact it had been a purely fictitious item. The minors' share in the sum was of almost insignificant value, about Rs. 370, and we cannot agree that Musammat Shero was neglectful of their interests when she accepted it as an established charge upon their property. All the male members of the family, including Bishna, the minors' paternal grand-uncle, had acknowledged its correctness as affecting their own shares, and it is absurd to argue that a woman ought to have been more careful than they (who knew the facts more thoroughly) were in connection with their own interests. In the case of Sada Sukh v. Mul Chand, to which reference has been made, the same question arose and with regard to the same transaction, and in their judgment in that case, the learned Judges who decided the appeal to this Court, observed:—

"As regards the second point, we agree with the Courts below in holding that the mother of the plaintiff-appellant acted quite properly and within her rights as de facto guardian of her son in joining the male members of her family, who were quite competent to safeguard their common interest, in selling one-third share of the village lands in 1899 and in subsequently agreeing to refer the matter in dispute to arbitration in the course of the foreclosure suit brought by the present respondent. It is difficult to see what other action the plaintiff-appellant's mother could have taken to protect his interests, and except indulging in generalities of an abstract character, which do not affect the practical aspects of the matter, the plaintiff-appellant's Counsel was unable to tell us in what way the lady could have acted save in concert with her near relations in safeguarding her sons' rights in the land;" (see Civil Appeal No. 129 of 1908).

We see no justification for taking a different view of the facts in the present case where another mother is charged, upon practically the same facts, with neglect of her son's rights.

Mr. Lajpat Rai contended that Musammat Shero should not have agreed to the sale of the 6th January 1899, firstly, because Bishna had negligently allowed the ex parte decree of the 8th October 1898 to pass unchallenged, and, secondly, because the minors did not in any way benefit by that sale. But we fail to see how Musammat Shero could, with any hope of success, have disassociated herself from the acts of the male mortgagors who were adults and who were concerned equally with the minors in both these proceedings. Even if Bishna had been negligent in allowing the ex parte decree to stand—a point which is by no means clear—it must be remembered that that decree was passed against all 14 mortgagors, the majority of whom undoubtedly accepted it as binding upon them, while even the small minority, who, with Bishna, were at first inclined to dispute it, subsequently decided to take no further action with regard to it. In these circumstances, the plaintiffs' mother might with every reason have concluded that it would be a waste of her son's money to contest a decree which all the male members had agreed to accept. Furthermore, it is not clear how Musammat Shero could have challenged that decree once Bishna had had an opportunity of setting it aside and had decided to leave it alone.

Then as to the second point, there is, we think, force in Mr. Dwarka Das' argument, founded upon the judgment of the Divisional Judge, that the mortgagors as a body might well have thought it to their advantage to be given the right to redeem part of the land on payment of Rs. 16,000 instead of being obliged to redeem the whole on payment of Rs. 28,000 (or more, when interest was added), and that it was to secure this right that they agreed to sell $\frac{1}{3}$rd of the land for Rs. 18,000.

So far then as the sale is concerned, we cannot agree that plaintiffs have established any negligence on the part of their mother.

Then, as to the proceedings in the foreclosure suit. In that suit all the mortgagors stoutly contested the right of the mortgagees to foreclose, and pleaded that full consideration for the mortgage had not passed, etc. But in the course of proceedings they all agreed that the matters in dispute should be referred to the arbitration of two men, of whom one, Har Sarup, was a Sahukar and the other, Sanwan, the Sarbrah Lambardar of the village and of the same caste as the mortgagors. In face of the fact that all the male defendants agreed to this reference, we are not surprised to find that the two women, who acted as guardians ad litem of their respective sons, also agreed to it, and we are of opinion that in so agreeing they acted reasonably. Musammat Shero had no reason to suppose (so far as we can see) that the arbitrators would not act justly in dealing with the case, and it is absurd to denounce her conduct simply because the arbitrators' award eventually went against defendants. Har Sarup, no doubt, was a person of the same caste as the mortgagees, but Sanwan was, on the other hand, a leading man of the village and would be likely to see that justice was done to his caste fellows. Moreover, that Musammat Shero and the other defendants in the foreclosure case were not careless of their interests and were anxious to do all they could to defeat the mortgagees is proved by the fact that when the award was made, they at once took objections to it on every conceivable ground and even went to the length of preferring an appeal from the decree based on that award to this Court.

Taking all the facts into consideration, we are not satisfied that plaintiffs have established such negligence on the part of Musammat Shero as would justify us on that ground, in setting aside either the sale of the 6th January 1899 or the decree based on the award of the arbitrators, dated the 23rd of January, 1904.

It remains now to deal with the legal questions. These are two and both relate to the validity of the decree just mentioned. Mr. Lajpat Rai contends that that decree is not binding on the minors for two reasons,—

(1) because Musammat Shero had not been formally appointed guardian ad litem of the minors in the foreclosure suit and that, therefore, no act on her part, though she purported to act as their de facto guardian, can in law bind them; and

(2) because the Court did not in express terms sanction the reference to arbitration, whereas by law no such reference could be made, in a case where minors were concerned, without such express sanction.

The first point was not seriously pressed, and it is sufficient to say that, when the facts are as here, the weight of authority is distinctly against the contention, [see Dhanpat Mal v. Khazana (1); Wullan v. Banke Behari Pershad Singh (2) and Cf. Hanuman Prashad v. Muhammad Ishaq(3); Ram Chandra Das v. Joti Prasad (4)]. In the foreclosure proceedings, Musammat Shero duly appeared on behalf of her minors and as their guardian ad litem represented them throughout the case, their interests being thus duly protected and in no way prejudiced by the absence of a formal order appointing her such guardian. In these proceedings, the interests of the present plaintiffs were comparatively trifling and so far as we can see, their mother did everything in her power to assert their rights, and none-the-less so because she acted in concert with the male members of the family whose interests were far greater. We hold, therefore, that plaintiffs were in no sense prejudiced by the omission of a formal order appointing Musammat Shero to be their guardian ad litem.

The second question is not so easily disposed of. The suit was proceeding in Court when all the parties filed an application under section 506, Civil Procedure Code of 1882, praying that the matters in dispute between them might be referred to the arbitrament of the two persons specified in the application. In accordance with this application, the said matters were referred by order of the Additional Divisional Judge, dated the 24th December 1903, but admittedly the Court passed no formal order expressly sanctioning such reference so far as the interests of the minor defendants were concerned. Mr. Lajpat Rai's contention is that a formal sanction of the Court was absolutely necessary and that in the absence of such, the whole of the proceedings subsequent to the application under section 506 are null and void so far as the present plaintiffs are concerned. If this contention is sound, the decree based on the award of the arbitrators will not be binding on the plaintiffs and, so far as they and the mortgagees are affected, the parties will be relegated to the positions they respectively occupied before the disputes in the foreclosure suit were referred to arbitration. In support of his contention, Mr. Lajpat Rai relies upon the decision of a Division Bench of this Court reported as Hira v. Dina (5) and an analogous ruling of the Madras High Court in Lakshmana Chetti v. Chinnathambai Chetti (6).

On the other hand, there is a direct decision of the Allahabad High Court in Hardeo Sahai v. Gouri Shankar (7) and certain obiter dicta in Uda v. Mul Chand (8) and Annada Krishna Dey v. Jogendra Nath Dey (9).

The question then is, whether an application under section 506, Civil Procedure Code of 1882 (second Schedule, rule 1), to refer matters in dispute in a pending suit to arbitration, is an "agreement" or "compromise" within the meaning of section 462, Civil Procedure Code of 1882 (Order XXXII, rule 7 of the present Code.)

There is force in the arguments on both sides and, in view of the conflict of authority, and as we ourselves, as at present advised, are inclined to accept the view of the Allahabad High Court, we deem it necessary to refer this question to a Full Bench.

The actual question referred is as follows:—

When a guardian ad litem of minor defendants applies under section 506 of the former Code, or under Schedule II, rule 1 of the present Code of Civil Procedure, to the Court in a pending suit for an order of reference to arbitration, is it essential for the validity of any such reference that the Court should in express terms sanction the reference under section 462 of the former Code or Order XXXII, rule 7 of the present Code?

OPINION OF THE FULL BENCH.

RATTIGAN, J.—The question referred to the Full Bench is as follows:—

"When a guardian ad litem of minor defendants applies, under section 506 of the former Code, or under Schedule II, para. 1 of the present Code of Civil Procedure, in a pending suit for an order of reference to arbitration, is it essential for the validity of any such reference that the Court should in express terms sanction the reference under section 462 of the former Code or under Order XXXII, rule 7 of the present?"

This is a question of some little difficulty, and I confess that at one time I inclined to the opinion that the answer to it should be in the negative. After more careful consideration, however, and, in view of the arguments urged before us, especially by Mr. Lajpat Rai, I have come to a somewhat different conclusion. My opinion now is that both in cases governed by the provisions of the Code of 1882 and in cases governed by the provisions of the present Code, the guardian ad litem of a minor defendant, and I might add, the next friend of a minor plaintiff, must obtain the express sanction of the Court, if he wishes, on behalf of his ward, to refer the matter in dispute or any question involved in the suit to arbitration, and that an omission on the part of such guardian or next friend to obtain such sanction will have the effect of making all proceedings consequent on such reference voidable against all parties other than the minor. In other words, I hold that an application of the guardian or next friend under section 506 of the former Code, or under Schedule II, para. 1 of the present Code, comes within the purview of section 462 of the former Code or Order XXXII, rule 7 of the present Code, as the case may be, and that unless the leave of the Court is expressly obtained and recorded, the application to refer will have the same effect, and be open to the same objections as would any other agreement or compromise entered into by such guardian or next friend with reference to the suit without the leave of the Court expressly recorded in the proceedings. I give my answer in these terms because the question put to us is not, I think, very satisfactorily expressed. The leave or sanction of the Court must be obtained and must be expressly recorded if the reference to arbitration is to be valid for all purposes and against all parties, including the minor, but it does not follow that in a case where such sanction has not been obtained, the reference must necessarily be invalid or void. The minor alone can claim to avoid it, [though Ghulam Ali Shah v. Shahabal Shah (10) and Kashi Ram v. Bawa Tola (?) (11) are authorities for the proposition that in certain cases his suit may be unsuccessful] but it is, of course, open to him, if so advised, to affirm and ratify the reference and all subsequent proceedings.

There is a singular dearth of authority upon the question before us and practically the only direct decision upon it is that of a Division Bench of this Court, reported as Hira v. Dina (5), and even in that case there is no discussion of the question. The learned Judge simply followed an obiter dictum in the judgment given by Sir Meredyth Plowden in Malik Sorab v. Anokh Rai (12) and upon its authority held that "the reference to arbitration is an agreement" with reference to the suit "within the meaning of section 462" of the Code of 1882 and that the guardian was not authorized to enter into it without the leave of the Court which must be given in express terms.

(12) 18 P. R. 1891.

In Lakshmana Chetti v. Chinnathambi Chetti (6), there is an expression of opinion to the same effect, while, on the other hand, we have certain dicta, per contra, in Hardeo Sahai v. Gouri Shankar (7), Uda v. Mul Chand (8) and Annada Krishna Dey v. Jogendra Nath Dey (9).

I have given these opinions, which are, of course, entitled to every weight, my best consideration, and the conclusion at which I have arrived is, as expressed in Hira v. Dina (5), that the reference to arbitration is an agreement with reference to the suit and as such within the purview of the general provision of law embodied in section 462 of the former Code and Order XXXII, rule 7 of the present Code. The reference to arbitration under section 506 of the Code of 1882 or under the first para. of the 2nd Schedule to the present Code unquestionably has "reference to the suit," for it is only matters in difference in the suit that can be so referred to arbitration through the Court. Then, is the application preferred to the Court by the parties an "agreement"? Obviously it is so, for it is only when all the parties agree to make such reference that the application can be entertained, and the application must be preferred by them all. In the present Code, this point has been made quite clear, para. 1 of the 2nd Schedule providing that where in any suit all the parties interested "agree" that any matter in "difference between them", the Court shall, etc. Section 506 of the former Code was not so explicit. It provided that "if all parties to a suit desire that any matter in difference between them in the suit be referred to arbitration," the Court shall etc. But I do not think that there has been any change in the law. Before all the parties can apply to the Court for an order of reference, it is clearly necessary that they should have agreed inter se to refer the matters in dispute to arbitration, and their joint application necessarily pre-supposes an agreement between them. In all these cases, therefore, (1) there is an agreement between the parties, and (2) such agreement has reference to the pending suit. Upon what ground, then, can it be urged that the wide and general provisions of section 462 of the Code of 1882 or of Order XXXII, rule 7 of the present Code are inapplicable? Those provisions were enacted for the protection of minors who are unable to look after their own interests and to whom the Court stands in a quasi tutelary position. Is, then, the Court to which in all other cases an agreement or compromise with reference to the suit, made by a guardian or next friend, has to be submitted for sanction, bound in cases such as the present to allow the guardian or next friend to refer the matters in dispute to any arbitrator selected by the parties? And if it does so simply as a matter of course and without regard to the interests of the minor, is the latter to be held bound by the award of the arbitrator or arbitrators? Or, has the Court power to refuse to make such reference when it is of opinion that the questions involved, or the persons nominated as arbitrators, are such that it would be prejudicial to the interests of minors, who cannot look after their own interests, to permit the reference? The general policy of the law, no less than the language of the relevant sections of the Code, clearly imply that such agreements to refer must, to be absolutely binding on the minors, be sanctioned in express terms by the Court. Parties to a suit who are of age must be left to look after their own interests, and if they enter into an agreement, or compromise or if they decide to refer their dispute to arbitration, the Court has no further concern in the matter. But, unfortunately, guardians and next friends of minors are not invariably honest and, even if honest, are sometimes careless and occasionally lacking in intelligence and the duty of safeguarding the interests of minors, so far as is practicable, is therefore, thrown upon the Courts. Bearing this in mind, I can find no justification for the view that the Courts are precluded from exercising this duty where the guardian or next friend appears and states that he has agreed with the other party to make a reference to arbitration, and this, too, though the matter in dispute may be wholly unsuitable for such reference or the arbitrator nominated may be quite unfit.

In arriving at this conclusion I am not unmindful of the cases in which it has been held that the express sanction of the Court is not needed when a guardian or next friend of a minor agrees, on his behalf, to be bound by the oath of the other party to the suit. [Malak Sorab v. Anokh Rai (12); Sheo Nath Saran v. Sukh Lal Singh (13); Chengal Reddi v. Venkata Reddi (14)]. Speaking with every deference, I must confess that I find some difficulty in following the ratio decidendi of these cases or in fully appreciating the subtle distinction between them and the class of cases with which we are dealing. It seems to me that the High Court of Allahabad was justified in remarking that if section 462 does not apply to these cases, a fortiori it would not apply to the proceedings taken under Chapter XXXVII of the Code of 1882 [Hanuman Parshad v. Muhammad Ishaq (3)]. However, Sir Meredyth Plowden was of the opposite opinion [see Malak Sorab v. Anokh Rai (12)] and I need say no more with reference to these cases than that the actual question there involved is not now before us, and we are not called upon to decide as to the correctness or otherwise of the proposition there laid down.

For the reasons given, I would reply to this reference in the terms I have stated above.

ROBERTSON, J.—I concur with my brother Rattigan.

Section 462 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 runs as follows:

"No next friend or guardian for the suit shall, without the leave of the Court, enter into any agreement or compromise on behalf of a minor, with reference to the suit in which he acts as next friend or guardian. Any such agreement or compromise entered into without the leave of the Court shall be voidable against all parties other than the minor."

It is quite clear that a reference to arbitration requires an agreement to refer to arbitration, and that such an agreement has reference to the suit. Such an agreement, therefore, comes within the purview of section 462 of the Code of 1882 and of Order XXXII, rule 7. I have nothing to add to what has been written by my brother Rattigan.

SHAH DIN, J.—I agree in the answer to the reference as proposed by my brother Rattigan.

ICHHAMOYI DEBI v. NIL MONI MUKHERJI.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEALS NOS. 1553 AND 1674 OF 1909.

February 15, 1912.

Present:—Mr. Justice Coxe and Mr. Justice Imam.

ICHHAMOYI DEBI—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

NIL MONI MUKHERJI AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Daughter capable of child-bearing—Capacity of bearing children, when ceases—Woman of 63, living with husband for 43 years without having child, whether to be regarded capable of child-bearing.

It may be difficult to lay down any general rule as to when a woman's capacity for bearing children can be said to cease. But a woman of 63, who has been living with her husband for 43 years without having a child, cannot be regarded as capable of bearing children.

Appeal from the decree of the Sub-Judge of Bardwan, dated April 26th, 1909, affirming that of the Officating Munsif of Kalan, dated September 25th, 1907.

FACTS.—These were two suits for declaration of title and possession. The case of the plaintiff was as follows: That one Nilkamal Sarkar was the original proprietor of the disputed properties, and he and after his death his widow, Bhagabati Dasi, and daughter, Mon Mohini Dasi, were owning and holding possession adversely to others for upwards of 12 years; that at the time of the said Nilkamal Sarkar's death, his widow, Bagabati Dasi, and married daughter, Monmohini Dasi, were alive; that on the death of Bhagabati, the daughter Monmohini inherited the properties; that after her death on 9th Kartik 1301 B. S., two persons, named Banku Behari Sarkar and Charu Chandra Sarkar, who were the grandsons by son of the said Nilkamal's paternal grandfather, Doyaram Sarkar, became the actual heirs of Nilkamal Sarkar and obtained all his properties; that they obtained a succession certificate from the District Court; that with the permission of the District Judge, they sold by a registered deed of sale the properties in suit to the plaintiff for Rs. 182 on Chaitra 11th, 1304 B. S.; that as the said deed of sale was executed before the permission of the District Judge had been obtained, the said Banku Behari and Charu Chandra again executed a second deed of sale on Fulgoon 16th, 1312 B. S. and had the same duly registered; that by this second deed they confirmed and validated the first sale; that the said Monmohini had a son by the name of Krishnadhone Ghose who had died prior to the death of Monmohini, Nilkamal and Bhagabati Dasi; that Krishnadhone had a son named Priya Nath Ghose who lived in the same mess with Bhagabati and Manmohini and was brought up by them and acted as their Muktear; that the said Priya Nath had no right whatever to the properties of Nilkamal; that Priya Nath died about two years before the death of Monmohini; that the defendant No. 1 gave it out that he had purchased the properties in suit benami in the name of his own relation, the defendant No. 2, from Anusila Dasi, widow of the said Priya Nath Ghose and that the defendants dispossessed the plaintiff from the properties in 1305 and 1312 B. S.

The defence, inter alia, was to the effect that at the time of the death of Bhagabati Dasi, Monmohini was not likely to become the mother of a son and, therefore, she did not come to inherit her father and could not so inherit; that at the time of the death of Nilkamal, he had no other near male heir than Priya Nath Ghose mentioned by the plaintiff; that Nilkamal left his permission with Bhagabati to allow the said Priya Nath Ghose to alienate all his (Nilkamal's) properties; that with a view to accelerate the inheritance of Priya Nath, Bhagabati executed a registered deed of gift in favour of Priya Nath who possessed the properties in suit for upwards of 12 years and then on his death his widow, Anusila Dasi, sold the same to the defendant, and that, therefore, the suit was barred by limitation.

Both the Courts below held that Monmohini was about 63 years of age when Bhagabati Dasi, her mother, died (1288 B. S.) and that for about 43 years Monmohini bore no children when her mother died, and, therefore, she had become incapable of bearing children and hence, on the death of Bhagabati, the succession opened to the reversionary heirs of Nilkamal in 1288 B. S. as Monmohini was no heir to her according to the Hindu Law; that her possession or that of her grandson after 1288 was adverse to the reversionary heirs of Nilkamal, who had lost all right and interest to the estate of Nilkamal by the lapse of time, and hence the plaintiff by her purchase from Banku Sarkar and Charu Sarkar in 1304 acquired no right at all, as they, her vendors, never obtained possession. The suit was, therefore, dismissed by both the Courts below. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Babu Shiva Prosonna Bhattacharyya, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

S. A. No. 1556 of 1909.

It is unnecessary for us to go into all the points raised in this appeal as it must necessarily fail on the point of limitation.

The plaintiffs have never been in possession of this property and the only way in which they could succeed was by proving that one Monmohini who died in 1301 had a widow's estate in the property at the time of her death, the suit having been brought within 12 years from that date. It is found by the Courts below that she had not a widow's estate in the property because in the year 1288, when the succession might have opened to her, she was incapable of child bearing and, therefore, under the Bengal School of law, was not entitled to succeed. The Subordinate Judge finds that in 1288 Monmohini was 63 or 64 years old. Her husband was still alive and it does not appear that she had been separated from him. Although she had had a son who had died, she had had no children for 43 years. From these facts, the Subordinate Judge inferred that she was incapable of child-bearing. It is impossible for us to say that the learned Subordinate Judge committed any error of law.

It may be difficult to lay down any general rule as to when a woman's capacity of bearing children can be said to cease. But there is no case in the books which would justify a conclusion that a woman of 63, who had been 43 years living with her husband without having a child, must be regarded as capable of child-bearing.

On the facts of this particular case, there is no error of law in the view that has been taken by the Subordinate Judge and, that being so, the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

This judgment will govern S. A. No. 1674 of 1909.

Appeals dismissed.

SOHAN SINGH—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), ss. 5, 14—Probate—Receiver, appointment of—Appeal to Divisional Court—Subsequent appeal to High Court—Sufficient cause—Exclusion of time—Minority of appellant, effect of.

In an application for grant of Probate of a Will, a Receiver of the property of the deceased was appointed by the District Judge. Against this order, an appeal was preferred to the Divisional Court which returned the appeal for presentation to the High Court. When the appeal was presented to the High Court, the period of limitation had expired but the appellant, who was a minor, sought the benefit of section 5 of the Limitation Act:

Held, (1) that as section 86 of the Probate and Administration Act clearly specified the High Court as the Appellate Court, the appeal was filed in the Divisional Court by carelessness and not by mistake of law;

(2) that there was no sufficient cause for not filing the appeal in the High Court within the time prescribed;

(3) that the time taken up in the Divisional Court could not be excluded;

(4) that the fact that the appellant was a minor did not justify extension of the period of limitation.

Miscellaneous appeal from the order of the District Judge, Lyallpur, dated the 27th April 1911, appointing Jowala Singh as Receiver of the property of Natha Singh, deceased.

Mr. Nanak Chand, for the Appellant.

Bakshi Tek Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—A belated preliminary objection that the appeal to this Court is barred by limitation must be allowed. It should have been taken at the hearing of the 16th instant, but as it has been taken now, I have no alternative, having regard to Sant Singh v. Qaim (1), which is directly in point, to allowing it. Section 86 of the Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), under which an appeal lies, specifies the High Court as the Appellate Court. No one who reads the section could have interpreted the section as meaning that an appeal lay to the Divisional Court. There was no room for mistake, and the error must have been due to carelessness and not to any mistake of law.

The fact that the appellant is a minor, represented by his mother, does not, in my opinion, justify extension of the period of limitation.

The appeal was filed in the incompetent Court by a Pleader, and the order under appeal does not necessarily injure the appellant even if erroneous.

The appeal is dismissed, but, having regard to the fact that the objection was not taken on the 16th instant, I leave the parties to bear their own costs.

Appeal dismissed.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 147 OF 1910.

May 21, 1912.

Present:—Mr. Justice N. Chatterjea and Mr. Justice Richardson.

MOHESH NARAIN ROY—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

MAHARAJ BAHADUR SINGH—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Landlord and tenant—Non-transferable occupancy-holding—Landlord taking mortgage of holding—Whether evidence of transferability—Purchaser of holding—Taking assignment of mortgage from landlord—Knowledge of landlord of previous purchase of assignee from tenant—Estoppel—Whether landlord estopped from denying assignee's right—Fraud upon assignee.

The fact that the landlord himself took a mortgage of a certain non-transferable occupancy-holding under him, would, by itself, be no evidence of transferability of jotes, because a landlord himself can purchase or take a mortgage of a holding though non-transferable.

The defendant purchased a non-transferable occupancy-holding in execution of his own mortgage decree. The plaintiff-landlord held a mortgage of the same holding, and the defendant took an assignment of the mortgage for consideration. The plaintiff had full knowledge of the purchase of the holding by the defendant and of the fact that he was taking the assignment in order to perfect his title. The plaintiff subsequently sued the defendant for recovery of possession, on the ground that as the holding was non-transferable, the defendant got no title from his purchase:

Held, that the plaintiff-landlord was estopped from denying that the defendant had acquired a right to the jote. To allow the landlord to succeed would be to encourage a fraud upon the defendant.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge of Birbhum, dated September 4th, 1909, affirming that of the Munsif of Rampurhat, dated December 22nd, 1908.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghose and Babu Brojendra Nath Chatterjee, for the Appellant.

Babus Dwarka Nath Chakravarti and Sarat Kumar Mitra, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT—This appeal arises out of a suit by a landlord to recover khas possession of the lands of certain jotes purchased by the defendants-appellants at a sale in execution of a mortgage-decree on the ground that occupancy-holdings are not transferable without the consent of the landlord. The Court of first instance decreed the suit and that decree was confirmed on appeal. The defendants have appealed to this Court.

It appears that the lands in suit, which constituted five different occupancy-holdings and stood in the names of several persons, belonged to one Protab Bag. The defendants took a mortgage of the jotes from Protab Bag in July 1895. The plaintiff-resonent, who is the landlord, took a mortgage of the jotes from Protab's mother, Jogeshdari, in March 1897. A rent suit was, however, brought against Protab as the tenant by the plaintiff and the decree was paid up by the defendant by depositing the decretal amount in Court and the same was withdrawn by the plaintiff. Subsequently, the defendants purchased the jotes at sales held in execution of a decree upon their mortgage.

The jotes being non-transferable occupancy-holdings, the defendants did not acquire a title to the lands by their purchase at the auction-sale unless their purchase was recognised by the plaintiff. The plaintiff, on the other hand, had money due to him under a mortgage of the jotes executed by Protab's mother, Jogeshdari, in his favour.

Under these circumstances, the defendants paid Rs. 200 to the plaintiff and took an assignment of the mortgage from the plaintiff in the name of their mohurrir, one Hari Makhan. The main question raised in this appeal is what is the legal effect of this assignment.

The deposit of the amount due under the rent-decree referred to above and the withdrawal of the same by the plaintiff do not amount to any recognition of the defendants as tenants because the defendants had not then purchased the jotes and were in the position of simple mortgagees and the deposit was made in the name of the judgment-debtor. The fact that the plaintiff himself took a mortgage of the jotes would by itself be no evidence of transferability of the jotes because a landlord himself can purchase or take a mortgage of a holding though non-transferable.

It is contended, however, on behalf of the appellant, that the defendants by taking an assignment of the mortgage from the plaintiff in the name of their mohurrir redeemed the plaintiff's mortgage, and that the plaintiff, in allowing the defendants who had purchased the jotes to redeem his mortgage, was estopped from denying that they had acquired a right to redeem, in other words, that they had acquired a valid title by their purchase and reference is made to Bigelow on Estoppel, page 685, in support of that contention.

No doubt, the mere assignment of the mortgage by the plaintiff to another would not by itself amount to anything more than a representation that the mortgage was valid and could be enforced against the jotes, and it is contended on behalf of the respondent that that is the only effect of the assignment. But in the present case, the plaintiff assigned his mortgage on the jotes to the defendants with full knowledge of their purchase and of the fact that they were taking the assignment in order to perfect their title which was not valid unless recognised by him. The question is whether, under these circumstances, the plaintiff, the landlord, can turn round and say that though he assigned a mortgage on the jotes to the defendants for value, though the defendants took the assignment because they had purchased the jotes and though he was aware of their purchase, the defendants had no right to the jotes because occupancy-holdings were not transferable without his consent. To allow the landlord to do so would, in our opinion, be to encourage a fraud upon the purchaser. We are of opinion that, in the circumstances of the present case, the plaintiff is estopped from denying that defendant had acquired a right to the jotes.

It was contended, on behalf of the respondents, that the defendants relied upon the alleged payment of nazar in support of their story of recognition of their purchase by the plaintiff, and the payment of the nazar having been disbelieved by the Courts below, the defendants are not entitled to rely upon the assignment of the mortgage. It is true the defendant's story of the alleged payment of the nazar has failed but it was never the plaintiff's case that there was any agreement that defendant would be recognised on payment of nazar. It cannot be said, therefore, that the recognition of the defendant in this case depended upon the payment of the nazar, although the defendant set up a false case that nazar had been paid.

In the written statement, the defendant pleaded estoppel on the ground that the plaintiff himself had taken a mortgage and transferred the same to one Hari Makhan and it would seem that the estoppel there pleaded was with reference to the question of transferability of the jotes. But (as pointed out by the Munsif) the defendant No. 1 in his deposition admitted that Hari Makhan was their benamdar and that the assignment of the mortgage was really taken by them in the name of Hari Makhan, and it is found on the evidence that that is so. The fifth issue raised in the case, viz., "Is plaintiff estopped from bringing the suit" is wide enough to cover the question of estoppel in the form in which it has been pressed in this Court. In deciding the 5th issue, the Munsif considered the effect of the assignment of the mortgage and held that the assignment could not help the defendants in any way. The defendants challenged the correctness of the above finding in appeal, but the learned Judge overruled the plea of estoppel though on a different ground. The assignment of the mortgage by the plaintiff to the defendant is a fact admitted and found by the Courts below. Under the circumstances, we are of opinion that the mere fact that the true legal effect of the assignment was not precisely formulated in the written statement does not prevent us from giving proper legal effect to the assignment, and doing justice in the case.

We accordingly hold that plaintiff is estopped from denying the title of the defendants as tenants and, reversing the decrees of the Courts below, dismiss the suit. Under the circumstances of the case, we direct that each party do bear his own costs throughout.

Sale—Joint sale to two persons—Consideration paid by one vendee—Right of other vendee to recover his share of property.

Certain immoveable property was purchased by two persons jointly. One of them alone paid the consideration and took possession of the property.

Sometime afterwards, the vendee who was not in possession brought a suit for possession:

Held, that the suit for possession ought to be decreed on the condition of the plaintiff paying his share of the consideration-money as the ownership in the property vested in both the vendees as soon as the sale was complete.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Banda, dated 26th May 1911.

Mr. Damodar Das, for the Appellant.

Mr. Purushottam Das Tandan, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The Courts below appear to have misconceived the real nature of the claim. The plaintiff brought the suit for a declaration that he had a half share in a certain enclosure and he claimed possession of that share. His allegation was that he and the first defendant Jagannath jointly purchased the enclosure from one Ram Prasad, who was the owner of it, for Rs. 150, that the sale-deed was obtained farzi in the name of the second defendant, Debi Prasad, and that Debi Prasad had executed a sale-deed in favour of the third defendant in collusion with the first defendant. Jagannath admitted that the house had been purchased jointly by him and the plaintiff. But he stated in his written statement that the whole amount of the consideration was paid by him and that, therefore, the plaintiff was not entitled to obtain possession of a half share of the enclosure. Both the Courts below seem to have thought that if non-payment of consideration by the plaintiff was proved, that would be sufficient to entail the dismissal of his claim. This view is manifestly incorrect. If, as was admitted, the property was purchased jointly by the plaintiff and Jagannath in equal shares, the non-payment of consideration by the plaintiff would not prevent the ownership as to a half share vesting in him. That ownership was acquired as soon as the sale was effected. The full amount of consideration was paid to the vendor in this case. So that upon a sale being made in favour of the vendees, the ownership of the property became vested in the vendees as soon as the sale was completed. This was held in Rajnath (Baijnath) Singh v. Paltu(1), which followed the earlier case of Shib Lal v. Bhagwan Das (2). What happened in this case was this. Rupees 150, the consideration for the sale was paid to the vendor by the defendant Jagannath and the latter debited the plaintiff in his account-books with half of the amount of the consideration, namely, Rs. 75, practically as money advanced to him, so that in reality the plaintiff did pay consideration to the vendor by borrowing his share of it from the defendant Jagannath. It has been found by the Courts below that the plaintiff has not re-paid to Jagannath the amount which he so borrowed. But that was not sufficient to justify the dismissal of the suit. Jagannath himself in his written statement says that the condition was that he was to take the property unless the plaintiff paid him the latter's share of the purchase-money, namely, Rs. 75. That amount being still due to Jagannath, the only equity to which Jagannath is entitled is that the decree in the plaintiff's favour for possession must be subject to the payment to Jagannath of Rs. 75, which is still due to him according to the findings of the Courts below. The result is that I allow the appeal and I make a decree in the plaintiff's favour for possession of a half share of the bara in question on the condition that the plaintiff do pay to Jagannath within two months from this date Rs. 75 (rupees seventy-five only), being one half of the consideration for the sale, and direct that on his failure to make such payment within the aforesaid period, the suit shall stand dismissed with costs in all Courts. Pre-emption—Co-sharer of equal degree joining in sale a co-sharer of inferior degree—Loss of preferential right.

Where a co-sharer of equal degree joins in the sale a co-sharer of an inferior degree, he forfeits his right as such and a suit for pre-emption can lie against him.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Gorakhpur, dated 24th January 1911.

Mr. Parmeshwar Dayal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Girdhari Lal Agarwala, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for pre-emption. The plaintiffs alleged that a custom of pre-emption prevailed and that one of the vendees, although he had an equal right with the plaintiffs, had lost his right by joining with him in the sale a person, who though a co-sharer had an inferior right to the plaintiffs. The defendants alleged that there was no custom of pre-emption and that the joining of a person, who was a co-sharer, although his right was inferior, did not entitle the plaintiff to pre-emption even on the assumption that a custom of pre-emption prevailed in the mahal. Neither side gave oral evidence but there was adduced in evidence the wajib-ul-arz of 1833, the wajib-ul-arz of 1860 and certain decrees in some of which it was held that a custom existed and in others that it did not exist. The learned Munsif considered the evidence carefully and came to the conclusion that the custom existed. He also held that the joining in the purchase of a person who had inferior rights to the plaintiffs forfeited the right of the vendee whose right was equal to that of the plaintiffs.

The learned District Judge's judgment is not so satisfactory. He decided the case entirely on the words of the wajib-ul-arz of 1860. In this, we think he was wrong. He ought to have considered the evidence adduced by both parties and come to a conclusion whether or not the custom existed. As, however, we have all the evidence before us, we think that there is no necessity, especially where no oral evidence was adduced, to put the parties to the unnecessary expense of a further hearing. Mr. Parmeshwor Dayal has called our attention to the history of the village in the Kaifiyat Nizamat, which he strongly relies upon as showing that no custom existed. He has also called our attention to the fact that the decree in which the custom was upheld was a compromise decree. The wajib-ul-arz of 1833 states the right of pre-emption in general terms. The wajib-ul-arz of 1860 states it with much more particularity. It gives a right, first, to a near co-sharer and, secondly, to a co-sharer in the thok. The defendant No. 1 is a co-sharer in the same khata with the plaintiff. The other vendee is a co-sharer in the same thok but in a different khata. We think both the Courts below were correct in holding that a co-sharer in the same khata was a nearer co-sharer than a co-sharer in another khata though in the same thok. We also think that if we assume the custom of pre-emption to exist, a vendee, although having an equal right with the plaintiff, loses his right when he brings in as a co-vendee a co-sharer having an inferior right. It is urged that the bringing in of a co-sharer, even though his right is inferior, is very different from introducing a stranger. It is admitted that the introduction of a stranger forfeits the right of the co-sharer against whom pre-emption is sought. We, however, can recognise no distinction in principle between the introduction of a stranger and the introduction of a person having an inferior right to the pre-emptor. If it were otherwise, pre-emption as between co-sharers could always be defeated if one co-sharer having an equal right could be induced to join in the purchase.

The question remains whether or not we should hold that the custom of pre emption has been proved to exist. With regard to the litigation, it shows this much that the right of pre-emption has constantly being claimed. Unfortunately, it would appear that the question was never tried out in any previous litigation in the way. We think it ought to have been tried out, namely by hearing and considering the evidence adduced by the parties pro and con. The cases were generally decided solely upon the actual words appearing in the wajib-ul-arz: and, as we know, it very seldom happens that any two Judges take precisely the same view of the meaning of those words. We, therefore, think that, in the circumstances of the present case, the reference to the previous litigation shows little more than that the right of pre-emption has been from time to time claimed. In our opinion, and on the authority of Returaji Dubain v. Pahalwan Bhagat (1), the reference to the right of pre-emption in these two wajib-ul-araiz raised a prima facie case that a custom of pre-emption prevailed on the village. It is said that the history of the village, as set forth in the Kaifiyat Nazamat, shows that no custom of pre-emption could ever have arisen and this is sufficient to rebut the prima facie case established by the plaintiffs.

Having carefully considered this document, we do not think that in the present case it does rebut the plaintiffs' case.

The history of the village shows that the zemindari is a very old one. So far as the Kaifiyat Nizamat goes, it does not show that there was ever a transfer or sale subsequent to the year 1833. There were auction-purchases but in these cases the right of pre-emption would not be set up. It is urged that the property came into the single possession of a Raja in 1220 Fasli. Even this is not very conclusive, because we find the next Settlement was not made with the Raja but apparently with the same family who were the proprietors before the Raja came in. It is, therefore, probable that the Raja's interest was of a temporary character. On the whole, we think that the plaintiff established the existence of the custom of pre-emption he set up. This being so, the decree of the Court below was correct. We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Mainpuri, dated the 6th of May 1911.

Mr. Muhmmad Ishaq, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ghulam Mujtaba, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for pre-emption. Both the plaintiff and vendee are co-sharers but the plaintiff is the own sister of the vendor while the vendee is alleged to be a more distant relative. The existence of the custom of pre-emption is admitted and there is no dispute that such a custom exists. The only question is whether or not the Courts below were justified in holding that the plaintiff has sufficiently established a preferential right by adducing the wajib-ul-arz. According to the wajib-ul-arz, the custom is that the property must first be offered to bhai bhatiji hakiki, that is to say, own brothers and nephews. The parties are Muhmmadans. The Courts have considered that a sister should be included in the expression "bhai." We are unable to say that this decision was wrong under the circumstances of the present case. We, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

A transferee from an auction-purchaser is a necessary party to a proceeding for reversal of the execution-sale when such proceeding is commenced after the transfer has been effected.

A landlord purchased in execution of a rent decree the holding in arrears and sub-let it to the defendant. The tenant judgment-debtor applied for reversal of the sale, but the sub-lessee was not made a party to the application. The sale was set aside, and the tenant brought this suit to recover possession:

Held, that as against the defendant, the sub-lessee of the auction-purchaser, the plaintiff acquired no valid title in spite of the reversal of the sale as he, the defendant, was not made a party to the proceeding for reversal of the sale.

Babu Narendra Kumar Bose, for the Appellant.

Babu Jogendra Nath Mukherjee, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The question of law which calls for decision in this appeal is, whether a transferee from the execution-purchaser is a necessary party to a proceeding for reversal of the execution sale, when such proceeding is commenced after the transfer has been effected.

The circumstances under which the question arises are not disputed. The plaintiff-appellant claims to be the tenant of a holding which was sold for arrears of rent by the landlord on the 16th July 1906. The landlord himself became the purchaser and the sale was confirmed on the 27th August following. He sub-let the land to the defendant on the 2nd May 1907. The plaintiff, whose interest, if any, had been extinguished by the execution-sale, subsequently applied for reversal of the sale and on the 9th May 1908, an order was made by which the sale was cancelled. The order was made by consent of the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor; but the Court added that grounds had been made out for reversal of the sale under section 311 of the Code of 1882. The sub-lessee was not a party to these proceedings and he naturally declined to vacate the land in favour of the plaintiff. Thereupon, the plaintiff commenced the present action on the 27th June 1908. It is manifest that as against the sub-lessee of the auction-purchaser, the plaintiff has acquired no valid title in spite of the reversal of the sale. The auction-purchaser was a necessary party to the proceedings for reversal of the sale [Bibee Sharofan v. Muhammad Habibuddin (1).] At the time when the sale was set aside on the 9th May 1908, the interest of the auction-purchaser had partially vested in the sub-lessee, who had acquired a valid title under the lease in his favour. The effect of the order of cancellation of the sale was to affect his interest behind his back. Now, it is an elementary principle that no person is to be deprived of his property in any judicial proceeding unless he has had an opportunity of being heard [Re Hammersmith Rent-charge (2)]. Here, the defendant is sought to be affected without an opportunity afforded to him to defend his rights. It is thus plain that the plaintiff has not acquired any valid title as against the sub-lessee of the auction-purchaser. The result, therefore, is that the decree made by the Subordinate Judge is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Execution sale—Priority—Decree on mortgage—Suit for dower by mortgagor's wife—Pauper suit—Decree against mortgagor only—Decree for Court-fee against amount decreed and against husband—Collector realising amount by sale of mortgaged property—Right of purchaser—Sale in execution of mortgage decree—Purchase by mortgagee—Priority of title—Crown debt—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 411.

A mortgagee obtained a decree for sale upon a mortgage executed by a Muhammadan. The decree was under execution when the wife of the mortgagor brought a suit in forma pauperis against her husband and the mortgagee, claiming from her husband a lakh of rupees on account of her dower and alleging that that sum was charged on the mortgaged property in priority to the mortgage. The suit was decreed against her husband, but dismissed against the mortgagee, and it was ordered that the amount of Court-fees, which would have been paid by the plaintiff, should be the first charge on the amount decreed and also should be recoverable from the husband.

The Collector then obtained execution of the decree as to the Court-fee against the mortgaged property which was sold and the defendant in the present suit became the purchaser. Subsequently in execution of his mortgage-decree, the mortgagee purchased the property and brought this suit for possession against the first purchaser:

Held, that the decree in the suit for dower did not create any charge on the mortgaged property in favour of the Government, and, therefore, the Government had no right to sell the mortgaged property to realise the amount of the Court-fee and the purchaser had got no title by his purchase.

It is only when claims of the Crown and claims of common persons come into competition that the Crown is preferred. But it is a matter of common justice and of common honesty that the Crown has no more right than a common person to seize A.'s property and apply it in or towards the discharge of a debt due from B.

Appeal from a decree of the Allahabad High Court dated December 2nd, 1908, affirming that of the Sub-Judge of Allahabad, dated September 19th, 1906.

FACTS.—The facts of this case are sufficiently stated in the judgment of their Lordships. The suit, which was instituted by the respondents to recover certain property, was decreed by both Courts in India. The judgment of the High Court, after stating the facts of the cases, concluded as follows:—

The main contention which has been raised before us by the learned Vakil for the appellants is that the defendants-appellants, having purchased the property at a sale for the realization of Court-fees, acquired an absolute title to it, discharged of any right which the plaintiffs-mortgagees had under their mortgages or under the sale in execution of the decree obtained by them. It appears to us that there is no substance in this contention. The appellants purchased pendente lite and in effect purchased nothing, as the mortgagor's equity of redemption passed to the plaintiffs under the sale made to them by the Court. The appeal is in fact concluded by the decision of a Full Bench of this Court in the case of Dost Muhammad Khan v. Mani Ram (1). The facts of that case are on all fours with those of the present. It was there held that a sale subject to a mortgage of property belonging to the defendant in a suit brought in forma pauperis for the purpose of realizing the Court-fee payable to Government by the plaintiff, does not preclude the mortgagee from bringing to sale the same property in execution of a decree for sale on his mortgage. In that case, as here, the existence of the mortgage was notified at the sale to the defendants-appellants. The learned Subordinate Judge in his judgment states that the plaintiff's mortgages were all notified at the sale and the defendants purchased the property with notice thereof. This is not disputed. There is in addition to this the fact, as we have stated, that a decree for sale had already been passed and that the defendants purchased pendente lite. There is no force, therefore, in this contention.

The next point is that the suit is barred by the provision of section 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The argument of the learned Vakil for the appellants is that the defendants, being purchasers of the interest of the mortgagor in the mortgaged property, are his representatives within the meaning of that section, and he submits that the plaintiffs ought in execution proceedings to have applied for and obtained possession. We do not think that there is any force in this contention. The plaintiffs were under no obligation to make the defendants parties to the execution proceedings in the suit brought upon their mortgages nor to the application in execution for possession. The only possession which the Court could grant was formal possession. They obtained formal possession and thereupon the execution proceedings determined. This case is similar to the case of Wilayati Begam v. Nand Kishore (2), in which it was held that a separate suit under similar circumstances was not obnoxious to the provisions of section 244. I, therefore, am of opinion that the appeal ought to be dismissed with costs.

The appellants, who were defendants in this suit, appealed against the decree of the High Court to His Majesty in Council.

Messrs. Ross and Kenworthy Brown, for the Appellants:—The order as regards the Court-fees payable to Government was made under the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), section 411. Under this order, the Collector on behalf of Government applied for execution. The property in suit was put up for sale and purchased by Rai Bahadur, the father of the appellants, on the 22nd July 1899. What was really attached and sold was the equity of redemption left in the mortgagor after the decree of the 16th May 1896 was made.

[LORD MACNAGHTEN:—The mortgagor had no such right. He was entitled only to surplus money.]

This point was not dealt with in the Courts below. They decided that the appellants purchased the equity of redemption, which, it is submitted, was not lost when the decree absolute was made in the mortgagee's suit. The right to redeem was not lost until the sale in execution of that decree was confirmed on the 29th October 1902, which was subsequent to the appellants' purchase. Faiyaz Husain Khan v. Prag Narain (3).

[LORD ROBSON: You never asked to redeem.]

[SIR JOHN EDGE referred to section 86 of the Transfer of Property Act (Act IV of 1882)].

That section refers only to the case of a decree for foreclosure. Reference was also made to sections 87, 88 and 89 of that Act. The effect of passing a decree for sale, even if that decree is made absolute, is that the equity of redemption remains until the sale in execution of that decree is confirmed. The order for sale does not pass the property in the mortgagee. The mortgagor had possession, which could not be taken away from him until the time prescribed in section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act. There was a right in the land on the part of the mortgagor which was available for sale under the Collector's order for sale and was purchased by the appellants.

[SIR JOHN EDGE: Whose title did the appellants get ?] They got all that the Crown had.

The appellants' sale certificate dated the 19th September 1899 stands good until it is set aside. The time allowed to set aside the sale is one year from the date of the certificate, and as that period has already elapsed, the suit is barred: Malkarjun bin Shidramappa Pasari v. Narhari bin Shivappa (4). The respondents were substantially parties to the suit and cannot plead ignorance.

[MR. AMEER ALI: The suit was dismissed against the respondents, and the decree made, charged the dower, but not the property in suit, which was not sold in that suit, but under certain other proceedings, to which the respondents were not made parties.]

When the sale in execution of the mortgagee's decree took place, there was nobody representing the appellants on the record. They had the legal estate and the right to redeem and also to possession. These rights cannot be taken away unless the appellants were brought on the record as parties to the suit. They could have been brought on the record under the Code of Civil Procedure, section 372, which is the same as Order XVII, rules 3 and 5 of the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883; Daniel's Chancery Practice, (7th Edition), page 250. Reference was also made to the Civil Procedure Code, section 310 and the Transfer of property Act, section 52.

The Collector relied upon the case of the Collector of Moradabad v. Muhammad Daim Khan (5), and confirmed the sale to the appellants. When the rights of a subject collide

Yes, my Lord.

[SIR JOHN EDGE: That is not so.]

At one time in this case two executions subsisted, one by the respondent and the other by the Collector on behalf of Government. Both executions were in force at one point of time before either was executed, and the instant they thus concurred, the King's prerogative to be preferred attached: Attorney-General v. Leonard (8).

JUDGMENT.

LORD MACNAGHTEN:—This is an appeal from a decree of the High Court at Allahabad, which affirmed a decree of the Court of Small Causes there, exercising the powers of a Subordinate Judge.

The suit was brought by the respondents, Mewa Lal and Lachmin Narain, to recover property of which they had been deprived through the intervention of a Government official who attached it and got it sold in order to satisfy a debt due to Government from somebody else.

The facts are undisputed.

On the 17th of December 1895, the respondents, who were mortgagees of shares in seven villages belonging to their mortgagor, one Tufail Ali Khan, obtained the usual decree for sale. The 17th of April 1896 was the date fixed for payment of principal, interest, and costs which amounted in all to Rs. 19,290-9-6. The mortgagor made default. On the 23rd of April 1896, the mortgagees applied for an order absolute. The order was drawn up on the 16th of May following. On the 24th of March 1897, an application was made for execution of the decree by sale of the mortgaged property, and on the 26th of April 1897, the execution case was transferred to the Collector's Court as the property was ancestral. The decree came into the hands of the Sale Officer on the 8th July 1897.

In the meantime, the wife of the mortgagor brought a suit in forma pauperis against her husband, Tufail Ali Khan, and the respondents, claiming from her husband a lakh of rupees under a contract of dower, and alleging that that sum was charged on the mortgage property in priority to the mortgages, the subject of the decree of the 17th of December 1895. On the 11th of May 1897, the suit was decreed with costs against Tufail Ali Khan, but dismissed with costs as against his mortgagees, and it was ordered that the amount of Court-fees, which would have been paid by the plaintiff had she not been allowed to sue as pauper, should be the first charge on the amount decreed to the plaintiff, and should also be recoverable from the defendant Tufail Ali Khan.

The order as regards the Court-fees payable to Government was in accordance with the directions of section 411 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882, as to pauper suits. That section is in the following terms:—

"411. If the plaintiff succeed in the suit, the Court shall calculate the amount of the Court-fees which would have been paid by the plaintiff if he had not been permitted to sue as a pauper ; and such amount shall be a first charge on the subject-matter of the suit, and shall also be recoverable by the Government from any party ordered by the decree to pay the same, in the same manner as costs of suit are recoverable under this Code."

There was an appeal to the High Court but it was dismissed with costs.

So the respondents succeeded in preserving the priority of their encumbrances and in maintaining the decree of the 17th of December 1895. With this success all their troubles began. The Collector on behalf of Government applied for and obtained execution of the decree of the 11th of May 1897 not against Tufail Ali Khan against whom the suit was decreed, but against the mortgaged property, in regard to which the suit failed. That execution case was also sent to the Collector's Court. It was received by the Sale Officer on the 18th of February 1898, more than six months after the receipt of the decree of the 17th of December 1895. However, the Sale Officer fixed one and the same day, the 22nd of July 1899, for sale in both cases. And when the day of sale came, he put the property up for sale under the decree of the 11th of May 1897, and it was sold to Rai Bahadur, the father of the appellants, for Rs. 1,529, an amount just sufficient to satisfy the claim of the Government.

The mortgagees' decree was returned to the Civil Court with a statement that no property was left for sale in connection with that decree. In taking this course the Sale Officer, according to the opinion of the Collector, acted legally. Possibly, said the Collector, he might have put the property up for sale under the mortgagees' decree, "proclaiming at the same time the debt due to Government as an encumbrance to be satisfied by the purchaser," but there was no material irregularity. In the Collector's opinion, the authorities clearly affirmed "the principle that the Government takes precedence of all other creditors, whether or not they have a lien on the property."

At the instance of the mortgagees, the Civil Court directed that the property should be put up for sale again under the decree of the 17th of December 1895. Ultimately the mortgagees bought it for Rs. 18,365. They obtained formal possession. But it seems that Rai Bahadur had already obtained possession under his sale certificate. Both parties then exerted themselves to collect rents. Then followed a struggle for mutation of names. The Assistant Collector dismissed an application for that purpose by the mortgagees, blaming them for trying to avoid payment of the Government dues "instead of quietly paying off" the Court-fees and getting the property sold in satisfaction of their large debt. After a learned argument he held that the wording of section 411, Civil Procedure Code, was clear that the Government dues were the first charge on the property, and that Rai Bahadur had consequently a preferential claim. Then the mortgagees appealed to the Collector. He took the same view, after argument, though he confessed that he "had not hitherto realised that the position of the Crown in such matters was so strong." Lastly, the mortgagees applied to the Commissioner on second appeal. He, too, rejected their application, in the first instance on reading the record, and then on an application for revision after hearing the parties at considerable length, who "argued as to the equity and legal rights of the case." As to the merits he pronounced no opinion. He thought it essentially a case for the Civil Court. But, he added, that until the question was determined by a competent Court, he did "not think that any fairer decision could be come to than that at which the Collector arrived."

So at last the mortgagees betook them to the Civil Court, to which they ought to have applied long before in a regular suit. The Judge of first instance ordered that the respondents should be put in possession of the property, and declared that they were the absolute owners. An appeal to the High Court was dismissed with costs. But the learned Judges, after argument, came to the conclusion that there was a substantial question of law involved, and gave leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

Their Lordships are at a loss to discover what question of law is involved in this case. So far as can be gathered from the judgments in the Collector's Court, the validity of the sale to Rai Bahadur was rested on two grounds (1) on the terms of section 411 of the Civil Procedure Code, and the decree of the 11th May 1897, and (2) on the prerogative of the Crown. As to the first point, the claim put forward on behalf of the Government is absurd. The decree of the 11th of May 1897 did not create or purport to create any charge on the mortgaged property in favour of the Government. The Government had no right to attach the property and sell it in execution under that decree, though, of course, such interest, if any, as remained in the mortgagor from whom the Court-fees were declared to be recoverable, might have been reached by a proper proceeding. The order for the first sale was, therefore, without jurisdiction. The sale passed no property to the person declared purchaser. On the second point, the claim advanced by the Collector on behalf of the Government is a preposterous claim. It is only when claims of the Crown and claims of "common persons" (to use an old expression) "concur" or come into competition that the Crown is preferred. The Crown has no more right than a "common person" to seize A.'s property and apply it in or towards the discharge of a debt due from B. That is not a question of law. It is a matter of common justice, and it may be added, of common honesty.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal ought to be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against an order of the Subordinate Judge of Sitapur remanding the case to the Court of first instance for decision on the merits.

The plaintiff instituted a suit on the 11th January 1910, asking for a declaration that he was under-proprietor of two groves Nos. 109 and 149 and that a decree for possession of grove No. 149 be granted to him. The cause of action was alleged to be an adverse order of the Commissioner, dated the 28th January 1903. The issues were somewhat inconveniently arranged in the Court of first instance. The first and principal issue on which the whole case depended was whether the plaintiff was under-proprietor of the land of groves Nos. 109 and 149. The other issues related to limitation, res judicata and other pleas raised in defence. On the first issue, it was found that the plaintiff was not an under-proprietor and the suit was dismissed accordingly. The learned Subordinate Judge on appeal found that the plaintiff had established his under-proprietary title and remanded the case for decision on the merits. The present appeal has been preferred by two of the representatives of the original defendants.

A preliminary objection is taken that the order remanding the case for decision on the merits was passed on the 21st December 1910. In the meantime the case has been decided by the Court of first instance in accordance with the remand order on the 5th April 1911, and it is urged on the strength of certain rulings of the Allahabad High Court, in the cases of Ikram un-nissa v. Muham- mad Wazir (1) and Karori Mal v. Sahodra (2), that this appeal cannot now be proceeded with.

In these cases, the High Court merely stated that it was not the practice to dispose of the appeal against the order under remand in circumstances like the present one, but this view of the law has expressly been dissented from by the same High Court in the cases of Rameshur Singh v. Sheo Din (3) and Babu Lal v. Ram Kali (4) and I have no doubt that I have jurisdiction to dispose of this appeal.

Another preliminary objection taken is that this Court has only power to decide whether the order of remand was in accordance with law or not and there is no jurisdiction to decide whether the decision on the preliminary point was correct or not and it is urged that this is a matter which can only be decided when the final appeal is heard against the order of the first Court, dated the 5th April 1911.

Here, again, the authorities are all against the respondents, In the case of Hasan Ali v. Siraj Husain (5), the first Court found that the suit was barred by section 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882. The District Judge on appeal held a contrary view and remanded the case under section 562 of the Code. The learned Judges of the High Court held that the suit was barred by section 13 and they proceeded to remark as follows:—"It is contended that we cannot pass a decree dismissing the appeal in the Court below. In our opinion, we can dispose of the appeal in the Court below as the defendant-appellant having succeeded in this appeal on the ground that section 13 of the Code applied to the suit, the suit must necessarily be dismissed as barred in limine. If we were simply to set aside the order of the Court below and tell the Court below that it was to dismiss the plaintiffs' appeal to it, as section 13 applied, we should be merely putting the parties to extra expense and adding a useless stage to the procedure of the case. This is the view of the law which has been taken by this Court in previous cases." This view of the law has also been accepted in a Full Bench decision of the same High Court in Badam v. Imrat (6) and by the Calcutta, Bombay and Madras High Courts; see Loki Mahto v. Aghoree Ajail Lal (7); Bhau Bala v. Bapaji Bapuji (8) and Sankaran v. Raman Kutti (9).

Both these preliminary objections fail and I proceed to decide the case on the merits. The suit by the plaintiff was for a declaration that he had under-proprietary rights in the land of two groves. The learned Subordinate Judge held that he was entitled to a decree. I am of opinion that his decision is incorrect. I accept the facts as found by the lower Court and shortly stated they are as below:—

The ancestors of the plaintiff were zemindars of the village until 1820 A. D. and they lost their proprietary possession from about that time. Grove No. 109 was planted by a female relation of the grandfather of the plaintiff before 1820. The plaintiff instituted a suit for possession of this grove against one Subha Singh, a nephew of this lady's husband, and obtained a decree for the trees only. He did not obtain a decree for under-proprietary rights in the land during the settlement operations. Grove No. 149 was planted by two men called Ambar Singh and Bhagol Singh before 1820. Ambar Singh was the plaintiff's grandfather. No decree at all was obtained with respect to this grove. It may be assumed for the purposes of this appeal that the plaintiff and his ancestors have enjoyed the produce of the grove from before 1820 up to institution of the suit and there is no proof that any of the zemindars were at any time able to eject them from it. In these circumstances, the learned Subordinate Judge appears to have relied upon Settlement Circular No. 63 of 1863 as an authority for holding that the plaintiff is entitled to the decree asked for. He remarks as below :—

"He (Munsif) has evidently misunderstood the scope of the Circular No. 63 of 1863, which declares the status of such grove-holders as the plaintiff's ancestors and which status does not extinguish by the close of the Settlement operations. The status continues and can be declared at any time if not lost by prescription."

On appeal, it is contended that there is no authority for the assumption that the provisions of the Cricular No. 63 of 1863 have the force of law. In my judgment if that Circular were strictly applied, it is possible that the plaintiff might have some ground for claiming under-propietary rights with respect to grove No. 149 as his position might possibly come in class No. 1 referred to in paragraph 3 of that circular. But I can find no authority for the contention that this Circular has the force of law and the following passage from paragraph 5 of the Circular in question shows this clearly:—"I am well aware that different usages prevail in different districts, and, indeed, in different ilakas of the same district, but I think that the great majority of cases that will come before you will be capable of being classified under one of the four classes above detailed. I have merely endeavoured to lay down some general rules for your guidance in carrying out the instructions contained in Circular No. 20 of 1863 under the heading 'groves'." Circular No. 20 of 1863 which is referred to is merely a circular forwarding instructions for the preparation of the Administration Papers in villages under Settlement, and this circular contains instructions showing how groves should be classified in this paper. There is also a distinct authority of this Court. It is to be found in the case of Umrao Singh v Munshi Ali Raza Khan (10). That was a case in which the right of tenants to remain in possession of the trees in groves after they have left their villages was discussed and on page 251, Mr. Chamier remarks as below:—

"It was suggested that 'Grove Circular' had the force of law. That is not so. It was not issued under Legislative authority, nor does it purport to lay down the law on the subject. Major MacAndrew was, in my opinion, in error in describing the Circular as the 'Local Law.'"

I am not aware that the position of a grove-holder, who has been in possession of the trees of a grove from a long period, whether he be a mere tenant or one of the old proprietary body, is with respect to under-proprietary rights in any way different from any other person who claims those rights. The learned Pleader for the plaintiff-respondent appears to think that there is some peculiar sanctity attached to the land of a grove which places it in a position entirely different from other land. For this contention he can cite no authority. The under-proprietary right claimed by the plaintiff-respondent in this case is a right based on prescription. It is not a right based upon any alleged grant or purchase and, therefore, the claimant is bound to prove his claim according to the provisions of the Oudh Sub-Settlement Act of 1866 and the law on the subject has been clearly laid down by this Court in the case of Maharaja Jagatjit Singh v. Suraj Bakhsh Singh (11), followed in Raja Baghwan Bakhsh Singh v. Mazhar Husain (12).

It is obvious that the plaintiff-respondent, according to his own case, cannot fulfil the conditions laid down in rule 10 of the rules attached to Act XXVI of 1866. It is not pretended that this land was ever held by his ancestors as sir or nankar when they were in proprietary possession of the village before 1820. I understand that the Pleader for the plaintiff-respondent means to urge that these rules are not exhaustive and that under-proprietary rights can be established otherwise. If that is the case, the burden lies heavily on the plaintiff-respondent to show how the under-proprietary rights claimed by him could be established according to law. For the reasons stated above, Circular No. 63 of 1863 cannot have the force of law and I am of opinion that the decision of the lower Court is incorrect. The plaintiff-respondent has not established an under-proprietary title.

I accept the appeal and, setting aside the order of the lower Appellate Court, restore that of the Court of first instance, dated the 25th July 1910 It follows from this that the order of the first Court, dated the 5th April 1911, which was passed on an incorrect order of remand has no force and is not binding upon the parties. The appellants are entitled to their costs throughout.

Appeal accepted.

Pauper suit—Application for leave to sue as a pauper—Question to be determined--Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIII, r. 5.

In an application for leave to sue as a pauper, the Court is bound to inquire into and determine the question of plaintiff's pauperism, unless it is satisfied that, under Order XXXIII, rule 5, plaintiff's allegations do not show a cause of action.

Petition, under section 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise the order of the District Court of Coimbatore, dated 28th June 1910 in Original Petition No. 181 of 1910.

Mr. M. K. Narayanaswami Iyer, for the Petitioner.

Mr. T. R. Krishnaswamy Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application to revise an order of the District Judge of Coimbatore rejecting an application for leave to institute a suit as a pauper. The Judge has recorded no finding on the question of the plaintiff's pauperism, but has found that the petitioner was not entitled to sue as reversioner. This finding is based on a reported judgment of this Court in Govindayyar v. Dorasami (1). The judgment shows that the decision of this Court was based on grounds special to the parties in that case. It would not affect the plaintiff.

Apart from this circumstance, Order XXXIII, rule 5, entitles the Court only to see whether the plaintiff's allegations do not show a cause of action. The plaintiff does not admit that the 1st defendant was the adopted son of the deceased Subbier either in his plaint or at his examination. The judgment referred to by the learned Judge was not put in evidence. If it had been, he would probably have found out that the decision in that case could not be relied on against the petitioner. As the Judge has not found that the allegations made by the petitioner do not show a cause of action, I must hold that he was not entitled to reject the petition without inquiring into the question of the petitioner's pauperism, and that he exercised a jurisdiction not vested in him in doing so.

The learned Vakil for the respondents says that the petitioner deliberately included a claim for moveables which was barred in order to make it appear that the Court-fees payable on the plaint would be much more than the property possessed by him. The petitioner's admission, when he was examined, shows that this observation is well-founded. But even deducting that amount, the property possessed by the plaintiff appears to be insufficient to cover the Court-fees on the remainder of the claim. It may be, as urged by Mr. Krishnaswami Iyer, that the petitioner has other property; but the Judge has not decided that question. He would, no doubt, be entitled to reject it, if he found that the petitioner was possessed of sufficient property to enable him to pay the Court-fees due on his plaint.

It is also urged on behalf of the respondents that this Court should not interfere as the petition was presented on the 91st day after the order was pronounced deducting the time allowed for obtaining copies. Assuming that the petition was put in one day after the ninety days allowed in the case of appeals, I am not prepared to reject the petition on this ground. It cannot be said that there has been any excessive delay in the presentation of the petition.

In the result, I set aside the order of the lower Court and direct that the petition be restored to the file and disposed of afresh according to law. The costs of this petition will abide the result.

Petition remanded.

A suit was brought for partition of plaintiff's share in family property. The defence was that plaintiff's father was expelled from the family for some scandalous conduct and that he had received his share of the property. The evidence established that the plaintiff re-appeared in the village where the family revised, that he took up his abode there, that he was recognized as a member of the family and that no case of exclusion from the joint property could be made out against him till five or six years before suit:

Held, that the suit should be decreed.

Appeal from the judgment of the High Court (Mookerjee and Holmwood, JJ.) at Calcutta, dated April 4th, 1907, reversing that of the Sub-Judge of Bankipore, dated June 23rd, 1904, and decreeing the suit of the plaintiffs.

JUDGMENT.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—This case was heard ex parte. The suit was brought by one Loke Narayan Mahton and his three sons as members of a joint undivided Hindu family under the Mitakshara Law, asking for a declaration that they were entitled to one-third share of the family property, and for an order for partition on that footing. The defence was that Jiaram Mahton, Loke Narayan's father, who was the son of Pokhan Mahton, was expelled from the family in 1874 in consequence of some scandalous conduct which brought upon him the displeasure of the zemindar in whose service the family were employed—that on his expulsion there was a partition so far as he was concerned, and he then received his share of the family property which had been all acquired in the service of the zemindar by Pokhan and his sons, and that thereupon Jiaram disappeared with his wife and his son Loke Narayan, who was a mere child at the time, and so his connection with the family came to an end. It was also contended that the plaintiffs' claim was barred by the law of limitation.

The suit was dismissed with costs in the Court of the third Subordinate Judge of Patna. On appeal to the High Court at Calcutta, this judgment was reversed and a decree was pronounced in favour of the plaintiffs.

The evidence is very voluminous and very contradictory. The oral testimony on both sides seems to be even more than usually untrustworthy. After a most elaborate and careful review of the whole case, from which nothing of importance appears to be omitted, and to which nothing can be usefully added, the learned Judges of the High Court came to the conclusion that the case set up of Jiaram's expulsion in 1874 and the alleged partition of the family property on that occasion failed completely. Then they proceeded to consider the position of affairs when Loke Narayan re-appeared in 1889 after his father's death and took up his abode in the village where the surviving members of the family lived. The view of the Court was that he was then recognised as a member of the family, and that no case of exclusion from the joint property could be made out against him till five or six years before suit, when there appeared to have been exclusion from commensality but no partition of the family property.

The case was very fully and very ably presented to this Board by the learned Counsel for the appellants, but their Lordships are not satisfied that there is any ground for disturbing the judgment of the High Court.

Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal ought to be dismissed with costs.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), s. 25—Finding opposed to evidence—Power of High Court to interfere in revision—Acknowledgment of payment by one trustee without actual receipt of money—Such acknowledgment not binding on the institution.

Even if a finding of fact arrived at by a lower Court is entirely opposed to the evidence, the High Court has no power to interfere in revision under section 25 of Act IX of 1887.

A mere acknowledgment of payment by one of the trustees who did not really receive the money cannot bind the institution.

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the decrees of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Mayavaram at Kumbakonam, dated 6th March 1911, in Small Cause Suits Nos. 2211 and 2210 respectively of 1910.

In re ATYAM VENKIAH.

Mr. T. M. Krishanswami Iyer, for the Petitioners.

JUDGMENT.—The only point urged in support of these petitions is that one of the trustees, Panchapagesa Iyer, having received the rent sued for and acknowledged the receipt of it, the plaintiff is not entitled to recover it again from the defendant. But the lower Court has found that the rent was not really paid to Panchapagesa Iyer.

It is stated that this conclusion is entirely opposed to the evidence, but I have no power to interfere even if that be so. I am also unable to hold that a mere acknowledgment of payment by one of the trustees who did not really receive the money can in any way bind the institution. I dismiss the petitions.

Petitions dismissed.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 811 OF 1911

January 25, 1912.

Present:—Mr. Justice Sundara Aiyar.

In re ATYAM VENKIAH AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS.

Res judicata—Agreement to maintain defendant in consideration of Will—Prior suit on agreement by defendant for arrears of maintenance and decree therein—Present suit by plaintiff to set aside agreement—Plaintiff not entitled to rely on events prior to former suit—Subsequent events disclosing intention to defeat the Will—Not a sufficient cause of action.

By an agreement, Exhibit I, the plaintiff agreed to give maintenance to the defendant in consideration of her executing a Will bequeathing all her moveable property to him after her death. The defendant instituted Original Suit No. 160 of 1907 for two years' payment due to her under Exhibit I and obtained a decree. Then the plaintiff sued for a declaration that there was a failure of consideration for Exhibit I and, therefore, the agreement could not be enforced against him:

Held, (1) that the plaintiff could not rely on events prior to Original Suit No. 160 of 1907 to avoid the agreement, as he was bound to put forward in that suit all pleas which would entitle him to get the Court to hold that the agreement was not enforceable against him;

(2) that the only events subsequent to that suit alleged as entitling him to relief, viz., that the defendant made false complaints to the Police of loss of some properties included in the Will and also concealed some of them in a third person's house, disclosed no cause of action to avoid Exhibit I, and that the allegation of a mere intention on her part to defeat the bequests was not sufficient.

KHADAM HUSSAIN KHAN v. MURAD BIBI.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Kistna at Ellore, in Appeal Suit No. 242 of 1910, presented against the decree of the District Munsif of Ellore, in Original Suit No. 611 of 1908.

Mr. T. Prakasam, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—I am of opinion that the decision of the lower Courts on the 4th issue, namely, whether the claim is res judicata, is right. The defendant instituted Original Suit No. 160 of 1907 for two years' payments due to her according to Exhibit I and obtained a decree. The plaintiff was bound to put forward in that suit all pleas which would entitle him to get the Court to hold that the agreement was not enforceable against him; any plea not then urged could not be gone into now.

The only question, therefore, is whether there are any allegations in the plaint of events subsequent to that suit which would entitle the plaintiff to avoid the document. The plaintiff alleges that the defendant made a false complaint of the loss of some of the properties which are included in the Will, made by her, that the Police who investigated the case found that her allegations were false, and that the defendant, with a view to defeat the bequests made by her, concealed some of the property in the house of a third person. The question is whether these allegations are sufficient to show that there was failure of consideration subsequent to the decision in Original Suit No. 160 of 1907. I think it cannot be doubted that the allegation of a mere intention on the part of the defendant to defeat the bequests is not sufficient to give the plaintiff a cause of action to avoid the document. If there were some disposition made by her in favour of third parties which would defeat the bequests, that, no doubt, would be sufficient. If there were an allegation that she deprived herself of her possession in such a manner that they would no longer be under her control, that also might be sufficient. But a statement that she had concealed the properties in the house of a third person does not, I think, amount to an allegation that, by depriving herself either of the ownership or of the possession of the properties, she had defeated the provisions of her Will.

I am constrained to hold that there are no allegations in the plaint of any event subsequent to the suit of 1907 which disclose a cause of action to avoid Exhibit I. It is, no doubt, true that in the case of a Will dealing with moveable property, the position of the legatee is extremely precarious. But that is the plaintiff's fault for he agreed to give maintenance to the defendant in consideration of a Will dealing with moveable property.

I dismiss the second appeal.

Appeal to Privy Council—Stay of execution—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Order XLV, r. 13.

Where permission to appeal to the Privy Council is granted, execution should not generally be stayed unless the execution would so upset things that in the event of the appeal being successful, the status quo ante could not be restored or could be restored only with great difficulty. Execution of the decree should not be stayed on the mere allegation that the applicant will suffer much loss.

Application, under Order XLV, rule 13 (2) (c) of the Civil Procedure Code, for stay of execution proceedings and for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

For the previous stage of this litigation, see 114 P. W. R. 1911; 12 Ind. Cas. 49.

Mr. Grey and Rai Bahadur Lala Sukh Dyal, for the Petitioner.

The Hon'ble R. B. Shadi Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—We have to-day granted to Khadim Hussain Khan defendant-respondent leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council and have now to deal with his application for stay of execution pending decision of the appeal. In his application defendant-respondent merely says that he will suffer much loss, if execution is allowed to proceed. Before us it is explained that the property dealt with in the decree is joint property, that decree-holder is a widow with a life-interest only, and that defendant-respondent is prepared to give security for three or four years' mesne profits, if necessary. He also offers to pay to the widow any reasonable maintenance allowance that the Court may fix.

The state of affairs appears to be that petitioner is in physical possession, while mutation has been effected in favour of respondent, i. e., the widow, who is paying the land revenue and has already obtained a decree for her share of the produce of four harvests, and intends to go on suing from time to time, if necessary, on the strength of the entries in the Revenue Records and the decree now under consideration.

In these circumstances, it is clear that appellant must show some "special" cause for stay of execution; Order XLV, rule 13 requires this; and it may be said generally that execution should not in such a case as this be stayed, unless the execution would so upset things that, in the event of the appeal to the Privy Council being successful, the status quo ante could not be restored or could be restored only with great difficulty. Here we can find no such thing. Execution will merely involve the continuance by the widow of demands for share of produce and, on refusals, suits by her—a condition of affairs already in existence. She is prepared to give security for restitution upto three or four years' share of produce.

Mr. Grey for petitioner alleges that the widows' brother, who is an enemy of his client, manages her affairs and that confusion and disturbance will be caused by his managing her half share on the basis of joint possession. But this seems to us no argument at all for staying execution:

In our opinion, our own decree is correct, and if it is upheld, sooner or later the decree must be executed, and, presumably, whenever it is executed, this difficulty about the widow's manager will arise. It seems to us that the postponement of this difficulty by means of an appeal against a decree, that we at present consider a just decree, is no good ground for refusing to a decree-holder her natural right to reap the fruits of her decree.

We refuse to stay execution indefinitely, but we direct that within a month the decree-holder do furnish in the executing Court security for three years' share of produce of the land covered by the decree, and that until the security is furnished, the execution of the decree should be stayed. No costs.

Application dismissed.

Practice—Return of summons—Order of Court—Clearness.

When summonses are returned unserved, the Court should pass subsequent orders very clearly, stating the delay for non-service, etc. A vague order to the effect "no vigilant stops are taken to secure attendance of witnesses" is not sufficient.

Appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge's Court of Kishna at Ellore, dated the 30th April 1910, in C. M. P. No. 378 of 1910 in O. S. No. 55 of 1909.

Mr. T. Prakasam, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. Narayanamurti, for the Plaintiff.

JUDGMENT.—We are unable to sustain the order appealed against. The Subordinate Judge does not say that the time between the 22nd March and the 4th April would ordinarily not be sufficient for serving summonses on the witnesses. He says:—"No vigilant steps were taken by the petitioner to secure the attendance of his witnesses." This is vague, and we are not clear as to what he means. He does not say there was any defect in the summonses. The return of the summonses unserved for want of jurisdiction may have been due to a mistake on the part of the Court in not sending them to the proper authority for service. We may observe that in a case of this sort, the lower Court ought to send up the summonses for the inspection of this Court. We set aside the order and direct the petition to be restored to the file and disposed of afresh according to law. The costs of this appeal will abide the result.

Zamorin of Calicut v. Narayana Murayana Mussad, 22 M. 323, relied upon.

A Zemindar's right to claim rent against an ex-proprietary tenant at the rate fixed by the Revenue Courts accrues not merely from the date on which the rent is so fixed but from the date on which the ex-proprietary tenancy arises.

Herdeo Bakhsh v. Sri Pargash Singh, 12 O. C. 35; 1 Ind. 689, followed.

Appeal against the decree of the Officiating District Judge, Rae Bareli, dated 2nd August 1911, modifying that of the Deputy Collector, Sultanpur, dated 26th May 1911.

Mr. Masaldan, for the Appellant.

Mr. Bhawani Bakhsh, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—It appears that the defendant-respondent executed a deed of mortgage on the 17th of June 1902, in favour of the Raja of Hasanpur in respect of 23 villages in lieu of Rs. 1,25,000. On the 11th of January, 1904, he mortgaged nine villages out of the 23 villages mortgaged to the Raja of Hasanpur to the plaintiff-appellant. The latter redeemed the prior mortgage of the 17th of June 1902. The plaintiff-appellant instituted four suits in the Court of the Assistant Collector of Sultanpur in October 1908 for the recovery of arrears of rent for 1313 to 1316 Fasli in respect of the land situated in five of the mortgaged villages. The suits were resisted on the ground, among others, that the defendant-respondent was in possession of the land of which the rent was claimed as sir and khudkasht as an ex-proprietary tenant and, as no rent had been fixed between him and the plaintiff-appellant, the suits could not be maintained. The Assistant Collector admitted the plea of the defendant-respondent and dismissed the claims. On appeal to the District Judge the decree of the first Court was affirmed on the ground that the plaintiff-appellant had failed to prove as alleged in the plaint that the defendant-respondent was a mere tenant-at-will. Subsequently, in June 1910, the Revenue Courts, at the instance of the plaintiff-appellant, fixed the rent of the sir and khudkasht found in the possession of the defendant respondent. The order of the Revenue Court fixing the rent was made under section 36, clause (2), of the United Provinces Land Revenue Act.

On the 11th of March 1911, the plaintiff-appellant instituted two fresh suits in the Court of the Assistant Collector of Sultanpur for the recovery of rent of sir and khudkasht in the possession of the defendant-respondent in the villages of Ganeshpur and Rudauli on the basis of the rent fixed by the Revenue Courts in June 1910. The two claims related to the arrears of rent for 1315 to 1318 Fasli. The claim of the plaintiff-appellant was resisted on the ground, among others, that it was barred by section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The first Court decreed the claim. The defendant-respondent preferred an appeal to the District Judge who held that the claim with regard to 1315 and 1316 Fasli was barred by res judicata, because the prior claim for arrears of rent included the claim for those years. The plaintiff-appellant challenges the finding of the learned Judge in his second appeal before this Court. The reasoning of the learned Judge as to why section 11 of the Code bars the claim for the years 1315 and 1316 Fasli is not quite intelligible to me. The prior claim of the plaintiff-appellant was dismissed on the ground that he had failed to prove that the defendant-respondent was his tenant-at-will. In the present case, his allegation is that the defendant-respondent is an ex-proprietary tenant. The case of Zamorin of Calicat v. Narayanan Mussad (1) is to the point. The head-note of the case is as follows:—

"In a previous suit in which plaintiff had been a party, it had been attempted to assert plaintiff's title to a piece of land occupied by the defendants by proving that they held the same by virtue of an alleged specific lease. The Court had held that no such lease had been executed. Plaintiff now claimed the land as belonging to his devasom, and sued to recover it on the strength of his title; he also set up the alleged lease once more: Held, that though the question of the validity of the lease was res judicata, plaintiff was at liberty to sue also on the strength of his title independently of the lease, and he was not estopped from so suing by the fact that the former suit had been based on the lease alone."

It is evident from the principle laid down in the above case that the dismissal of the prior claim of the plaintiff-appellant on the ground that he had failed to prove the defendant-respondent to be a tenant-at-will does not estop him from suing the latter as an ex-proprietary tenant. I hold that the bar of res judicata does not apply to the present claim with regard to 1315 and 1316 Fasli. The general agent for the respondent contends that the claim of the plaintiff-appellant, so far as it relates to the arrears prior to the 10th of June 1910, the date on which the rent was fixed, should be held to be not entertainable. In other words, his contention is that the right of the plaintiff-appellant to claim arrears of rent accrued on the date the Revenue Courts fixed the rent payable by the defendant-respondent. This contention is negatived by the case of Hurdeo Bakhsh v. Sri Pargash Singh(2), the head-note of which is as follows:—

"Where the respondent sued, the appellants for rent of lands of which they had become the ex-proprietary tenants under section 126 of the Land Revenue Act, held, that the rent determined under section 36, clause (2), though subsequent to the institution of the suit, took effect retrospectively from the date on which the ex-proprietary tenancy arose."

It is clear from this ruling that the order of the Revenue Courts fixing the rent of an ex-proprietary tenant has a retrospective effect. The contention of the respondent's agent is, therefore, disallowed.

I allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the District Judge and restore that of the Court of the Assistant Collector with costs in all Courts.

Appeal allowed.

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Sch. II, Art. 142—Plaintiff's possession—Form of issue—Appeal—Judgment—High Court's power—Appeal—Second.

In a suit for possession falling under Article 142 of the Limitation Act, 1877, the issue should properly be "whether the plaintiff was in possession within 12 years prior to the suit."

The High Court will, in second appeal, satisfy itself only with regard to the lower Appellate Court having applied its mind to the evidence on record and pronounced its finding upon a consideration of the evidence.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of Chingleput, in Appeal Suit No. 537 of 1909, presented against the decree of the Court of District Munsif of Poonamalle, in Original Suit No. 546 of 1908.

Mr. A. Kirshnasami Iyer, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—It is urged that Exhibit III has been misconstrued, and that it shows that the plaintiff was really entitled only to one-quarter of half a pangu and not a half pangu. The appellant has been unable to show that this construction of Exhibit III was urged before the lower Courts and the document has not been placed before me. Both Courts find that the plaintiff proved his possession of half the pangu within 12 years prior to the suit.

It is urged that the form of the issue relating to possession is incorrect inasmuch as it ran in these terms:—"(iii) Whether the defendants have acquired any title by adverse possession?" No doubt in a suit for possession falling within Article 142 of the Limitation Act, the issue should properly be:—"Whether the plaintiff was in possession within 12 years prior to the suit?" Possibly, the form of the issue was due to the fact that another issue was framed, viz., the 2nd:—"Whether the plaintiff has acquired any title by adverse possession and whether the alleged trespass is true?" The question, as raised in the issues, was whether the plaintiff or the defendants were in possession and the Munsif found that the plaintiff was. The Appellate Court concurs in this finding. It is contended that the judgment does not conform to the requirements of the Statute inasmuch as it does not show that the Judge dealt with the evidence on record. Appellate judgments coming up before this Court are, indeed, sometimes undesirously laconic. But in second appeal, this Court has to consider whether, in the circumstances of each case, it is able to come to the conclusion that the Judge in the Appellate Court applied his mind to the evidence on record and intended to pronounce his finding upon a consideration of the evidence.

In this case, the Appellate Court concurs in the conclusion of the first Court and as I read the judgment, the Judge apparently concurred also in the reasons given by the Munsif.

In such a case, it cannot be said that those reasons must be set out again in the judgment of the Appellate Court. The Munsif, in deciding whether the oral evidence of the plaintiff or the defendants was more entitled to weight, took into consideration his finding on the question of title. I have no doubt that he was right in doing so.

I dismiss the second appeal.

Appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge, Barabanki, dated 6th July 1191, reversing that of the Munsif, Fatehpur, dated 18th May 1911.

Mr. G. H. Thomas, for the Appellants.

Babu Rudra Datta Sinha, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against an order made by the Subordinate Judge of Barabanki in his appellate jurisdiction. The order of remand is expressed to have been made under the provisions of Order XLI, rule 23, of the Code of Civil Procedure and the question for determination here is whether or not that order was a valid one. For the appellants it is contended that the order was not a valid one inasmuch as the first Court had not disposed of the suit upon a preliminary point. A preliminary objection to the hearing of this appeal was raised on behalf of the respondents. The learned Pleader for the respondents called attention to the fact that before the present appeal was filed, the order of remand passed by the learned Subordinate Judge had already been carried out by the first Court. He relied upon the rulings reported as Gulzari Mal v. Kabir-un-nissa (1) and as Salig Ram v. Brij Bilas (2). These rulings were rulings under the old Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, and, no doubt, so far as they are applicable to the present Code, do support the respondents' preliminary objection. On the other hand, Counsel for the appellants referred to a Full Bench ruling of the Allahabad High Court in Uman Kuari v Jarbandhan Pathak (3), by which the rulings above referred to were overruled. He also relies upon section 105 (2) of the present Code of Civil Procedure, according to which a party who wishes to challenge the validity of an order of remand must seek his remedy by appeal. He cannot now await, as he might have done under the old Code, the final decision of the case and challenge the validity of the order of remand in an appeal preferred against the final decree in the case. It seems to me quite clear that the ruling reported as Uman Kuari v. Jarbandhan Pathak (3), is an authority which should be followed. I, therefore, overrule the preliminary objection. On the merits, there can be no question that the appeal ought to be decreed. When the case was before the Munsif, he raised 8 issues on the pleadings. All of these he decided with the exception of issue 7, a finding upon which was rendered unnecessary by the findings on the other issues. This being so, the Subordinate Judge's order of remand is entirely erroneous. It is not correct to say that the suit was decided in the first Court on a mere preliminary point. I accept this appeal, set aside the order of remand and all the proceedings subsequent to it and direct that the case be taken up again by the Subordinate Judge and that it be decided by him in appeal in accordance with law. The respondents will pay the costs of this appeal.

(1) 30 A. 191; A. W. N. (1908) 76; 5 A. L. J. 270.
(2) 4 A. L. J. 569; A. W. N. (1907) 234; 29 A. 659.
(3) 5 A. L. J. 447; A. W. N. (1908) 195; 4 M. L. T. 162.

Appeal accepted.

In a suit for possession by a purchaser of a share in the joint property, the vendor's co-sharers cannot successfully contest the bona fides or validity of the sale on the ground of want of or inadequacy of the consideration so long as the vendor himself is satisfied.

A co-sharer's possession cannot be considered to have become adverse unless and until he sets up his own title by some overt act.

Second appeal from the order of the Additional Divisional Judge, Delhi Division, dated 9th November 1910 modifying that of the District Judge, Gurgaon, dated 15th August 1910, dismissing the claim.

Lala Dwarka Das, for the Appellant.

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts will appear from the judgments of the lower Courts. Plaintiff, as purchaser from Chajia, defendant No. 1, sued for the share of the latter as heir of Dula and Rura, his father and uncle, in certain joint land. The first Court dismissed the suit as barred by time, but the lower Appellate Court has found the claim to be within time, so far as Dula's share is concerned, and has decreed it to that extent.

Kahna, son of Chunna, one of the co-sharers, has filed a further appeal to this Court.

Lala Dwarka Das opened his argument by remarking that plaintiff's purchase from Chajia was not a bona fide one and that his claim was speculative. We do not, however, see what right appellant has to contest the bana fides of the sale. The matter is between plaintiff and the vendor alone, and does not concern appellants at all. If the plaintiff has not paid full consideration for the purchase, that fact does not affect his claim in any way; if Chajia is satisfied, no one else has any right to object.

Appellant's Counsel next argued that Dula became absent some time between 1877 and 1883, and we note that he was recorded as absent and out of possession in the latter year.

Upon his death, however, in 1887, his mother acting as guardian of his son, Chajia, got mutation of his share affected in the latter's name, but it was agreed that Chunna should remain in possession until Chajia attained his majority. Chunna's possession thereafter was certainly permissive and on behalf of the minor, Chajia. The latter according to the first Court's finding attained his majority 14 years before he instituted this suit, and Lala Dwarka Das argues that his client's possession became adverse from the date when Chajia reached this age. We are unable to accept this argument. Chunna was himself a co-sharer and his possession cannot be considered to have become adverse unless and until he set up his own title by some overt act. This he did not do.

Nor can it be held that Chajia abandoned the land merely because he did not seek re-entry for 14 years after attaining his majority.

He is a simple minded person and was probably not sufficiently well off to resume possession or to recover the land for himself, so he took something from the plaintiff and sold him his rights.

Under the circumstances, the latter is entitled to the decree granted to him, and we dismiss the appeal with costs. Plaintiff put in cross objections to-day but we refused to consider them as they were out of time and no good reason was shown why we should admit them to a hearing.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application to revise the judgment of the Subordinate Court of Tinnevelly in Small Cause Suit No. 1476 of 1909. The plaintiff is the assignee of the rights of Nallakannan, a ticket-holder in a chit conducted by the 1st defendant. Defendants Nos. 2 to 4 are the sons of the 1st defendant. The plaintiff gave notice of the assignment made to him to the 1st defendant. Subsequent to this notice, Nallakannan's right was attached by Subramania Pillai, who had obtained a decree against Nallakannan, and was brought to sale and purchased by the 5th defendant. The result is, there are two persons claiming the rights which Nallakannan originally had—the plaintiff who got an assignment from him, and the 5th defendant who purchased his right in Court-auction. The 5th defendant contended that the assignment in favour of the plaintiff was intended to defraud the creditors of Nallakannan and that, therefore, he and not the plaintiff was entitled to recover from the 1st to the 4th defendants the amount due for the ticket. This plea has been upheld by the Subordinate Judge, who finds that out of the consideration of Rs. 140 for the assignment, Rs. 105 was not paid for discharging a debt due by Nallakannan, as alleged by the plaintiff. The remaining Rs. 35 is said to have been paid to Nallakannan in cash before the Sub-Registrar. That amount is not said to have been used for the purpose of discharging any other debt of Nallakannan. I must accept the finding that the assignment in the plaintiff's favour was intended to defeat the creditors of Nallakannan. In fact the petition does not impeach the finding.

The question raised by the learned Counsel for the petitioner is that, even taking this to be the fact, he is entitled to recover, as his assignment, which was by a registered instrument, was completed by notice being given to the 1st defendant. There can be no doubt that the assignment was complete as between the plaintiff and Nallakannan and could not be impeached by the latter. But I think it is settled law that, although as between the transferor and transferee in the case of an assignment which is intended to defeat creditors, the assignor's rights must be regarded as having vested in the assignee, the creditors of the assignor are not bound by such an assignment and are entitled to attach the property assigned as being still the property of the assignor so far as the debts are concerned. It is the practice for creditors to attach property fraudulently assigned away by their judgment-debtors as being still property available for the satisfaction of their debts in execution of their decrees. When such an attachment is made, the assignee puts in a claim petition and the question is tried by the Court, whether the assignment is valid as against creditors, or invalid and, therefore, as not standing in the way of execution by the creditor who attaches the property as still belonging to the judgment-debtor so far as the satisfaction of the creditor's decree is concerned. And if the claim is allowed or disallowed and a regular suit is instituted either by the judgment-creditor or by the assignee, the validity of the assignment is determined in an original suit. So far, therefore, as Subramania Pillai, who obtained the decree against Nallakannan Pillai, was concerned, he must be regarded as having been entitled to attach the property notwithstanding the assignment in the plaintiff's favour; and if he could do so and impeach the plaintiff's right as assignee, I can find no good reason for holding that the purchaser at a sale held in pursuance of his attachment cannot also impeach the plaintiff's right.

The 5th defendant must have the same rights as Subramania Pillai to call in question the assignment in the plaintiff's favour; for otherwise the privilege that a decree-holder has to attach property that has been fraudulently assigned away, would be practically useless. I must, therefore, hold that the 5th defendant is entitled to show that his purchase is good as against the plaintiff's rights as assignee from Nallakannan Pillai.

Mr. Deva Doss contended that even then the 1st defendant and his sons, defendants Nos. 2 to 4, are bound to make payment to the plaintiff. I am unable to uphold this argument. If there are two competing claimants to the same debt, it is clear, in my opinion, that the debtor is entitled to say that one of them is the person really entitled to payment from him and not the other. It is argued that when Subramania Pillai attached the debt, it was the duty of the 1st defendant, who had already received notice of the plaintiff's assignment, to say that he had already received notice that Nallakannan had made an assignment in the plaintiff's favour. I can find no authority for holding that there was any such duty in him at law. Under the present Code, which provides for garnishee proceedings, a debtor would, no doubt, have to state whether there is really any debt due by him. But under the old Code, debts attached were often sold and there was no duty on the part of the debtor to admit or deny the existence of a debt in execution proceedings. It was quite open to him to wait until the purchaser at Court-auction sued him for the debt. He could then deny that what was sold by Court was absolutely worthless, as no debt was due by him at all to the judgment-debtor whose property was attached. I am, therefore, of opinion that it was open to the 1st defendant to contend that he was bound to make payment to the 5th defendant and not to the plaintiff. Besides, it is difficult to see how the plaintiff suffered any prejudice by the first defendant not bringing the plaintiff's assignment to the notice of the Court when the 5th defendants made the attachment.

It is then alleged by the learned Counsel that his client was a bona fide assignee for consideration without notice. I can find no trace of any such plea having been raised in the lower Court, nor does the plaintiff say so in his evidence. I am, therefore, unable to allow this question to be argued here for the first time.

It is also suggested that probably the attachment by Subramania Pillai and the purchase by the 5th defendant were all collusive transactions brought about by Nallakannan himself or by the 1st defendant. And attention is drawn to the fact that, when the plaintiff gave notice of assignment in his favour, the 1st defendant stated that there had already been an oral assignment in favour of Subramania Pillai, the very person who subsequently attached the debt in execution of his decree. Here, again, the contention was not raised in the lower Court and I cannot entertain it in revision.

I must, therefore, hold, on the finding that the assignment in the plaintiff's favour was intended to defeat the creditors of Nallakannan, that the purchase by the 5th defendant at Court-sale must be upheld as against the plaintiff, and that the 1st defendant, the debtor, is entitled to refuse to make payment to the plaintiff.

The petition must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Petition dismissed.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), s. 13—Husband claiming to be guardian of his minor wife—Absence of proper inquiry.

A husband may in many cases be a suitable guardian of his minor wife but the question must be settled, one way or the other, after proper inquiry as contemplated by section 13 of Act VIII of 1890.

An order made without proper inquiry is bad and ought to be set aside.

Miscellaneous civil appeal from the order of the District Judge, Kangra District, dated 17th February 1911.

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Appellant.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the order of the District Judge, refusing Tirhu's prayer to be appointed guardian of the person of his minor wife, who is at present living with her father.

The District Judge made no inquiry as contemplated by section 13 of the Guardians and Wards Act. He did not even take the statements of the parties, but only those of their Pleaders.

A husband may in many cases be a suitable guardian of his minor wife, but the question can hardly be settled without inquiry in the way adopted by the District Judge. I accept the appeal and, setting aside the order of the District Judge, direct him to decide the application after making an inquiry as contemplated by the law.

The parties should be examined and issues settled and then they should be allowed to adduce their evidence.

Appeal accepted; Case remanded.

Oaths Act (X of 1873)—Failure to take oath—Practice.

A fact which was to have been proved by oath cannot be taken to have been proved simply because a party resiles from an agreement to take oath.

If a party resiles from his agreement to take oath or be bound by the oath, a decree cannot be passed against him forthwith. The only course open to the Court in such a case is to proceed with the trial of the suit in the ordinary way drawing such inference as might be proper from the conduct of the defaulting party and mulcting him in costs as may be considered appropriate.

JUDGMENT.—In the present case, the onus of proof is on the 1st defendant, not on the plaintiff; and this distinguishes the present case from that relied on by the Subordinate Judge, Umayammai v. Muttiah Nadar (1). The oath has not in fact been taken by the defendant, and consequently the defendant's contention as to interest which was to have been proved conclusively by the defendant's oath has not been proved. Neither the Oaths Act nor any of the decisions referred to in the argument, Thoyi Ammal v. Subbaroya Mudali (2), Majan v. Pattukutti (3), are authority for holding that in such circumstances that fact which was to have been proved by the oath must be taken to have been duly proved. No doubt a party ought not without good reason to be allowed to resile from his agreement, but if he does resile, the law does not provide that a decree may forthwith be given against him. Apparently, the only course open to the Court in the present case was to proceed with the trial of the suit in the ordinary way drawing such inference as might be proper from the conduct of the defaulting party and mulcting him in costs that should be considered appropriate. We set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and remand the suit to the Court of first instance, for the trial of the 2nd issue, the only matter now in dispute and for disposal according to law. The plaintiff must pay all costs hitherto incurred in all the Courts whatever the result.

The right to dower of a Shia Muhammadan widow, does not confer upon her a saleable estate in her husband's immoveable property.

A., a member of a joint Hindu family, ceased to be joint in food and joint in business, with B. and C., the other members,but no partition of the family property was then made. After that he received a present of a considerable sum of money from his grandmother, with which he carried on the business of a money-lender on his own account, and out of his separate self-acquired property, he purchased some property in 1853-54 from a childless Shia Muhammadan widow, which was in 1846 mortgaged to B. and C. by her husband. The heirs of the husband sued, in 1903, for possession of the property, the representatives of the mortgagees upon the allegation that the mortgage had been discharged by the usufruct:

Held, that the defendants possessed a title by adverse possession and the suit of the plaintiffs must fail.

Appeal from the judgment and decree of the Allahabad High Court reported as 29 A. 640, dated June 13th, 1907, which partly affirmed and partly reversed a decree of the Sub-Judge of Saharanpore, dated July 14th, 1904, by which the suit had been dismissed.

FACTS.—That suit was brought on September 1, 1903, for the redemption of a two-thirds share in Mauza Lohari, which two-thirds share had been mortgaged by the plaintiffs' predecessor-in-title, Mehdi Ali, on the 22nd July 1846. Mehdi Ali was also the owner of the remaining one-third share, which, however, was not included in the mortgage.

The plaint alleged that the mortgage was to Sita Ram and Sheo Lal, then represented by the defendants thereto. It was a possessory mortgage for Rs. 4,000 for two years, and the mortgagees at the date of suit were still in possession. The plaint alleged that the mortgage-money with interest had been paid up from the profits of the property. The relief prayed was for possession by redemption, and a sum of Rs. 5,500 on account of mesne profits for the last three years, and for future mesne profits and interest from the date of suit.

The defendants were the widows of Baldeo Sahai, who was the son of the said Sheo Lal and grandson of the said Sita Ram, and formed with them, at the date of the mortgage, a Hindu joint family. They denied that the mortgage was still subsisting, and that the plaintiffs had any equity to redeem. They alleged that the widows of Mehdi Ali, as admitted by his other heirs, became the owners of his entire estate, "in lieu of the debt due to them." They relied upon two transactions of purchase one dated May 27, 1853, by their deceased husband Baldeo Sahai of a 10 biswas or half share of the said Mauza Lohari from Ashrafunnissa one of the widows of Mehdi Ali, and the other dated March 20, 1854, by their predecessor-in-title, Sheo Lal, of the remaining 10 biswas share thereof, at an auction-sale in execution of decrees against the said Ashrafunnissa and Umdu Begam, the second widow of the said Mehdi Ali and his daughters. They contended that under the purchase of May 1853, Baldeo became the owner to the extent of the said 10 biswas share, or at least to the extent of his vendor's interest, that the mortgage-money had been paid off out of the usufruct of the property, and that he had been in proprietary and adverse possession of the 10 biswas share for more than 12 years. They also contended that the auction-sale of March 20, 1854, of the remaining 10 biswas was "upheld and confirmed, in spite of an objection taken by the then defendant's judgment-debtors, and the auction-purchaser's name had all along been entered in the revenue papers."

The plaintiffs filed a reply to the defendant's written statement on the 8th February 1904, in which they contended that the mortgage still subsisted and that they were still entitled to redeem, the statutory period of 60 years not having elapsed. With regard to the auction-sale of March 20th, 1854, they admitted that decrees were passed, and that a 10 biswas share in Mauza Lohari along with shares in some other villages were advertised for sale. But the "fact is that the share in Mauza Nizampur was sold in execution of the aforesaid decrees, and that amount due under these decrees was paid off and the sale of Mauza Lohari was stopped." With regard to the transaction of May 27, 1853, they denied that Ashrafunnissa had any title to convey, and also that Baldeo Sahai had gained title by adverse possession. As a member of the joint family, he was one of the mortgagees and could not set up adverse possession against his mortgagor.

Eleven issues were settled, but, so far as now material, they related to the title of Ashrafunnissa at the date of the conveyance of May 27, 1853, and the effect of Baldeo Sahai's possession thereunder, and also to the question of Sheo Lal's alleged purchase at the auction-sale of March 20, 1854. They are summarized in the judgment of the High Court as follows:—

(1) Had Ashrafunnissa a daughter living when her husband Mehdi Ali died?

(2) If not, what is the effect of the transfer of the 27th May 1853, by her to Baldeo Sahai?

(3) As to the remaining 10 biswas, were they actually sold and purchased by Sheo Lal or not?

Upon the first point, the Courts below differed, the Subordinate Judge finding upon the evidence:—"I am inclined to think tha Ashrafunnissa had a daughter and that she was alive at the death of Mehdi Alt with the result that she was owner of 9/32 share in the village on her behalf, and through her daughter and transfer of the remainder 7/32 was without any right." The High Court, on the other hand, found "that the evidence will not support the finding that Mehdi Ali had a daughter by Ashrafunnissa, who survived him," with the result that under Shia law Ashrafunnissa did "not inherit any immoveable property from her husband."

Assuming that Ashrafunnissa had no title by inheritance from Mehdi Ali, the Subordinate Judge found "that Baldeo Sahai's name was recorded in the revenue papers through the sale-deed. His name must have been recorded in place of Ashrafunnissa as owner." He added: "Baldeo Sahai himself was sole and separate purchaser of 10 biswas. In respect of this portion, he did not stand in the shoes of his father, Sheo Lal. Entry of his name in revenue papers through his purchase was commencement of his possession. It was completed in 1853 by removal of his father's name from the share as its mortgagee. His possession amounted to redemption by usufruct. As through his purchase he stood in shoes of the mortgagor, in respect of a moiety of Lohari, his possession in respect of it was adverse to the original owner."

On the third point, the Subordinate Judge found "that the evidence on the record satisfies us that Sheo Lal had purchased 10 biswas Lohari on the 20th March 1854."

His judgment accordingly concluded: "Sheo Lal became full owner of a moiety of Lohari through his purchase of 1854. It was made for discharge of Mehdi Ali's debts. The sale is binding on his heirs. From what has been said above, it follows that Baldeo Sahai through his purchase and continued adverse possession had become full owner of the moiety he had purchased, and that he had inherited the other moiety from his father on his death in 1870. The plaintiffs have no right left in Lohari to claim its redemption." In the High Court the defendants took up definitely the position that it was immaterial whether Ashrafunnissa had a daughter or not: "that as she was in possession of half of Lohari in lieu of her dower, she could in the right convey a good title by the sale.

deed of May 27, 1853." The High Court, however, pointed out that possession had all along remained with the mortgagees, and that the widow never obtained it, and that if she had obtained possession, her right to hold it was neither heritable nor transferable, and was restricted in its enjoyment to herself personally.

With regard to Baldeo Sahai's title by adverse possession, the finding of the High Court was that he had never ceased to be mortgagee, and could not by any act of his own render his possession adverse to the mortgagor during the continuance of the mortgage. The first Court had found that from 1848, the date of an alleged disagreement with his father, Baldeo Sahai had lived separately and carried on his business separately, but that there had been no partition. The High Court found that "the separation between father and son was merely one of convenience, and that the family remained to all intents and purposes a joint family," and that Baldeo Sahai has not abandoned his rights in the ancestral property, and with them his rights as one of the mortgagees of Lohari.

With regard to the auction-sale of March 20, 1854, the High Court said of the evidence relating to it: "We agree with the lower Court that it proves that the remaining 10 biswas of Lohari were actually sold and purchased by Sheo Lal at the auction-sale of March 20, 1854, and that he has been in possession ever since." As a matter of law it decided: "We think we ought to presume that Musammat Umda was appointed by the Court to act in those suits as guardian of her minor children; and we also think that the power to appoint a guardian ad litem is inherent to every Court of Civil Jurisdiction. The sale proceedings were a continuation of the suits which had been brought and the decrees which had been obtained against Musammat Umda in her own right and as guardian of her infant daughters." For a report of the judgment of the High Court, see Muzaffar Ali Khan v. Parbati (1).

Against the decree of the High Court, both the plaintiffs and the defendants appealed to His Majesty in Council. The two appeals were consolidated by an order in Council.

Sir Robert Finlay, K.C. and Mr. B. Dube, for the Defendants:—Ashrafunnissa had a daughter, who survived Mehdi Ali, and on the death of the daughter the widow succeeded to her share. And although the share to which she succeeded was according to law less than one-half, she was treated by the other heirs of Mehdi Ali to have succeeded to one-half. Her title passed to Baldeo Sahai on May 27, 1853, when 10 biswas of Lohari were sold to him by Ashrafunnissa. Baldeo Sahai remained in possession of that share for more than 12 years before the institution of the suit, and even if Ashrafunnissa had no title, which she could convey, it is submitted that Baldeo Sahai's title is perfected by adverse possession as against the plaintiffs. It is, however, contended that Baldeo was a member of a joint Hindu family, which held possession as mortgagees and that Baldeo Sahai cannot set up a title by adverse possession. But, as the Subordinate Judge has found, Baldeo lived separate from his father, and carried on money-lending business with the money supplied by his maternal grandmother; at the time of the purchase he had separate property, from which the purchase was made, and Baldeo Sahai acquired this 10 biswas as his own. He did not come into possession as mortgagee and his possession is adverse. As regards the other 10 biswas, it is submitted that the lower Courts are right in dismissing the suit in that respect.

Mr. De Gruyther, K. C., and Mr. H. Cowell, for the Plaintiffs:—The question is what title passed by the sale-deed of May 27, 1853? The deed recited that Ashrafunnissa remained the heir of half of the estate of the deceased in lieu of the dower-debt. The law is, that if a widow has possession of the property, she is entitled to retain it as against the heirs of her deceased husband until her dower-debt is paid by them or discharged from the profits of the property. But if she is not in possession, she has no right to claim it. Here Ashrafunnissa never had possession and she had no title to possession even against Medhi's heirs. The defendants rely upon this deed, but Ashrafunnissa therein claims nothing as heir, and, as a matter of law, she has no title as heir, even if she claimed as such. It is, therefore, submitted that the defendants acquired no title under that deed of conveyance as Ashrafunnissa had no title, which she could convey; next, had she any other title? She would have a title, if she had a daughter who survived her deceased husband. But it is submitted that she had no such daughter. In the deed of May 27, 1853, she sets up no title either as her daughter's heir or as the heir of Mehdi Ali. Even if she had a daughter, she would be entitled to the daughter's share only, which is not one-half in this case. Reference was made to the Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872), section 32.

The next question is whether Baldeo Sahai was joint with his father on May 27, 1853. The presumption is that he was joint unless the defendants prove that he was separate. The burden of proof is on the defendants, who have failed to discharge it, as found by the High Court. Baldeo Sahai's possession, therefore, must be that of the mortgagees, and could not be adverse to the plaintiffs, who claim through the mortgagor. As regards the remaining 10 biswas sold on March 20, 1854, at an auction-sale in execution of a decree, the purchaser, under such circumstances, acquires the right, interest and title of the judgment debtor. These 10 biswas are alleged to be sold as Umda's 10 biswas. But she was not entitled to the whole of 10 biswas. She could not convey the shares of her daughters. Again, no sale certificate is produced and the evidence on record does not make it clear what was sold. There is evidence to show that Nizampur was advertised for sale at the same time and that Lohari was exempted from the sale. It is submitted that the decrees were satisfied from the proceeds of the sale of Nizampur. Reference was made to Simbhunath Pande v. Golap Singh (2).

Sir Robert Finlay, K. C., in reply: No claim to redeem was made until the institution of the present suit, although the daughters attained the age of majority long ago. The youngest became a major about 1870. The plaintiffs say that the mortgage is paid off, but the Subordinate Judge found as a fact that it was paid off long ago in 1863. Beyond all doubt Baldeo Sahai was the purchaser and took possession as such.

JUDGMENT.

SIR JOHN EDGE.—These are consolidated appeals from a decree of the High Court of Judicature for the North-Western Provinces at Allahabad, dated the 13th June 1907 which partly affirmed and partly reversed a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Saharanpur, dated the 14th July 1904, by which the suit had been dismissed.

The suit was brought on the 1st September 1903 to obtain proprietary possession of 13 biswas, 6 biswansis, 3 tanwansis, $6\frac{1}{2}$ kachwansis and a fraction of the 20 biswas of Mauza Lohari. The plaintiffs' case briefly was that one Mehdi Ali, whose representatives-in-title they alleged themselves to be, had in 1846 mortgaged the shares in Mauza Lohari, possesssion of which they claimed, to Sita Ram and his son Sheo Lal; that the mortgage-debt had been discharged by the usufruct; and that the defendants were the representatives of the mortgagees and still held possession under no other title; and the plaintiffs claimed a decree for proprietary possession and for mesne profits. The case of the defendants was that they held possession not under the mortgage of 1846, but under a private sale of the 27th of May 1853, of 10 biswas of Mauza Lohari, and under an auction-sale of the 20th March 1854 of the remaining 10 biswas of Mauza Lohari, which sales they alleged were made in order to discharge debts which had been contracted by Mehdi Ali. In effect, the defendants' case was that by reason of the sales of 1853 and 1854, the equity of redemption in the shares which were mortgaged in 1846 passed to those through whom they claimed title. It was also contended on behalf of the defendants that they were not precluded from setting up a title by adverse possession by the fact that possession of the shares in suit had been originally obtained under the mortgage of 1846.

The facts as found by the Board are briefly as follows:—

On the 22nd July 1846, Mehdi Ali, who owned the whole 20 biswas of Mauza Lohari, borrowed Rs. 4,000 from Sita Ram and his son Sheo Lal, and executed in their favour a mortgage for the term of two years of the shares which are the subject of this suit. The mortgage was usufructuary and the mortgagees were put in possession under it. Incidentally it may be mentioned that the Subordinate Judge found as a fact that the mortgage-debt had been discharged by the usufruct before 1863. If it were necessary in this appeal to decide that issue, their Lordships would probably not be prepared to dissent from that finding of the Subordinate Judge.

(1) 14 I. A. 77; 14 C. 572.

Mehdi Ali, who was a Shia Muhammadan, died on the 9th January 1852, and left surviving him two widows, Ashrafunnissa and Umda Begum, and certainly three daughters, who had been born to him by Umda Begum. Through one of those daughters, Askari, who subsequently married and left issue, the plaintiffs claim title. It has been contended on behalf of the defendants that Mehdi Ali also left surviving him a daughter born to him by Ashrafunnissa. On behalf of the plaintiffs, it has been contended that Mehdi Ali left surviving him no daughter by Ashrafunnissa, and that Ashrafunnissa was a childless widow. In the view which their Lordships take of this case, it is immaterial whether Mehdi Ali left, or did not leave, a daughter surviving him by Ashrafunnissa. It may, however, be mentioned that after Mehdi Ali's death, for some reason which the evidence does not explain, 10 biswas of Mouza Lohari were treated as the share of Ashrafunnissa, and the remaining 10 biswas were treated as the share of Umda Begam and her three daughters.

Mehdi Ali died heavily in debt, and after his death in 1852, suits to recovor debts which were due by him were brought by his creditors against Ashrafunnisa, Umda Begum, and her three daughters, as the representatives of Mehdi Ali, and money-decrees were obtained in those suits. One of those suits was brought by Sheo Lal on the 8th July 1852, on a bond payable on demand to recover with interest Rs. 2,000 which Sheo Lal had lent to Mehdi Ali on the 29th May 1849. In that suit Sheo Lal obtained a decree for Rs. 2,783-5-6, principal and interest, against Ashrafunnissa, Umda Begum, and the three daughters of Umda Begm, all of whom were sued as the heirs of Mehdi Ali. Under that decree the 20 biswas of Mouza Lohari were attached. On the 5th of May 1853, a sale proclamation was made fixing the 20th of June 1853 as the date for the auction-sale of the 20 biswas in execution of the money-decree. On the 19th of May 1853, Sheo Lal, through his Pleader, applied to the Court to remove the attachment in order to enable the defendants in that suit to pay the decree money by a private sale of the estate of Mehdi Ali deceased. On that application, the Court removed the attachment. On the 27th May 1853, Inayet Husain, acting under a power-of-attorney, which had been executed for that purpose by Ashrafunnissa and had been duly registered, executed on her behalf a sale-deed of 10 biswas of Mouza Lohari in favour of Baldeo Sahai, son of Sheo Lal, the consideration being Rs. 7,500. In that sale-deed it was stated that two-thirds of three suls of the 20 biswas of Mouza Lohari had been from the 22nd of January 1846 in the exclusive possession of Sita Ram and Sheo Lal under the mortgage for Rs. 4,000 of 1846 from Mehdi Ali to them and it was stated that Mehdi Ali had died, and had left a considerable amount of debt unpaid, that Ashrafunnissa had remained the heir of half the estate of Mehdi Ali in lieu of her dower-debt; and in order to satisfy the decrees held by, and the debts due, to Sheo Lal she made an absolute sale of the 10 biswas share to Baldeo Sahai. It was by the sale-deed agreed that Rs. 2,000 of the purchase-money should be left with Baldeo Sahai, and that he should have power to pay the Rs. 2,000 to the mortgagee and to redeem the subject of the sale. In the sale-deed the 10 biswas were described as Ashrafunnissa's share. After that sale the 10 biswas were entered in the revenue papers as Baldeo Sahai's share by private sale. Baldeo Sahai obtained possession of the 10 biswas share and held possession of the share until he died in 1895, when the defendants as his representatives obtained possession.

It has been contended on behalf of the plaintiffs, first, that Ashrafunnissa had no title to the 10 biswas share in Mouza Lohari, and, consequently, had no title which she was capable of passing by the sale-deed, and, secondly, that Baldeo Sahai was a member with his father Sheo Lal of a joint Hindu family, and that the family held possession as mortgagees and could not set up a claim of adverse possession against the representatives-in-title of Mehdi Ali, the mortgagee of 1846.

It has not been suggested that Ashrafunnissa had any interest in Mouza Lohari which she could sell other than such interest, if any, in the immoveable property of Mehdi Ali as she obtained under the Shia law as his widow. Her right to dower did not confer upon her a saleable estate in Mouza Lohari If she had not borne to Mehdi Ali a daughter who survived him, Ashrafunnissa as his widow took no title to any share in Mouza Lohari. If, on the other hand, as the defendants have contended, Ashrafunnissa had borne to Mehdi Ali a daughter who survived him for a few months, Ashrafunnissa's share as his widow, and the share of his daughter, which on that contention came to her on the daughter's death, did not together amount to a 10 biswas share in the Mouza. If Ashrafunnissa had any other title in 1853 to the 10 biswas share which she purported to sell to Baldeo Sahai, it has not been shown what it was or how she had obtained it. But it is not necessary to consider what title, if any, Ashrafunnissa had to the 10 biswas share, as by the sale-deed of the 27th May 1853 Ashrafunnissa sold to Baldeo Sahai such interests, if any, as she had in the 10 biswas of Mouza Lohari, and Baldeo Sahai got possession of the 10 biswas, and in course of time obtained a title by adverse possession to the whole 10 biswas or any portion of that share which Ashraf-un-nissa may not have been empowered to sell to him, and that title became indefeasable unless he or the defendants who claim under him were precluded from setting up a title of adverse possession.

The High Court found as a fact that Baldeo Sahai was in 1846, and continued to be, a member of the joint Hindu family, of which his father Sheo Lal had been a member, and on that finding of fact decided that Baldeo Sahai's possession and the possession of the defendants as his representatives had always been that of mortgagees, and consequently that Baldeo Sahai and those who claim under him were precluded from setting up any title of adverse possession to any portion of the share which was mortgaged in 1846 to Sita Ram and Sheo Lal. Their Lordships are unable to agree with the findings of fact of the High Court upon which that decision was based. At the date of the mortgage of 1846, Baldeo Sahai was undoubtedly a member of the joint Hindu family, of which Sita Ram and Sheo Lal were members, and that family was governed by the law of the Benares School of the Mitakshara. Their Lordships, however, find on evidence, which they consider is unimpeachable, that in 1847 or 1848, owing to disputes in the family, Baldeo Sahai ceased to be joint in food and joint in business with Sheo Lal, but no partition of the family property was then made, and thenceforward during their lives Baldeo Sahai and Sheo Lal had been separate in food and in business. Their Lordships also find that when Sheo Lal and Baldeo Sahai ceased to be joint in food and in business, Baldeo Sahai received a present of a considerable sum of money from his grandmother, with which he carried on the business of a money-lender on his own account, and that out of his separate self-acquired property he found the purchase-money of Rs. 7,500 of the sale-deed of the 27th of May 1853. The oral evidence showing a separation is in their Lordships' opinion confirmed by the terms of that deed. Ashrafunnissa purported to sell the 10 biswas to Baldeo Sahai as a person who was not a mortgagee under the mortgage of 1846. So far as the 10 biswas which Ashrafunnissa purported to sell to Baldeo Sahai on the 27th of May 1853, their Lordships find that a title at least of adverse possession has been established and that the defendants are not precluded from setting up that defence.

Their Lordships concur with the finding of the Subordinate Judge and the finding of the High Court that the remaining 10 biswas share in Mauza Lohari was sold to Sheo Lal on the 20th of March 1854 at an auction-sale held in execution of a decree for money which had been obtained by a creditor of Mehdi Ali, in a suit brought against Umda Begum and her three daughters as the heirs and representatives of Mehdi Ali, and Sheo Lal obtained possession and held it until he died, when his interest passed to his son Baldeo Sahai as his heir.

The plaintiffs failed to establish any title by way of redemption or otherwise to any interest in Mouza Lohari, and their suit was rightly dismissed by the Subordinate Judge.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal of the representatives-in-title of Baldeo Sahai be allowed with costs and the decree of the High Court be varied by dismissing the Appeal to that Court with costs, and that the appeal of Saiyid Muzaffar Ali Khan and other plaintiffs to His Majesty in Council be dismissed with costs.

Appeal allowed and cross-appeal dismissed.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), s. 25—Lower Court refusing costs to the successful party on insufficient grounds--High Court can interfere in revision.

Ordinarily, costs should follow the event, and when the lower Court does not act on this rule, it ought to give a sufficient reason for not doing so. Where the reason given by a Subordinate Judge for disallowing the costs of a successful plaintiff is unsatisfactory, the High Court can interfere under section 25 of Act IX of 1887.

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge's Court of Tanjore, in S. C. S. No. 1637 of 1909 dated 30th September 1909.

Mr. V. Purushotham Aiyar, for the Petitioner.

Mr. S. Srinivasa Aiyar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—I am of opinion in this case that the lower Court ought to have awarded costs to the plaintiff. The defendant received notice of the suit on the 2nd; the suit was filed on the 5th August 1909. It is not clear that the plaintiff filed his suit too early. But, apart from this fact, the defendant made payment of the amount more than four weeks after the suit was instituted; and then it was only on being arrested that he made the payment.

It is contended for the respondents that costs were at the discretion of the lower Court and that I ought not to intrefere in revision. But in this case the lower Court has given a specific reason for disallowing costs, and that reason is unsatisfactory. Ordinarly, costs should follow the event and, when the lower Court does not act on this rule, it ought to give a sufficient reason. The reason given in this case is quite insufficient.

I, therefore, modify the decree of the lower Court by awarding to the plaintiff his costs in the lower Court. The petitioner will also have his costs in this Court.

Decree modified.

Stamp Act (II of 1899), s. 12—Adhesive stamp, cancellation of--Adhesive stamp, lines drawn on, effect of—Execution of document admitted or proved—Consideration—Burden of proof.

Where an adhesive stamp on a pro-note or a receipt was cancelled by drawing lines across it in different directions, each line extending more or less beyond the edges of the stamp on to the paper on which the document was written: Held, that cancellation had been effected in a sufficiently effectual manner.

The question whether the requirements of law about the cancellation of stamps have or have not been sufficiently complied with is to be determined upon an examination of the document concerned in each particular case.

Piran Ditta v. Mangal Singh, 108 P. R. 1908, approved.

When a document is admitted in evidence, and its execution is either admitted by the defendant or proved against him and the receipt of consideration is acknowledged therein, the burden would lie upon the defendant to prove the want of consideration.

Mr. H. C. Dutt, for the Appellant.

Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, Babu Ishri Prasad and Pandit Tara Shankar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for recovery of principal and interest on a pro-note for Rs. 21,000, dated March 14th, 1909. The plaintiffs are Kedar Nath, a Pleader of this Court, and his son Gauri Nath, who keeps a shop for the sale of gold and silver lace, embroidered cloths and the like in the city of Lucknow. The defendant, Mohammad Amir Mirza Beg, is a gentleman of the Sitapur district, and nephew of Mirza Muhammad Ali

Beg, the late Talukdar of Aurangabad. In his written statement, he admitted execution of the pro-note which is the basis of the suit, but in effect pleaded partial failure of consideration and also that his execution was obtained by fraud or misrepresentation. He said that when the plaintiffs came to him on March 14th, 1909, they claimed a sum of Rs. 8,000 as due from him personally on the balance of a current account between the parties, and a further sum of Rs. 7,500 as due from his late uncle, Mirza Mohammad Ali Beg, who had died in the course of the previous month of October. They also promised to supply him with Rs. 4,000 in cash and undertook that Babu Kedar Nath, plaintiff No. 1, would render him services in his professional capacity in connection with a dispute which was anticipated as to the succession to the aforesaid uncle's estate, for which a sum of Rs. 2,000 was set down as his remuneration and included in the consideration for the pro-note in suit. The total of the items here set forth comes to Rs. 21,500, and the written statement nowhere explains what arrangement is alleged to have been arrived at regarding the odd Rs. 500. It may be noted also that the defendant nowhere pleads that the representations made by the plaintiffs in respect of the debt of Rs. 8,000 were in fact false, while as regards the debt of Rs. 7,500 he implies that it was a genuine and valid debt, inasmuch as he pleads that it has since been paid off. As regards execution of the pro-note in suit, the defendant pleads that he signed it believing it to be a mere memorandum of account and that it was not stamped at the time. There is also a general plea to the effect that the pro-note, the basis of the suit, is not admissible in evidence because it is not properly stamped; and this plea has been pressed upon us in the form of an argument that the adhesive stamp of the value of one anna affixed to the pro-note in suit, as also the similar stamp affixed to the receipt of the same date, have not been duly cancelled as required by section 12 of the Indian Stamp Act. It will be convenient to dispose of this last point at once. The stamp on each of the documents in question has been cancelled by having three lines drawn across it in different directions, each of the said lines extending more or less beyond the edges of the stamp on to the paper on which the documents are written. The contention before us is that the words "or in any other effectual manner" occurring at the end of clause (3) of section 12 of the Indian Stamp Act (II of 1899) should be regarded as so far governed by the words which immediately precede them as to necessitate some sort of writing being employed in order to effect a proper cancellation. There seems some authority for this view in Virabhadrapa bin Adirashapa v. Bhimaji Balaji Saraff (1) and in an older case of the same Court [S. A. Rilli v. Caramalli Fazal (2)]. It seems to us that the law requires no more than that an adhesive stamp should be cancelled in such a manner as effectually to prevent its being used again for a similar purpose, and that whether this requirement has or has not been sufficiently met is a question to be determined upon examination of the document concerned in each particular case. If the Legislature had intended that the signature or date or some portion of the same must necessarily appear upon the stamp in order to effect its cancellation, it would have said so in plain terms. There is authority for the proposition that an adhesive stamp may be sufficiently cancelled by the drawing of lines across it in Piran Ditta v. Mangal Singh (3); and the Postal Regulations introduced at the time when postage stamps were first made available for use as receipt stamps suggest that the Government of India felt no difficulty about regarding a stamp which has had lines drawn across it as having been used and cancelled in accordance with law. It is difficult to see how any one, without destroying an adhesive stamp altogether, can so "cancel" it as to make it absolutely impossible for an expert forger to remove it from the document to which it has been affixed and make use of it elsewhere; the most that can be done is to deface the stamp in such a manner as to make this operation difficult and likely to be detected, and this would seem to be the cancellation required by law. In the case now before us, we think the adhesive stamps on the documents in question have been cancelled in a sufficiently effectual manner. Moreover the said documents were undoubtedly admitted in evidence by the learned District Judge, although he has not seen fit to set forth in explicit terms his reasons for deciding in favour of the plaintiffs the issue framed by him on the question of stamp law, and the plaintiffs-respondents are entitled to the benefit of section 36 of the Indian Stamp Act.

(2) 14 B. 102.
(3) 108 P. R. 1908.

These documents being once admitted in evidence, and their execution by the defendant being admitted or proved, it becomes clear that the plaintiffs are suing upon an instrument in writing duly executed, and that the receipt of consideration for the same has been acknowledged in writing by the defendant; the burden of proof would, therefore, be upon the defendant to produce at least some prima facie evidence in support of the allegations put forward in his written statement. As a matter of fact, when the case came on for hearing, the proceedings began by the plaintiff Kedar Nath's going into the witness-box. He deposed that both the pro-note of 14th March 1909 and the receipt of the same date were written in full in his presence by the defendant himself, that they were stamped at the time and the stamps cancelled by lines drawn across them. It may be noted in passing that each of the documents in question contains a recital that it has been duly stamped. As regards consideration the plaintiff denied the allegations contained in the defendant's written statement. He admitted that Mohammad Ali Beg, the former Talukdar of Aurangabad, had an account with plaintiff No. 2's shop and that this account had since been duly settled by the gentleman who has succeeded to the actual possession of the estate. He gave details regarding the payment of the consideration, and produced for the inspection of the Court a ledger which contained separate accounts in the name of Mohammad Ali Beg, the late Talukdar, and of the defendant, Mohammad Amir Mirza Beg. According to this ledger-account and to the evidence of the plaintiff, transactions between the defendant and the plaintiffs commenced in the month of January 1904; between that date and the 4th of August, 1905, there were a series of purchases of gold lace, embroidered waist coats and the like, together with two small cash advances; interest at 1 per cent. per mensem was charged upon the debt and a pro-note was taken as security on the 25th of October, 1906. Later on, that is to say, on July 6th, 1908, a pro-note for Rs. 19,500 was taken as covering the entire debt up to the date; this pro-note according to the plaintiff, fell due on the 14th of March, 1909, and on that date it was found that a sum of Rs. 20,304-12 was due in respect of the same. The plaintiff remitted the odd Rs. 304-12 and made a further advance in cash of Rs. 1,000 and took the pro-note for Rs. 21,000, which is now in suit. It so happened, however, that a sum of Rs. 250 was due at the time from the defendant to the plaintiff Kedar Nath for his professional services in a certain case, and this sum the defendant at once paid out of the cash advance of Rs. 1,000 made to him on March 14th, 1909. It may be conceded that the ledger-account produced by the plaintiff in the course of his examination was not regularly proved or put in evidence under the provisions of section 34 of the Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872); but it was, at any rate, put forward by the plaintiff for the information of the Court as setting forth the precise details of the consideration upon which the pro-note in suit was based, and in particular as embodying the plaintiffs' answer to the allegation contained in the defendant's written statement that a portion of that consideration was due on account of debts incurred by the late Talukdar Mohummad Ali Beg.

The defendant had an opportunity of examining this ledger and of cross-examining the plaintiff in respect of the same, as well as on his evidence generally. We find that no attempt was made to do this, not a single question being put to the plaintiff by way of cross-examination. As the case stood at this point, there can be no doubt that the burden of proof in respect of the issues for trial was on the defendant: we do not know whether it was on the plaintiffs' own initiative, or in consequence of some expression of opinion let fall by the learned District Judge, that the plaintiffs closed their case at this point and the defendant was called upon to produce his evidence. He did not go into the witness-box himself, but contented himself with calling five witnesses. One of these said nothing relevant; another [D. W. No. 5] is the general attorney of the defendant, and another [D. W. No. 1] is a connection of his by marriage. This evidence has been unfavourably criticised and entirely rejected by the learned District Judge. We have been taken through it in detail and we are clearly of opinion that the District Judge was right. What the witnesses seek to prove is that at the time of the execution of the pro-note in suit its consideration was stated to be a sum of

Rs. 8,000 due on a standing account from the defendant himself, Rs.7,500 or Rs. 7,000 due on a similar account from the late Mirza Mohammad Ali Beg, a promise on the part of the plaintiffs to advance a further sum of Rs. 4,000 in cash, and an agreement that Babu Kedar Nath (plaintiff No. 1) would render professional services in connection with mutation cases, either pending or about to be instituted, for which he should receive remuneration amounting to Rs. 2,000. The statements of the witness are in places vague; they contradict one another on important points, for instance, as to whether the debt due from Mohammad Ali Beg was Rs. 7,500 or Rs. 7,000 and as to whether a receipt was or was not executed at the same time as the pro-note in suit; finally, the defendant's agent Bashir Ahmad (D. W. No. 5) put an entirely new colour upon the case by deposing that the reason why the pro-note in suit was left unstamped was that the transaction was incomplete and that it was understood that a stamp would not be affixed until a further cash advance of Rs. 4,000 was made by the plaintiffs as agreed. The witness made no attempt to explain why under these circumstances, the pro-note itself should contain a recital that it had been duly stamped, or why this document as well as the receipt should have been made over to the plaintiffs. The lower Court, having thus held the evidence for the defendant to be entirely worthless, proceeded to find the principal issues in the case in favour of the plaintiffs and to decree their suit in full. The pleas taken before this Court are that, under the circumstances of the case, there was a burden laid upon the plaintiffs to prove actual payment of consideration, and that they have failed to do this and have not produced the best available evidence. In the main the case for the appellant appears to rest upon the allegation that the plaintiff Babu Kedar Nath stood in a fiduciary relation towards the defendant, inasmuch as he was acting as his legal adviser, and that the Court was, therefore, bound to scrutinize the whole transaction carefully to put the plaintiff to strict proof and to satisfy itself that the execution of the document in suit had not been brought about by undue influence within the meaning of section 16 of the Indian Conrtact Act (IX of 1872). Now there was nothing in the defendant's written statement which can be regarded as setting up any plea of undue influence, nor did the defendant himself come into the witness-box and depose to the existence of any circumstances from which the Court could infer that Babu Kedar Nath was in a position to dominate the will of the defendant, or that he had, as a matter of fact, taken advantage of any existing circumstances so as to obtain an unfair advantage. Moreover, we have rejected the evidence for the defendant, and we find it impossible to infer merely from Babu Kedar Nath's admission that a sum of Rs. 250 was paid to him on March 14th 1909, for professional services rendered in a particular case, that there existed on that date any fiduciary relation between the parties, much less that the execution of the pro-note in suit was in any way brought about in consequence of the existence of such relationship. It has been proved beyond question that Gauri Nath, plaintiff No. 2, carries on a business in Lucknow city, that there had been dealings between him and the defendant, and that on the 14th of March, 1909, a sum amounting to at least Rs. 8,000 was due to him from the defendant upon current account. On that date the two plaintiffs visited the defendant at Aurangabad in order to lay their claims before him and to obtain a settlement of accounts. It is admitted that after discussing his position with the plaintiffs, the defendant proceeded to execute the pro-note in suit by which he binds himself to pay a sum of Rs. 21,000 as money due from him "on account of the purchase of goods, etc., on past and present transactions" (babat hisab kitab kharid ashiae waghaira sabiq o hal), and further to execute a receipt by which he formally admitted the consideration for the pro-note to have been paid in full. We are asked to hold that these facts, if uncontradicted by any other evidence upon which the Court can rely, are not sufficient to establish the plaintiffs' claim, and that a burden lay upon the plaintiffs of proving item by item the previous transactions in respect of goods supplied or cash advanced, which formed the consideration for the pro-note in suit, and we are asked to do this entirely on the strength of the fact that Babu Kedar Nath, plaintiff No. 1, is a Pleader and that on the 14th of March, 1909, he received from the defendant a sum of Rs. 250 as remuneration for professional services. Moreover, we are asked to do this in face of the fact that Babu Kedar Nath went into the witnees-box and laid before the Court a full statement regarding the details of the consideration as claimed by him, that he was not cross-examined upon this statement and that the defendant did not go into the witness-box to contradict him or to explain how he was induced to execute the documents in suit if he had not in fact received full consideration for the same. We are unable under the circumstances to accede to the appellant's contention or to hold that the plaintiffs were under an obligation formally to put in evidence, under section 34 of the Indian Evidence Act, the complete accounts of Gauri Nath's shop.

This appeal, therefore, fails and we dismiss it with costs.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1095 OF 1910.

December 29, 1911.

Present:—Mr. Justice Sundara Aiyar and Mr. Justice Spencer.

NARAYANA KUTTI GOUNDAN—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

PECHIAMMAL alias MAHALI AMMAL AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS NOS. 1 AND 2 AND 2ND PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENTS.

Subrogation—English and Indian Law—Reversioner—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 58, 91—Person interested in the property—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 69—Charge under a mortgage executed by daughters during the life-times of widows—Registration—Lien.

A person, who pays off a mortgage-debt on the properties of a deceased male owner, cannot claim to be subrogated to the rights either of the daughters or of the original mortgagee whose debt he discharges. The scope of the rule of subrogation in India is much narrower than in England or America.

Butler v. Rice, (1910) 2 Ch. 277; 79 L. J. Ch. 652; 101 L. T. 94, discussed.

Gurdeo Singh v. Chandrika Singh, 5 C. L. J. 611; 1 Ind. Cas. 193; 46 C. 193 and Jagatdhar Narain Prasad v. Brown, 33 C. 1133; 4 C. L. J. 121; 10 C. W. N. 1010, disapproved.

Khushal Sadashiv v. Punamchand, 22 B. 164, distinguished.

Mere payment of a mortgage-debt by a stranger would not entitle him to the mortgagee's rights by subrogation.

Ram Tuhul Sing v. Bisveswar Lal Sahu, 2 I. A. 131; 15 B. L. R. 208; 23 W. R. 305, referred to.

A reversioner cannot voluntarily claim to redeem a mortgage made by the last male holder or institute a suit for that purpose. But when a suit is instituted by the mortgagee for sale, a reversioner has sufficient interest in the property to entitle him to discharge the mortgage to prevent the loss of the property to which he would be entitled to succeed on the death of the widow. In the latter case, the reversioner is entitled under section 69 of the Contract Act to be reimbursed by the widow in respect of the money which the latter was bound by law to pay. The scope of section 69 of the Contract Act and of sections 85 and 91 of the Transfer of Property Act is not co-extensive. The daughters of a deceased mortgagor, therefore, have sufficient interest in the land to entitle them to discharge the mortgage-debt when the property is brought to sale in execution of the mortgage-decree against the mortgagor's widow. By so discharging, they obtain a charge over the land which they are entitled to assign or charge in favour of a third person who has enabled them to discharge the mortgage-debt.

Subrogation will arise only in those cases where the party claiming it advanced the money to pay a debt which, in the event of default by the debtor, he would be bound to pay or where he had some interest to protect, or where he advanced the money under an agreement, express or implied, made either with the debtor or creditor, that he would be subrogated to the rights and remedies of the creditor. In India, the scope of the rule is narrower still. A mere agreement, either with the creditor holding a mortgage or with the debtor owing it, cannot give a person, lending money to discharge the mortgage, a lien over the property. An agreement with the creditor or the debtor may entitle him to sue him for the execution of a mortgage-deed, or a deed of assignment of the mortgage, as the case may be: but mortgages for a sum of Rs. 100 and upwards can be created only by registered instruments and a mere agreement to mortgage is insufficient to create a lien.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of Coimbatore, in Appeal Suit No. 153 of 1909, presented against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif of Udamalpet, in Original Suit No. 187 of 1908.

Mr. K. Srinivasa Iyengar, for the Aappellant.

The Advocate General, for 1st Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

SUNDARA AIYAR, J.—The facts necessary for the disposal of this second appeal may be very briefly stated. One Venkatachella Mudali hypothecated certain land to one Muthu Goundan in 1893 and died in 1904, leaving behind him two widows, the 1st and 2nd defendants in this suit, and five daughters, defendants Nos. 3 to 7. Muthu Goundan obtained a decree on his mortgage-bond against the widows and certain purchasers from them. The property was directed to be sold in execution of the decree and while the sale was actually going on, Narayana Kutti Goundan, one of the plaintiffs in this suit, paid the amount of the decree into Court. Four of the daughters executed a mortgage-bond in favour of the two plaintiffs here for the amount which the bond alleges was received from them for discharging the amount required for paying up the decree amount due to Muthu Goundan. The property mortgaged under the instrument was the same as that which had been mortgaged to Muthu Goundan. The plaintiffs' suit is to recover the amount due under their mortgage-bond by sale of the mortgaged property and personally from the defendants Nos. 3 to 6, the executants of the bond. The District Munsif was of opinion that the daughters as reversioners, having only a spes successionis, had no such interest in the mortgaged property as would entitle them to redeem Muthu Goundan, and that the plaintiffs obtained no legally enforceable right under the mortgage to them as against the mortgaged property. He, therefore, refused to pass a decree for the sale of the land, but gave the plaintiffs a personal decree against the defendants Nos. 3 to 6. On appeal, the District Judge confirmed the Munsif's decree holding that, though the defendants Nos. 3 to 6 must be held to have some interest in the land and might be entitled to a charge on the land against the 1st and 2nd defendants, the plaintiffs who lent money to the daughters could not be held to have obtained any valid right under their mortgage. The 1st plaintiff, Narayana Kutti Goundan, has appealed to this Court from the decree of the District Judge.

It is clear from the facts of the case that the plaintiffs lent moneys to the four daughters on the security of such interest as they would obtain in the land by redeeming Muthu Goundan's mortgage. If the daughters obtained a valid charge on the land against the widows, the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, by redeeming the mortgage, there is no reason for holding that they could not create the mortgage in question in the plaintiffs' favour charging their right.

The plaintiffs, then, would stand in the position of sub-mortgagees with respect to the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and would be entitled to sue both their mortgagors, the daughters, and the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, to enforce their mortgage by the sale of the 1st and 2nd defendants' rights in the land. It was not suggested in the Courts below that the plaintiff lent the money merely on the personal security of the executants of the mortgage-deed. The question for decision in this second appeal, therefore, is whether the daughters, who executed it, obtained any charge over the land by discharging the amount due to Muthu Goundan. It is contended for the appellant, first, that they would stand in the shoes of Muthu Goundan by subrogation merely by discharging his debt, and, secondly, that they were persons entitled to redeem Muthu Goundan's mortgage under section 91 of the Transfer of Property Act and by redeeming him became entitled to his right as against the 1st and 2nd defendants. The first of these two arguments was put on a broader ground than the second, it being contended that, whether a reversioner under the Hindu Law is a person entitled to redeem under section 91 of the Transfer of Property Act or not, the right of subrogation was wider, and that, the daughters having discharged a burden on Venkatachellam's estate in the hands of the 1st and 2nd defendants, the land in their possession became liable for the amount paid by them. In support of this argument, the judgment of Warrington, J., in Butler v. Rice (1) was relied on. In that case, one Mrs. Rice was the owner of a house in Bristol and of property in Cardiff, which were together subject to a charge in favour of a bank to secure £450 and interest, and the title-deeds of both the properties were deposited with the bank. Mr. Rice asked the plaintiff Butler to lend him £450 for the purpose of paying off the mortgage. Mr. Butler agreed to lend the amount upon a legal mortgage for £300 of the Bristol house and a guarantee of £150 by Mr. and Mrs. Rice's Solicitor, who was to hold the title-deeds for him in the meantime. The money was paid and the deeds of the Bristol property which were recovered from the bank passed into the custody of the Solicitor. Mrs. Rice did not know of the transaction and subsequently refused to execute a mortgage in favour of the plaintiff. Butler instituted an action against Mr. and Mrs. Rice and the Solicitor for a declaration that he was entitled to a charge on the Bristol property for £450 and interest. Warrington, J., took the question for determination to be whether in the circumstances of the case, Mrs. Rice was entitled to hold the Bristol property discharged from the debt of £ 450, not one penny of which, said the learned Judge, she had paid off herself, or whether the person who paid was entitled to treat the bank's charge as still on foot in his favour. The learned Judge observes:—"In the first place, I find from the facts I have stated that it was not the intention of the plaintiff, nor indeed is it possible to suppose that any sensible man would have such an intention, to discharge the property from the debt. There are only two questions which have to be dealt with in order to arrive at the further conclusion that in equity the debt is still kept alive. The first is this: is it material that the owner of the property, the mortgagor, has not requested the person who paid the money to make the payment and, secondly, is the plaintiff's right affected by the further intention that, when the transaction was fully carried out, his position should be secured by a legal mortgage for £300 and a guarantee of £150? On the first question, it should be observed that this is not a case in which a person seeks to create a charge in his own favour. Here, there was an existing charge, and the only question is whether it had been paid off or kept alive. On such a question as that, it appears to me that the concurrence of the mortgagor is immaterial. Her position is not affected. The only alteration in her position is that instead of owing the money to A. she will in future owe it to B." Again he says:—"Then, does the fact that the plaintiff intended, if the transaction was carried out, to have a legal mortgage on the Manor Road property only and a guarantee for the remaining £150, prevent the application of the doctrine? Plainly not. His meaning was that he should have a further security; but that is no evidence that he intended in the meantime to give up such security as a transfer of the deeds to him would give him. The evidence which he gives, which I find to be true, as to what he said at the second interview supports this, namely, that the deeds were to be taken by the Solicitor and held by him for the plaintiff. Such security as that gave would be superseded by the better security to be given afterwards." It may be noted that it was not contended that her husband had any right to act on behalf of Mrs. Rice or that the Solicitor was entitled to enter into any agreement on her behalf. In these circumstances, it appears to me that the judgment of the learned Judge went very far and is not supported by any previous dicision of the English Courts. The learned Judge appears to hold that, though the plaintiff had no previous interest in the property to sustain his action in paying off a previous mortgage and claiming a charge for the amount paid by him, he was entitled to stand in the shoes of the bank whose charge he discharged. He observes that as there was an existing charge in favour of the bank, the concurrence of the mortgagor is immaterial. The learned Judge, no doubt, refers to the agreement between Butler and Mr. Rice and the Solicitor that the deeds were to be taken by the Solicitor and held by him for Butler, but it is difficult to see that this would have any bearing on the question if Mr. Rice and the Solicitor had no right to act for Mrs. Rice. The decision seems almost to go the length of holding that even a volunteer, who pays off an existing mortgage, would be entitled to a charge on the mortgaged property for the amount he paid. The decision is not based on any agreement between Butler and the debtor that the former should have the rights of the latter. The learned Judge says that the judgment in Patten v. Bond (2) and the decision in particular of Romer, J., in Chetwynd v. Allen (3), are consistent with the view expressed by him, "for in the case before him, as in this, the material payment was made without the knowledge and without any communication with the person who was the real owner of the mortgaged property, and, notwithstanding that, Romer, J., held that the charge was still on foot." In Patten v. Bond (2), the money was lent at the request of trustees for the purpose of preserving the trust estate. In such cases, a right of subrogation is, undoutedly, recognised in the English Law. In Chetwynd v. Allen (3), the person who claimed the right of subrogation paid the money at the request of the trustee for the owner of the property, who was the trustee's wife, in order to discharge a mortgage executed on her property with her consent. He was, therefore, entitled to bind her interest by an agreement which he entered into for discharging that mortgage. The case is, therefore, not similar to Butler v. Rice (1). On the other hand, the dicision in In re Wrexham, Mold and Connah's Quay Railway Company (4), appears to be against the view maintained by Warrington, J. There a Railway Company, which had issued debenture stocks and whose power of borrowing was exhausted, borrowed money from their bankers to pay a half year's interest on the stocks, the bankers paying the interest warrants of the stock-holders when presented to them. Soon after this, a judgment-creditor of the Company presented a petition under the Railway Companies Act, 1867, and a Receiver was appointed under the petition. The Receiver had in his hands sufficient money to pay the next half year's interest due to some of the stock-holders. The bank claimed priority in respect of their advances over all interest payable in respect of the debenture stock; this claim was negatived by Romer, J., and by the Court of Appeals. Rigby, L. J., observes:—"The claim is rested on a supposed subrogation and right to stand in the place of, and with the right to the securities and priorities of, the creditors who have been paid off, and this is the only claim with which I propose to deal. I do not think that any right of subrogation to the securities or priorities of creditors paid off out of moneys borrowed in excess of borrowing powers has ever been allowed, or can be justified in principle." Lindley, M. R., and Vaughan Williams, L. J., took the same view. It may be observed that the bank's rights against the Company as a simple creditor apart from any question of priority was not denied as the money, though borrowed by the Company in excess of their powers, was used for discharging claims lawfully binding on the bank.

The principle governing the right of subrogation in cases where it is claimed by a person who, without any previous interest in the property, discharges a mortgage on it, is expressed in Jones on Mortgages thus: "Under the equitable principle of subrogation, one who pays a mortgage-debt under an agreement for an assignment or for a new mortgage for his own protection or for the benefit of another, acquires a right to the security held by the other." The learned author quotes a passage from a recent Georgia case which may be cited here: "It has been said that subrogation was a 'benevolent' doctrine and equity would apply it in any case in which justice required it; and under sanction of this elastic expression, cases can be found where it was applied without the semblance of an agreement. We think the safer and better rule to be, and we, therefore, hold that a subrogation will arise only in those cases where the party claiming it advanced the money to pay a debt which, in the event of default by the debtor, he would be bound to pay or where he had some interest to protect, or where he advanced the money under an agreement, express or implied, made either with the debtor or creditor, that he would be subrogated to the rights and remedies of the creditor." The rule is stated in similar terms by Sheldon in his book on Subrogation. It has been said that "whenever a payment is made by a stranger to a creditor in the expectation of being substituted to the place of the creditor, he is entitled to such substitution. But the doctrine generally adopted, and that of these very cases when limited to the point actually decided, is that a conventional subrogation can result only from a direct agreement, express or implied, made with either the creditor or debtor, and it is not sufficient that a person paying the debt of another should have merely an understanding on his part that he is to be subrogated to the rights of the creditor, though if the agreement have been made, a formal assignment will not be necessary." The English cases do not carry the principle further.

In India, the scope of the rule appears to me to be narrower still. A mere agreement either with the creditor holding a mortgage or with the debtor owing it, cannot give a person lending money to discharge the mortgage a lien over the property—see section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act. An agreement with the creditor or the debtor may entitle him to sue him for the execution of a mortgage-deed, or a deed of assignment of the mortgage as the case may be, but mortgages for a sum of Rs. 100 and upwards can be created only by registered instruments and a mere agreement to mortgage is insufficient to create a lien. In England and in America, it may be that the principles of equity would enable the Courts to treat an agreement for a mortgage as giving the lender an equitable interest in the property agreed to be mortgaged. But equitable interests are not recognised in this country as distinct from legal interests, though many principles of law are borrowed from the principles of English Equity Jurisprudence. In this country, equitable mortgages by deposit of title-deeds are recognised only in a special class of cases referred to in section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act when the mortgages are made in the towns of Calcutta, Madras, Bombay, Karachi and Rangoon. In Gurdeo Singh v. Chandrikah Singh and Chandrikah Singh v. Rashbehary Singh (5), the rule of subrogation is stated and it seems to be assumed that a payment made under agreement with the debtor or creditor that he should receive and hold an assignment of the debt as security, would be sufficient to entitle the lender to the benefit of subrogation—see pages 631 and 632. In Jagatdhar Narain Prasad v. A. M. Brown (6), it was held that an agreement to give a mortgage would be enough to create a charge by way of subrogation, though the decision of the case itself does not seem to have required the enunciation of the principle. It appears to me that the important distinction between the English and Indian Law pointed out above was overlooked in these cases. No doubt a person having an agreement may sue for the specific performance of the agreement to execute or assign a mortgage, and in suits for the execution of a mortgage-deed, the Courts have sometimes passed not only a decree for specific performance but for sale also following on the execution of the conveyance. But this does not justify the view that the agreement itself can be treated as creating a charge. In the American Cyclopedia of Law and Procedure, Vol. XXVII, the true principle applicable in England and America is stated by H. C. Black, the auther of the Article on Mortgages. He says:—"An agreement by which a stranger undertakes to advance the redemption money and pay it for the mortgagor's benefit, to hold the premises as security for his reimbursement, and to release or re-convey to the mortgagor on being re-paid, is valid and enforcible; it is not within the Statute of Frauds and may be made the basis for a decree for specific performance." The principle is also recognised in Khushal Sadasiv v. Punamchand (7), where the transaction took place in the town of Bombay and the lender who paid off the prior mortgage could, therefore, claim an equitable mortgage. These are the two kinds of cases which must be distinguished from the class under notice. No conveyance, of course, would be required in cases where a person who, having a previous interest in the property, pays off a prior mortgage or where the owner of the equity of redemption paying off a mortgage claims priority over a subsequent incumbrancer. So also in cases where one claiming under a void or voidable conveyance or bona fide believing himself to have a title to the property discharges an encumbrance on it and claims a charge as against the owner. The principle contended for by the appellant that the mere payment of a mortgage-debt by a stranger would entitle him to the mortgagee's rights by subrogation has always been negatived in India. See Ram Tuhul Singh v. Biseswar Lall Sahu (8). It is impossible to argue that it is open to any meddler to claim a lien by discharging a mortgage with which he has no concern. I must, therefore, overrule the contention that the plaintiff can claim to be subrogated to the rights either of the daughters or of Muthu Goundan by the mere fact that he discharged the mortgage of the latter.

The next question for consideration is whether the daughters were entitled to redeem Muthu Goundan under section 91 of the Transfer of Property Act and could by doing so claim a charge which they could transfer to the plaintiffs. Section 91 provides that any person having any interest in or a charge upon the mortgaged property and any person having any interest in or charge upon the right to redeem the property may institute a suit for redemption. Section 85 lays down that all persons having an interest in the property comprised in the mortgage must be joined as parties to any suit under this Chapter relating to such mortgage. The word "interest" must be taken to be used in the same sense in both the sections. Can it be held that a reversioner under the Hindu Law is a person having an interest within the meaning of these sections? I cannot hold that in a suit by the mortgagee for sale or foreclosure, such a reversioner is a necessary party. Indeed, it is doubtful whether he can be held to be a proper party at all. It follows that a reversioner cannot be held to be entitled to institute a suit under section 91. In Ram Chandar v. Kallu (9), Stanley C. J., and Banerji, J., held that the reversionary heirs of the deceased husband of a Hindu widow in possession of his property as such could not maintain a suit for redemption. Although the holder of a mere easement and a remainder-man have been held entitled to redeem in England [see Seton on Judgments and Orders, 6th Edition, page 1935; Pearce v. Morris (10)]. I am on the whole inclined to hold that a reversioner can not voluntarily claim to redeem a mortgage made by the last male holder or institute a suit for that purpose. But does it necessarily follow that when a suit is instituted by a mortgagee for sale, the reversioner has not got a sufficient interest in the property to entitle him to discharge the mortgage to prevent the loss of the property to which he would be entitled to succeed on the death of the widow? I do not think I am bound to hold that his rights stand on the same footing when he claims of his own accord to redeem and when he tries to save the property for the estate upon the mortgagee attempting to sell it. The right of a person interested in the payment of money which another is bound by law to pay and who, therefore, pays it to be re-imbursed by the other is recognised in section 69 of the Indian Contract Act. There is no reason for holding that only those who have an interest in a mortgaged property within the meaning of sections 85 and 91 of the Transfer of Property Act can be held to be interested in the payment of the money due on a mortgage created by the last male owner. It has been held by the Courts in India that a reversioner is entitled to resist a claim for Probate of a Will alleged to have been made by the last male owner by reason of his interest in the estate. See Brindaban Chandra Shaha v. Sureswar Shaha Paramanick (11), Puttanna alias Keshava Bhatta v. Ramakrishna Sastri (12). As observed by Mookerjee, J., in the former case, "although a reversioner under the Hindu Law has no present interest in the property left by deceased, yet it is manifest that he is substantially interested in the protection or devolution of the estate. It is well settled that a reversioner can sue to restrain waste. The reversioner can, if he makes out a proper case, obtain an order for the appointment of a Receiver. He can maintain a suit for declaration that an adoption by the female heir in possession is invalid. He can also sue for declaration that an alienation by the female heir in possession will not be operative beyond her life time. This has now been placed beyond the possibility of dispute by the provisions of section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, illustrations (e) and (f) to which section show that such declaratory suits may be maintained. Besides, it is manifest that such a declaratory suit is maintainable by a remote reversioner, who would take an absolute interest in the absence of the immediate reversionary heir who has only qualified rights in the estate; and, also, when the nearest reversioner has precluded himself from maintaining a declaratory action by his conduct or by omission to sue within the statutory period, a remote reversioner is entitled to maintain the suit." In Civil Revision Petitions Nos. 343 and 344 of 1908, it has been held by this Court that a reversioner paying arrears of Government revenue in order to save the estate from sale is entitled to recover the same from the widow in possession. I am of opinion that the daughters had sufficient interest in the land to entitle them to discharge Muthu Goundan's debt when the property was brought to sale and that by doing so they obtained a charge over the land which they were entitled to assign or charge in favour of the plaintiff. I must, therefore, hold that the plaintiff obtained a valid charge for the amount paid by him to discharge Muthu Goundan's mortgage. The widows cannot contend that they have been put to any disadvantage by the redemption of Muthu Goundan's mortgage by the daughters. The amount due to the plaintiff was disputed by the 1st defendant in her written statement. The case does not appear to have been tried on the merits. We, therefore, reverse the decrees of the Courts below and remand the suit to the Court of first instance for disposal on the merits. The costs up to date will abide the result.

SPENCER, J.—I agree with my learned brother in thinking that the defendants Nos. 3 to 7 as reversioners were persons interested within the meaning of section 69 of the Indian Contract Act in the payment of money which the widows, the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, were bound to pay to Muthu Goundan. By discharging the debt for which the property of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 was on the point of being sold, I think that they were equitably entitled to have a charge on the property. This being so, I am further of opinion that the assignment or sub-mortgage by the defendants Nos. 3 to 7 to the plaintiff of their lien by the deed of July 3rd, 1909, was in law a valid transaction. The result will be as above stated.

Case remanded.

CIVIL APPLICATION No. 87 OF 1911.

November 9, 1911.

Saiyad TASADDUQ HUSAIN—PLAINTIFF—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 2(9), O. VIII, r. 10—Judgment, Court's power to pronounce, when written statement not filed—Revision—Material irregularity.

A defendant did not file his written statement on the date on which he was ordered to file it, nor on the date fixed for hearing. The Munsif thereupon decreed the claim of plaintiff under Order VIII, rule 10, Civil Procedure Code, without going into the merits of the case or without stating the grounds of his order decreeing the claim:—

Held, that the Munsif's order was not a judgment, but merely an order decreeing the plaintiff's claim, it was held that the Munsif acted with material irregularity and his decision was set aside.

Appeal against the order of the District Judge, Lucknow, dated 11th April 1911, upholding that of the Additional Munsif, Lucknow, dated 21st February 1911.

Babu Ishwari Prasad, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of an order of the District Judge of Lucknow, upholding a decision of the Additional Munsif of Lucknow.

The facts of the case are that a suit was instituted against the applicant and a summons was served on him on the 5th February 1911. On the 10th February 1911, the date fixed for filing of the written statement, none was filed. The case came up for hearing on the 21st February 1911. The learned Munsif said that the defendant was ordered to file his written statement on the 10th February, but he did not file it on that date nor did he bring it on the later date. He decreed the claim with costs under Order VIII, rule 10, of the Code of Civil Procedure.

It is urged on behalf of the applicant that the Munsif acted with material irregularity because under Order VIII, rule 10, he was only empowered to pronounce judgment against the defendant and in this case there is no judgment, but merely an order decreeing the plaintiff's claim. A judgment is defined in section 2 (9) of the Code as the statement given by the Judge of the grounds of a decree or order. Therefore, the law contemplates that the Court should go into the case and pronounce a decision upon the facts so far as they are before it. If the learned Munsif had examined the plaintiff and considered the documents produced before him and written a decision stating that he believed the plaintiff's evidence that would have been a judgment within the meaning of Order VIII, rule 10, but I cannot hold that the order of the Munsif in this case was a judgment. I am, therefore, of opinion, that there was a material irregularity. The learned Pleader for the respondent refers to the case of Kristamma Naidu v. Chapa Naidu (1), where it was said that material irregularity within the meaning of section 622 of the old Code of Civil Procedure, means "a perverse decision on a question of law or procedure, a decision being perverse where it is a conscious departure from some rule of law or procedure," and he contends that there is no departure from any rule of law or procedure in this case. I must assume that the learned Munsif knew what the meaning of a judgment is. A judgment certainly means some kind of decision upon the merits, but there is none in this case.

I allow the application and, setting aside the order of the Court below, remand the case, through the lower Appellate Court, to the Court of first instance for decision on the merits. Costs will abide the result.

Mr. P. Nagabhushanam, for the Appellant.

Mr. L. A. Govindaraghava Iyer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The prayer in the plaint, according to its terms, is for a declaration that the 3rd defendant is not the Illatom son of the 1st defendants' father-in-law, as well as for a declaration that the 1st defendant's deed of relinquishment in favour of the 3rd defendant cannot affect the plaintiff's rights as reversioner. The 3rd defendant raised various legal objections to the maintainability of the suit for a declaration that the 3rd defendant was not the Illatom son of the 1st defendant's father-in-law. To overcome these objections, the plaintiff contended that his suit was really only one to declare the deed of relinquishment invalid as against his reversionary rights. This contention was upheld and the suit was allowed to go on as one relating merely to the validity of the relinquishment. We cannot, therefore, now regard it as one relating to the 3rd defendant's rights as an Illatom son. This Court decided that a suit by a reversioner for a declaration that a deed of alienation or other instrument executed by a widow will not affect his reversionary rights, abates on the death of the plaintiff and that the cause of action does not survive to the next reversioner; Sakyahani Ingle Rao Sahib v. Bhavani Boyi Sahib (1). In Muthusawmy Mudaliar v. Masilamani (2), the cause of action was held to survive but that was on the ground that the plaintiff in the suit asked for a declaration on behalf of himself and other reversioners. We are bound by Sakyahani Ingle Rao Sahib v. Bahavani Bozi Sahib (1), which was not overruled by Chiruvolu Punnamma v. Chiruvolu Perraju (3). The Privy Council has held, in Mahamed Umar Khan v. Mahomel Niaz-ul-din Khan (4), that Article 118 of the Limitation Act is not applicable to suits for possession [see Muhammad Umar Khan v. Muhammad Niaz-ud-Din Khan (5) which refers to and explains Thakur Tirbhuvan Bahadur Singh v. Raja Rameswar Baksh Singh (6)]. The right of the present petitioners, who wish to prosecute the 2nd appeal as legal representatives of the original plaintiff, to recover the property on the death of the 1st defendant will not, therefore, be affected by their not being admitted as plaintiff's representatives, and we must reject their application to be permitted to continue the appeal. The order of the admission Court, passed on 26th October 1911 on the application is set aside.

The second appeal abates. We make no order as to the costs of the Civil Miscellaneous Petition. The respondents will be entitled to their costs of the second appeal out of the estate of the deceased plaintiff.

Decree set aside.

GAURI SHANKAR SAHAI AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Partition suit—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. II, r. 2—Subsequent suit for a share in the property not included in the general suit for partition, maintainability of—Property held by the members of a family jointly with a stranger cannot be included in general suit for partition.

Although as a general rule, a partition suit should embrace all the joint family property, there is an exception in favour of property held jointly with strangers to the family who have no interest in the family partition, and, therefore, cannot be made parties to the general suit for partition.

Where in a previous suit for partition of the joint ancestral property between the plaintiffs and defendants, Nos. 1 to 4, certain shares held in the Paper Mills Company were not included in the suit and it was found that these shares had been inherited from a collateral relation of the parties by the plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 1 to 4 jointly with defendants Nos. 5 to 8, who were collateral relatives of the plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 1 to 4:

Held, that Order II, rule 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure was no bar to a subsequent suit by the plaintiffs for their share in this property.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Lucknow, dated 23rd August 1910, reversing that of the Additional Munsif, Lucknow, dated 17th June, 1910.

Mr. A. P. Sen and Babu Bisheshar Nath, for the Appellants.

Babu Basudev Lal, for Respondents Nos. 1 and 2.

JUDGMENT.—The subject-matter of the suit out of which this appeal has arisen consists of five shares held in the Upper India Paper Mills Company, Limited, Lucknow. The suit was brought by four plaintiffs Gauri Shankar, Hari Shankar, Shankar Narayan and one Musammat Jasodha, the widow of Shankar Sahai, who was a brother of the three plaintiffs already mentioned. The first three plaintiffs and the husband of the plaintiff No. 4 were brothers of one Lachmi Narayan who died in the year 1905. The first four defendants in the suit are the sons of this Lachmi Narayan and they are the appellants in this Court. Four other defendants were also joined pro forma as having an interest in the shares in question. These defendants (Nos. 5 to 8) are collateral relations of the plaintiffs and of the other defendants. The shares about which this dispute has arisen seem to have been acquired originally by one Bakht Bahadur, the father's uncle's son of the plaintiffs, and the grandfather's uncle's son of the defendants Nos. 1 to 4. He died many years ago and was succeeded by his widow Musammat Mamola into whose name the shares were transferred. Mamola died in 1895 and the estate of her deceased husband then descended upon his collateral relations. Up till the year 1898, no steps appear to have been taken to obtain a transfer of these shares in the Company's register, but in September of that year Lachmi Narayan made an application in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Lucknow, for the grant of a succession certificate to enable him to collect the dividends on the shares and to have them transferred to his name. In his application for the certificate, Lachmi Narayan set out the various persons of his own family as also the various collateral relatives whom he described as being entitled to an interest in the shares in question. The result of the application was that a certificate was granted to Lachmi Narayan who got the shares transferred in his own name. The legal position of Lachmi Narayan in respect of this application and of the order which was made upon it has been defined in the course of previous litigation between these parties and it may be taken now that the grant of the certificate to Lachmi Narayan was not a grant to him in his own right, but merely as representing his own interest and the interest of all others who were entitled to a share in the property. To use the language of the learned Judge of this Court, who decided the previous case in which the question of Lachmi Narayan's status arose, he was nothing more than a trustee and administrator in respect of the five shares now in dispute. Lachmi Narayan, as has already been said, died in the year 1905 and it appears that after his decease the shares were transferred to the names of the four sons, the defendants Nos. 1 to 4, who appear to have set up a claim to hold the shares in their own right. It is necessary now to refer to some previous litigation between the parties. The five shares in question formed the subject-matter of a suit which was filed in the year 1907 in the Court of the Munsif of Lucknow, in which certain collateral relations who are represented in the present suit by defendants Nos. 5 to 8 were plaintiffs. The present plaintiffs and the defendants Nos. 1 to 4 were the defendants in that suit. The claim was for a declaration of interest in the shares and for recovery of Rs. 25 on account of dividends which were alleged to have been improperly withheld by the sons of Lachmi Narayan. This suit was dismissed in the Munsif's Court on the 12th December 1907. An appeal was preferred to the Court of the District Judge which was decided on the 30th November 1908. The District Judge reversed the decree of the Munsif and declared the plaintiffs to be entitled to one quarter interest in the five shares in question. This decision of the District Judge was affirmed by a judgment of this Court which was passed in June 1909. We have next to refer to a second suit which was lodged in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Lucknow on the 24th August 1908, and which was finally disposed of in appeal by this Court in April 1910. This was a suit filed for partition by the four plaintiffs who figure as plaintiffs in the case we are now dealing with. The defendants in that case were the present defendants Nos. 1 to 4. What was claimed in this suit was a division of the joint ancestral property which had descended from one Parsidh Rai, the father of the plaintiffs and the grandfather of the defendants Nos. 1 to 4. The result of this suit was that the joint family property was divided between the parties.

We come now to the present suit which was instituted on the 30th November 1909. According to the plaint, the case of the plaintiffs is that they are entitled to a moiety of these five shares. There was also a claim for Rs. 92-8 on account of dividends which have been wrongfully retained by defendants Nos. 1 to 4. In the plaint it was stated that Lachmi Narayan, after he had obtained the succession certificate in respect of these shares, did distribute a share of the dividends to the plaintiffs during his life-time but that after his death his sons, defendants Nos. 1 to 4, had refused to pay anything on this account. The suit was resisted by the defendants Nos. 1 to 4 whose case on the merits was to the effect that the shares in dispute had been the exclusive property of Lachmi Narayan in which the plaintiffs could claim no interest whatsoever. It was also stated that Lachmi Narayan and after him the defendants Nos. 1 to 4 had always treated these shares as their own property and had been in adverse possession of them. Further, a technical plea was raised in bar of the suit. It was contended that the suit was barred under the provisions of Order II, rule 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, (corresponding to section 43 of the old Code), according to which every suit must include the whole of the claim which the plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of the cause of action; and which lays down that where a plaintiff omits to sue in respect of any portion of his claim, he shall not afterwards sue in respect of the portion so omitted. Thus, it is said that if the plaintiffs considered they were entitled to an interest in these shares, it was their duty to include the property in the suit which they brought for partition in the year 1908 when they asked for a division of the family joint property. A reply to this plea which was made by the plaintiffs was that the present claim could not have been put forward in the former suit because certain persons, that is to say, defendants Nos. 5 to 8, who were not and could not have been parties to the partition suit of 1908 were necessary parties in the present case. So far as the plea raised by the defendants to the effect that the property was the exclusive property of Lachmi Narayan was concerned, it was rejected by the Court of first instance and by the Court below. The Munsif, however, was of opinion that Order II, rule 2 was a bar to the suit. In appeal, his decision was reversed by the learned District Judge who held that the causes of action in the two suits were different and that really in the suit we are now considering the defendants Nos. 1 to 4 were being sued as administrators de son tort and that this being so under Order II, rule 5, the present claim could not have been included in the previous suit. This decision of the District Judge is attacked here on four grounds which really give rise to one plea only, namely, that the suit was barred under Order II, rule 2. The case as it has been argued before us is not precisely the case which is disclosed in the memorandum of appeal. Mr. Sen who argued the case for the appellants says that the suit was barred because the shares in question constituted joint property which was liable to partition and a claim in respect of it, therefore, should have been made in the previous suit. It is argued that although the shares descended to the joint family of which Lachmi Narayan was the head from a collateral relative and was thus, what is called in the parlance of the Hindu Law, an obstructed heritage, it nevertheless came to the joint family as joint family property liable to partition at the instance of any member of the family. Mr. Sen further argued that even if the property did not descend in joint tenancy but in tenancy-in-common, it had nevertheless been treated as joint property by the members of the family and ought, therefore, to have been included in the property partition of which was sought in 1908. It will be seen that this plea is altogether at variance with the position taken up by the defendants in the written statement in which they asserted that the shares were exclusively the property of Lachmi Narayan. It was nowhere admitted in the plaint that the property was joint family property in the strict sense of the term. In fact, the case of the plaintiffs seems to have been that this property was property in which each member of the family had a separate share, a fact which was recognized by Lachmi Narayan in the course of his administration of the estate by his handing over to them their share of the dividends. It was not proved that any such dividends had ever, as a matter of fact, been paid by Lachmi Narayan to any of the plaintiffs. However, the point we have to decide is a point which the defendants appellants did raise in the Courts below, namely, that the suit was barred by Order II, rule 2 and in order to ascertain whether any such bar exists, the real question which we have to decide is whether or not the property now in suit was properly liable to partition in the suit previously filed by the plaintiffs against the first four defendants. It appears, from such documentary evidence as we have on the record relating to this previous partition suit, that what the plaintiffs were claiming in that suit was nothing more nor less than their share of the joint ancestral property which had descended from their father Parsidh Rai. It is quite clear that the shares which we have now to deal with never at any time formed part of Parsidh Rai's estate. Now, no doubt, it is a general rule of law that every partition suit must embrace all the joint family property. At the same time, it is well recognized that there are certian exceptions to this general rule to which a reference will be found in paragraph 493, Mayne's Hindu Law (7th Edition). According to Mr. Mayne, every suit for partition should embrace all the joint family property unless (1) different portions of it lie in different jurisdictions in which case suits may be brought in the different Courts to which the property is subject; or (2) some portion of it is at the time incapable of partition as for instance from being in the possession of a mortgagee; or (3) is from its nature impartible as a zemindari governed by the law of primogeniture; or again (4) is held jointly with strangers to the family who have no interest in the family partition and, therefore, cannot be made parties to the general suit for partition. This last exception is declared in the case of Purushottam v. Atmaram Janardan (1) and on behalf of the respondents in this case it is claimed that this ruling supplies the law which ought to be applied to the present case. The facts of that case may be briefly stated as follows:—

The plaintiffs and the first six defendants were members of the Parashare family and as such they were joint owners of certain vritti called Parashare vritti. They also owned jointly with another family the Kandve family a certain other vritti called the Kandve Parashare vritti. In 1881, the plaintiffs as members of the Parashare family sued the first six defendants who were also of the same family for partition of the Parashare vritti and other joint family property. They obtained a decree and recovered the share. A second suit was brought by these same plaintiffs against the other members of their family and also against the members of the Khandve family for partition of the Khandve Parashare vritti. The first six defendanes raised the plea which has been raised in the present suit, namely, that the claim was barred under section 43 of the (old) Code of Civil Procedure. The first Court disallowed this contention and gave the plaintiffs a decree. On appeal the decree was reversed by the District Judge, who held that section 43 did apply to the case. The decision of the District Judge was in turn reversed by their Lordships of the Bombay High Court who held that section 43 of the (old) Code of Civil Procedure was no bar to the suit. In his judgment Parsons J. says that section 43 applies only to claims arising out of the same cause of action and he pointed out that it could not be said that the claim of the plaintiffs to obtain their share of property owned jointly by themselves and B. was founded on the same cause of action as their claim to obtain their share of property owned jointly by them, and B. and C. He goes on to say at page 599 of the report that "Joint family property is the property owned by one family (familia) jointly amongst its own members . . . . Property which is held jointly by several families is not the joint family property of each of those families so that it would be compulsory upon each of them in suing its own member for a partition of their family property to include it in that suit or else not be allowed afterwards to sue for its share therein." Ranade, J., concurred in this judgment. He pointed out that the old suit was confined to the division of the property jointly owned by the Parashare family whereas the suit then before him related to the division of a vritti which was jointly owned by both the families of the Parashares and Khandves, the latter being entire strangers to the Parashare in respect of family relationship.

So it seems to us in the present case that, for the reasons laid down in the judgment just cited, it cannot be held that the present suit was barred by Order II, rule 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure. There is no question whatever that when succession opened to the estate consisting of these five shares after the death of Musammat Mamola in 1895, the persons who were entitled to these shares were not all members of the joint family of which Lachmi Narayan was at that time the head. It was admitted and it is beyond dispute that various collateral relations who were separate altogether from Lachmi Narayan and the members of his family were also entitled as heirs of Mamola's deceased husband Bakht Bahadur. It seems correct, therefore, to say that these shares were jointly owned by two separate families just as the vritti in the Bombay case was jointly owned by the two families of Parashares and Khandves. As we have stated before, what the plaintiffs sought in the previous partition suit was a division of the joint family property which has descended to the family from Parsidh Rai. That was a suit which the plaintiffs as sons of Parsidh Rai were entitled to bring and we think it clear that it was not possible for them to include in the property then sought to be divided property which had formed no part of Pardsidh Rai's estate and which only descended many years after Parsidh Rai had died. This latter property was in no sense the exclusive property of the joint family presided over by Lachmi Narayan and we do not see how any division of it could properly have been made without joining in it the collateral relatives who as a result of the previous litigation must be taken to have held a share in it all along. These collateral relatives had no interest whatever in the joint ancestral property which had come down from Parsidh Rai and they could not, therefore, properly have been parties to the previous partition suit. For these reasons, therefore, we think it is clear that the plea of a bar under Order II, rule 2 is misconceived and was rightly rejected by the learned District Judge, although we do not desire to express any opinion as to the correctness of the ground upon which he decided the point. It has been urged on behalf of the appellants by Mr. Sen that although it is admitted that the collaterals have an interest in these shares, nevertheless the interest in them which was owned by the joint family of which Lachmi Narayan is the head was, qua that joint family property, which ought to have been brought into partition. We do not think that this contention is a sound one, because at the time when the previous partition suit was brought, the right of these collaterals was still in dispute. We have already mentioned that when the collaterals came forward in 1907, claiming an interest in these shares, their claim was resisted by the present defendants Nos. 1 to 4 upon the ground that the shares belonged exclusively to them; and this plea having been accepted by the Court of first instance the suit of the collaterals had been dismissed. That case was still pending in appeal when the present plaintiffs brought their suit for partition in 1903 and for this reason, we think it may well be said that the partition suit could not properly have embraced any claim in respect of the shares regarding which litigation was still going on and in which persons, who were entirely separate from the family of the plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 1 to 4, were claiming an interest. We do not consider it necessary for the purposes of this appeal to decide the question of law which was argued before us, namely, as to whether property which has come down to a joint family as obstructed heritage descends to them as property held in joint tenancy or in tenancy-in-common. All we are concerned to say is, that in our opinion whether or not the property now in question came down in joint tenancy or in tenancy-in-common, it could not have properly been included in the suit for partition which the plaintiffs brought against the first four defendants in the year 1908.

We, therefore, hold that Order II, rule 2 was no bar to the present suit and we direct that this appeal be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Contribution, suit for—Undissolved partnership—Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), Sch. II, Art. 41.

A suit for contribution will lie on the Small Cause side even where the debt in respect of which the decree was obtained was one relating to a partnership trade carried on between plaintiff and defendant jointly. To sustain a plea that the suit will not lie on the Small Cause side and that plaintiff's remedy was by asking for a dissolution of the partnership and the taking of its account, the defendant should allege and prove that the partnership is undissolved and continuing. In the case of a dissolved partnership, a suit for contribution is maintainable by a partner who has paid the whole of the debt.

Sadhu Narayana Iyengar v. Ramaswami Iyengar, 32 M. 203; 4 M. L. T. 475, 3 Ind. Cas. 486, followed.

In such a case, it would be open to the defendant to show that nothing was really due to the plaintiff according to the accounts of the partnership as they stood.

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Kristna at Ellore, dated 29th September 1910 in Small Cause Suit No. 422 of 1910.

Mr. T. Prakasam, for the Petitioner.

Mr. V. Venkataratnam, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The suit in this case was for contribution. The plaintiff alleged that a decree for money was passed against him and the defendant jointly, that in execution the whole of the amount was levied from him and that the defendant is, therefore, liable to pay him half of the amount. The defendant set up the contention that the debt for which the former decree was passed related to a partnership trade conducted by the plaintiff and the defendant jointly, that the plaintiff was, therefore, not entitled to recover the amount without an account being taken of the partnership transaction and that the suit was, therefore, not maintainable on the Small Cause side. The defendant did not say definitely in his written statement whether the partnership was a continuing one or not. As far as I am able to make out, his plea seems to have been that the partnership itself was dissolved, but that the account of the partnership had not been taken. If his case were that the debt sued for was only one item in a continuing partnership business, then probably he would be entitled to say that a suit is not maintainable for it separately, and that the plaintiff's remedy would be to ask for a dissolution of the partnership and the taking of its account. In the case of a dissolved partnership, this Court has held, in Sadhu Narayana Iyengar v. Ramaswami Iyengar (1), that a suit is maintainable for contribution by a partner who has paid the whole of a debt. No doubt, as pointed out in that case, it would be open to the defendant to show that nothing was really due to the plaintiff according to the accounts of the partnership as they stand. The decision in Sadhu Narayana Iyengar v. Ramaswami Iyengar (1), seems to me, if I may say so, to be in accordance with the current of recent decisions.

In this case, the defendant's Pleader seems to have taken the view that, if his client was entitled to show that the plaintiff should not have a decree because the partnership accounts would show that he could not claim the amount sued for then, the plaintiff would be bound to sue for an account of the partnership transactions, and he not being entitled to do so in a Small Cause Court, the suit for contribution would not lie in a Small Cause Court. This is apparently the reason why the written statement states that, as the plaintiff himself had received a larger portion of the debt collected from him in the former suit, the suit is not entertainable by the Small Cause Court.

Now, assuming that the suit for contribution would lie at all, my attention is not drawn to any Article in the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, which would prevent a Small Cause Court from trying it. Article 41 which was relied on for the petitioner does not cover this case, and no other Article is relied on. On account of the view taken by the defendant's Pleader, no attempt seems to have been made to prove at the trial that on the merits the plaintiff was not entitled to a decree. It is not stated that the lower Court refused to receive any evidence that was offered. I have very little doubt that the Pleader was not content to take up the position that if the defendant would be entitled to show that on the merits the plaintiff should not have a decree, then the plaintiff would have no right to have the suit tried by a Small Cause Court. It was for the defendant in this case to allege that the debt collected from the plaintiff was only an item in an undissolved partnership. The plaintiff said nothing about a partnership, his allegation being that there having been a joint decree against him and the defendant and the amount of the decree having been collected from him solely, he was entitled to contribution against the defendant. This allegation is prima facie sound legally. The defendant has to disprove it by stating facts which would put the plaintiff out of Court, for this purpose. According to the dicision in Sadhu Narayana v. Ramaswami Iyengar (1), which is binding on me, the defendant would have to allege that the debt in question was a transaction in an undissolved partnership. If the partnership was dissolved, the defendant failed to allege and to prove that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover in the suit on the mertis. In this view, I must dismiss the petition.

Petition dismissed.

*Digwari tenure—Nature and character of tenure—Title to mineral rights—*Zemindar presumed to possess such rights—Suit by zemindar for declaration of right—Party—Government, whether necessary party.

DURGA PRASHAD SINGH v. BROJO NATH BOSE.

A Digwari tenure is similar to a Ghatwali tenure. It was originally granted in consideration of the performance of military service, to which Police duties were attached. The tenure is hereditary and inalienable. The Digwar is appointed by the Government and is liable to dismissal by it for misconduct. On dismissal the next male heir, if fit for the office, is appointed.

Where a zemindar does not part with his mineral rights to the Digwar, it must be presumed that those rights remain in the zemindar.

Kumar Hari Narayan Singh v. Sriram Chakravarty, 6 Ind. Cas. 785: 11 C. L. J. 653; 37 C. 723; 14 C. W. N. 746; 37 I. A. 136; 7 A. L. J. 633; 8 M. L. T. 51; 12 Bom. L. R. 495; 20 M. L. J. 569; (1910) M. W. N. 309, followed.

The Government is not a necessary or a proper party to a suit brought by a zemindar against the Digwar for a declaration of his mineral rights, as the Government does not claim them under permanently settled estates.

Appeal from the judgment of the High Court at Calcutta, dated March 18, 1907, and reported as 34 C. 753; 12 C. W. N. 193, reversing that of the Sub-Judge of Manbhum, dated June 14, 1904.

JUDGMEMT.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—The suit out of which the present appeal arises was brought by the zemindar of Pergunnah Jharia, a permanently settled estate, in order to establish his right to the minerals underlying mouzah Tasra and mouzah Rohrabund. The two mouzahs are within his zemindari. They are both held by the Digwar of Tasra on digwari tenure at a fixed rent of Rs. 64 per annum payable to the zemindar.

Digwari tenure is similar to Ghatwali tenure. It was granted originally in consideration of the performance of military service, to which Police duties were attached. The tenure is hereditary and inalienable. The Digwar is appointed by the Government and liable to be dismissed by the Government for misconduct. On dismissal the next male heir, if fit for the office, is appointed.

In 1892, the Digwar of Tasra granted a perpeptual lease of the coal mines underlying the two villages. The lease became vested in the Tasra Coal Company, Limited. The Company took possession and raised and sold a large quantity of coal.

The zemindar asked for a declaration of right, an account and an injunction.

The Subordinate Judge of Manbhum gave judgment in favour of the zemindar. On appeal to the Calcutta High Court, that judgment was reversed and the suit was dismissed with costs.

The case was argued at considerable length in both the Courts below and fully discussed before this Board.

Two points, and two points only, were seriously argued. It was contended (1) that the Government ought to have been made a party to the suit, and that in the absence of the Government, the suit was defective and ought to be dismissed, and (2) that the Digwar had a proprietary right in the underground minerals.

The High Court decided both points in favour of the defendants.

In their Lordships' opinion, the Government is not a necessary or a proper party to this suit. Apparently, the Government does not claim the minerals under permanently settled estates. However that may be, the Government has never claimed the minerals under the two mouzahs or either of them, or put forward any claim inconsistent with the rights now asserted by the zemindar. The rights of the Government, whatever they are, will not be prejudiced or affected by the result of a suit to which it is not a party.

The second point seems equally clear. The two mouzahs are within the plaintiff's zemindari. Both the Courts below have so held. The Permanent Settlement was made with the zemindar of Jharia. No separate Settlement was made with the Digwar of Tasra, if there was a Digwar of Tasra at the date of the Permanent Settlemant, which seems more than doubtful. No attempt was made to prove that the mineral rights now in question were vested in the Digwar before or at the time of the Permanent Settlement if the lands were then held on Digwari tenure. Nor is there the slightest evidence tending to show or to suggest that the zemindar ever parted with his mineral rights to the Digwar. Mineral rights were vested in the Ghatwals of Pergunnah Sarhat in the north-western part of the Birbhum zemindari, but those Ghatwals paid their rent direct to the Government, and in other respects, they were in a very peculiar position. They were dealt with by Regulation XXIX of 1814. They obtained the right to lease the minerals by the Act V of 1859. With every respect to the learned Judges of the High Court, no inference can be drawn from the circumstances of their case that the Digwars in Manbhum had similar rights or powers.

The learned Judges on appeal seem to have been misled by a decision of the High Court in the case of Sriram Chukrabutty v. Kumar Hari Narain Sinha (1), which was afterwards reversed by this Board in Kumar Hari Narayan Singh Deo Bahadur v. Sriram Chakravarti (2). There certain persons, called Goswamis or Gossains, priests of a Hindu idol, to which a certain village had been assigned on a permanent debutter tenure at a small annual rent, granted a lease of the underlying minerals. The High Court held that the mineral rights were vested in the Gossains. But it was laid down by this tribunal that it must be presumed that the mineral rights remained in the zemindar in the absence of proof that he had parted with them.

Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal ought to be allowed, and the decision of the High Court reversed, with costs, and the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge restored.

The respondents will pay the costs of this appeal.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1089 OF 1910.

January 3, 1912.

Mortgage—Decree for sale by subsequent mortgagee—Prior mortgagee's suit for declaration that sale must be subject to his right—Jurisdiction—Valuation of suit—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42, proviso.

Where a mortgagee sued for a mere declaration that the mortgaged property should be sold under a decree for sale obtained by a subsequent mortgagee, subject to his own prior mortgage for Rs. 3,300: Held, that the Munsif's Court had no jurisdiction in the case.

Since a prior mortgagee can institute a suit for sale against a subsequent mortgagee, the suit for a mere declaration by the prior mortgagee would be opposed to the proviso to section 42 of the Specific Relief Act.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of Guntur, in Appeal Suit No. 171 of 1908, presented against that of the Court of the District Munsif of Ongole, in Original Suit No. 46 of 1907.

Mr. T. Prakasam, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. Subramaniam, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the 2nd defendant, who had a mortgage of certain properties from the 1st defendant, instituted a suit on his mortgage and obtained a decree for sale. The plaintiff claiming to be a prior mortgagee entitled to a sum of Rs. 3,300 objected to the sale. The District Munsif, in whose Court proceedings in execution of the 2nd defendant's mortgage were going on, directed that notice should be given to intending bidders of the plaintiff's claim of a prior mortgage. No sale had yet been held. The plaintiff's suit is for a declaration that the 2nd defendant's sale should be subject to his mortgage for Rs. 3,300.

Two legal objections were raised by the 2nd defendant to the suit. The first objection is that the suit was beyond the jurisdiction of the District Munsif's Court as the amount claimed by the plaintiff as due to him on his mortgage, was more than Rs 2,500. This contention ought, in our opinion, to have been upheld. The District Judge considers that the matter in dispute in the suit should not be taken to be of a higher value than the amount for which the 2nd defendant obtained a mortgage decree, which was Rs. 264. It is difficult to understand how this view can be supported. If the plaintiff succeeds in his suit, he would establish a claim to the extent of Rs. 3,300 as against the 2nd defendant or rather against the mortgaged property over which the 2nd defendant has also a mortgage and if he fails in his suit, he would lose as against the 2nd defendant the right of enforcing a claim for Rs. 3,300. This case is not similar to cases in which it has been held that if the property itself is not worth the amount of the lien, the value of the suit may be taken not to exceed the market-value of the property. We must hold that the suit ought not to have been instituted in the Munsif's Court.

The second objection raised was that the plaintiff was not entitled to institute a suit for a mere declaration as against the 2nd defendant.

Now, it is undoubted law that a prior mortgagee may institute a suit for sale against a subsequent mortgagee.

The plaintiff, therefore, was entitled to seek consequential relief against the 2nd defendant in the shape of a decree for sale.

The proviso to section 42 of the Specific Relief Act must, therefore, be held to bar the present suit.

The result is, that the decrees of the lower Courts must be reversed and the suit dismissed with costs throughout.

Appeal dismissed.

Procedure—Case remitted by Privy Council to High Court—Case pending in Court of Appeal—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 31.

The Subordinate Judge held that to a suit upon a simple mortgage, the twelve years' rule of limitation, under Article 132 of the Limitation Act of 1877, would apply. The High Court, on appeal, held, that the sixty years' rule of limitation was applicable under Article 147. On appeal the Privy Council, on July 22, 1907, restored the former decision and remanded the case to the High Court for disposal. While the case was pending in the High Court the Limitation Act of 1908 was passed on August 7, 1908, which enacted that "no such suit in the said territories instituted within the said period of sixty years and pending at the date of the passing of this Act, either in a Court of first instance or of appeal, shall be dismissed on the ground that a twelve years' rule of limitation is applicable:"

Held, that this legislation applied to this suit, as the former judgment of the Privy Council did not end the suit which was remitted for inquiry upon allegations of fact, and when the new Limitation Act was passed, the suit was pending.

Appeal from the judgment of the Madras High Court, dated December 16, 1908.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C. and Mr. Kuffin, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.

LORD SHAW.—This is an appeal against the judgment of the High Court of Judicature at Madras, dated the 16th December 1908.

On the 23rd September 1899, a suit was brought in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Negapatam, founded upon a certain mortgage of date the 22nd September 1883, and with the object of recovering the mortgage-debt by sale of the mortgaged property.

That Judge held that part of the claim was of a nature to which, under Article 132 of the 2nd Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act of 1877, the twelve years' rule of limitation would apply. The High Court on appeal, held, on the other hand, that the article applicable was Article 147, the sixty years' rule of limitation.

On appeal to this Board, the latter decision was reversed and the former restored. This occurred on the 22nd July 1907. The order itself by His Majesty in Council was dated the 12th August 1907.

It appears that the question is one upon which there has been much diversity of opinion in India, and conflicting decisions in the High Courts of Madras, Bombay, and Allahabad were referred to in this connection.

In view of the argument presented in this appeal, it is necessary to cite the exact terms of the former decision. They are these:—

"Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that it should be declared that Article 132 is the Article which provides the rule of limitation applicable to this case, and that the case should be remitted to the High Court to be disposed of in accordance with this declaration." [Vasudeva Mudliar v. K. S. Srinivasa Pillai (1)].

A remit took place accordingly.

The reason for a remit is obvious. While the defendant had pleaded the limitation,

(1) 11 C. W. N. 1005; 17 M. L. J. 444; 4 A. L. J. 625; 6 C. L. J. 379; 2 M.L.T. 333; 9 Bom. L. R. 1104; 30 M. 426.

the plaintiff had alleged payments of interest and settling of accounts which avoided the limitation, and a remit was required for the purpose of having, inter alia, inquiry and adjudication on these matters of fact.

So standing the suit in the Court of Appeal, the Indian Limitation Act of the 7th August 1908 was passed. Its 31st section is in these terms:—

"Notwithstandiug anything contained in this Act or in the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, in the territories mentioned in the second Schedule a suit for foreclosure or a suit for sale by a mortgagee may be instituted within two years from the date of the passing of this Act, or within sixty years from the date when the money secured by the mortgage became due, whichever period expires first; and no such suit in the said territories instituted within the said period of sixty years and pending at the date of the passing of this Act, either in a Court of first instance or of appeal, shall be dismissed on the ground that a twelve years' rule of limitation is applicable.

"(2). Where in the aforesaid territories the claim of a mortgagee for foreclosure or for sale has been wholly or in part dismissed or withdrawn after the twenty-second day of July 1907 and before the passing of this Act, either in a Court of first instance or of appeal, on the ground that a twelve years' rule of limitation applied to such claim, the case may be restored on an application in writing to the Court by which the claim was dismissed or in which it was withdrawn, provided the application is made within six months from the date of the passing of this Act; and on such restoration, the provisions of sub-section (1) shall apply."

The question in the present appeal is simple, and in a word, whether this supervenient legislation applies to this suit. That it was meant so to apply is fairly obvious from the citation of the date the 22nd July 1907, which is in fact the date of delivery of the previous judgment of this Board. Whether it does in fact so apply depends, as was admitted by the learned Counsel for the appellants, solely on whether the suit was or was not a suit pending at the passing of the Act.

Their Lordships do not entertain any doubt that it was. The former judgment of the Board did not end the suit; did not finally determine it. It was remitted to the High Court of Madras for further procedure, and for inquiry upon allegations of fact; and at the date of the Statute that procedure was not concluded and the inquiry had not indeed been entered upon. The suit in fact was neither adjudged upon nor even ready for judgment. Their Lordships express their concurrence with the opinions of the learned Judges of the High Court, and they will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Admissibility—Evidence—Sale—Description of house and site—Oral evidence—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 92.

Where a sale-deed purported to convey an upstair house standing on a certain site, which was also described and conveyed, and the vendor had no upstair house on that site but had one on the opposite side of the same street and no other in that town or elsewhere:

Held, that parol evidence was admissible to show that the house intended to be conveyed was the latter upstair house.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of North Arcot, in Appeal Suit No. 221 of 1908, presented against that of the Court of the District Munsif of Vellore in Original Suit No. 177 of 1907.

Mr. A. Krishnaswami Iyer, for the Appellant.

Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Iyer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Two questions have been argued.

First, it is contended that parol evidence was wrongly admitted to show that the upstair house described in Exhibit G (item 2) was the house in reference to which the present dispute has arisen. It is clear from Exhibit G that the intention was to convey an upstair house, and that house is described as included in, i.e., standing on a certain site which is also described and conveyed. When the document is applied to the facts existing at the date of the sale, it is found that the vendor had no upstair house on that site, but had one on the opposite side of the same street and no other in that town or elsewhere. Evidence has been admitted to show that he intended to convey that house. We think the evidence was admissible and that the words in the document which indicated that the house sold stood upon the side described must be regarded as mere description to be omitted from consideration. The second contention is that the Tamil word ('kalan') in the covenant on which the plaintiff relies is to be interpeted as meaning any dispute about the title, and not, as the lower Courts have held, as referring to a defect in the title. On this point, we think we must accept the interpretation of the District Munsif from which the District Judge has not dissented.

This second appeal is dismissed with costs.

Execution of decree, questions to be decided in—Representative of deceased judgment-debtor—Suit for declaration—Maintainability.

All questions arising between the judgment-creditor and the legal representative of the judgment-debtor must be decided in execution. A suit for a declaration that the suit properties belong to the plaintiff's judgment-debtor is not, therefore, maintainable where the execution petition has been dismissed on the ground that the defendant is not the legal representative of the deceased judgment-debtor. Such a suit can lie only if a declaration that the defendant is such legal representative has been prayed for.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of North Malabar, in Appeal Suit No. 119 of 1909, presented against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif of Quilandy, in Original Suit No. 930 of 1907.

Mr. T. Richmond, for the Appellant.

Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This suit has been rightly dismissed by the lower Appellate Court. The appellant holds a decree against one Cheriyakkan Nair; and after his death he sought to execute it against the present 1st respondent alleging that the property was in possession of the present 1st respondent as the judgment-debtor's representative. The petition for execution was dismissed on the ground that the present 1st respondent was not the legal representative of the appellant's judgment-debtor. Then the appellant instituted the present suit and in it he asks for a declaration that the property belonged to his judgment debtor. He alleges that the 1st defendant is the legal representative of the judgment-debtor, but he does not ask for a declaration that the 1st defendant is the legal representative of Cheriyakkan Nair. It is settled law that any question arising between the judgment-creditor and the legal representative of the judgment-debtor must be decided in execution. If the plaintiff wanted to establish that the present 1st respondent is the legal representative of his judgment-debtor, he might maintain the suit. That is not, however, the scope of his suit and we, therefore, think that the suit has been rightly dismissed.

The second appeal is dismissed with costs.

Under the Dayabhaga law, a woman's half-sister's son is entitled to succeed to her stridhan in preference to the daughter's son of the great-grandson of the great-grandfather of the woman's husband.

The mere fact that it was stated in an application for Probate that a certain party had applied for Letters of Administration to the estate of the testatrix, and that the Court had issued a citation upon him, would not entitle him to come in and oppose the grant of Probate, if it was found that he had no interest in the estate of the deceased.

JUDGMENT.

N. CHATTERJEA, J.—This appeal arises out of an application for Probate of the Will of one Adya Sundari Debi, who bequeathed her properties to the three respondents who were her paternal relations and appointed them executors, one of them Charu Chander being related to her as her half-sister's son. The appellant, Shashi Bhushan Lahiri, was the daughter's son of the great grandson of the great-grandfather of Adya Sundari's husband, Ram Kanai Moitra. The appellant had applied for Letters of Administration to the estate left by Adya Sundari before the application for Probate of her Will was made by the respondents.

Therefore, in the proceedings on the application for Probate citation was issued upon the appellant and he put in a petition of objections contesting the genuineness and validity of the Will and also alleging that the estate belonged to Adya Sundari's husband which she had no power to dispose of by Will. The learned District Judge held that he was not entitled to oppose the grant of Probate and, after taking formal evidence of the execution of the Will, granted Probate to the respondents. Shashi Bhushan has appealed to this Court.

Before Shashi Bhushan can contest the Will, he must show that he has an interest in the estate of Adya Sundari. If the estate dealt with by the Will belonged to her husband, the grant of Probate of the Will executed by her cannot affect the rights of the heir of her husband, and the Court of Probate, of course, has no power to go into the question whether the estate belonged to Adya Sundari or her husband.

It has accordingly been contended on behalf of the appellant Shashi Bhushan, in this appeal, first, that assuming that the estate belonged to Adya Sundari over which she had a disposing power, the respondent Charu Chander, as the half-sister's son of the deceased, was not her heir in preference to him and, secondly, that citation having been issued upon him, the Court below is wrong in holding that he had no locus standi to oppose the grant of Probate.

The question, therefore, arises whether Charu Chandra, as the half-sister's son of the testator, is the heir to the stridhan of Adya Sundari. If he is, then the appellant, Shasi Bhushan, has no locus standi to contest the Will.

The parties are governed by the Dayabhaga School of Hindu law. The Dayabhaga, in dealing with the succession to the separate property of a childless woman, after enumerating certain heirs down to the husband, says as follows:—"On failure of heirs down to the husband, this rule is again provided which Vrihaspati thus delivers: 'The mother's sister, the maternal uncle's wife, the paternal uncle's wife, the father's sister, the mother in-law and the wife of an elder brother are pronounced similar to mother. If they have no issue of their bodies nor son (of a rival wife), nor daughter's son, nor son of those persons, the sister's son and the rest shall take their property'." (See Dayabhaga, Chapter IV, Section III Verse 31).

The sister's son is expressly named as an heir in the above text of Vrihaspati and the only question is whether a half-sister's son is included in the expression "sister's son." This question was raised in the case of Dasharathi Kundu v. Bepin Behari Kundu (1), and it was held in that case that "sister's son" includes a half-sister's son and that under the Dayabhaga a step-sister's son is entitled to succeed to a woman's stridhan in preference to her husband's elder brother. That is a direct authority against the appellant's contention. In that case the learned Judges, with reference to the translation of the expression "sister's son" in Vyavastha-Darpana, as own sister's son pointed out that the author probably used the words "own sister's son" as contra-distinguished from the woman's husband's sister's son, who is the next in order in the table of succession. In the case of Bholanath Roy v. Rakhal Dass Mukerjee (2), it was held that under the Bengal School of Hindu law, sons of sisters of the half blood are entitled to succeed equally with sons of sisters of the whole blood to the property of a deceased brother. That case, no doubt, related to the question of succession to a male owner but it is an authority for the proposition that the expression "sister's son" includes a half sister's son, and that there is no difference between the son of a sister of the whole blood and the son of a sister of half blood.

It is pointed out, however, on behalf of the appellant that the rival wife's son is expressly mentioned as a son in the Dayabhaga (Chapter IV, Section III, Verse 32) and that if it had been meant to include the son of a sister of the half blood in the expression "sister's son", it would have been expressly so stated. But no argument can be based upon this ground. The word "brother" in the well known text of Yajnavalkya relating to the succession of a male owner dying without male issue is applicable to a brother of the whole blood as well as to a brother of the half blood. The fact of being a male offspring of one common parent makes one a brother (see Srikrishna's Commentary on the Dayabhaga, Chapter XI, section 5 paragraphs 7-12). There is, no doubt, a distinction between brothers of the whole blood and those of the half blood, but the former confers a greater amount of spiritual benefit.

(1) 32 C. 261; 9 C. W. N. 119.
(2) 11 C. 69.

In the case of a sister's son, according to some authorities, (see Colebrook's Digest Book V, Chapter 8, section 1), there is no difference in the amount of spiritual benefit conferred by a full sister and a half sister respectively and therefore, they inherit together and although a different view is taken by some other authorities, the above view is "respected and followed" (see Shyama Charan Sarkar's Vyavastha Darpana, 2nd Edition p. 268). In the Dayakrama Sangraha, Chapter I, Section X, Verse 1, in dealing with the question of succession to a male owner, Srikrishna Tarkalankar says:—"According to Acharya Chudamani, the son of the proprietor's own sister and the son of his half sister have an equal right of inheritance." Srikrishna's recapitulation of the line of inheritance in which a different view is alleged to have been taken and the difference in the copies of the recapitulation, were disscused in the case of Bholanath Roy v. Rakhal Dass (2) cited above, and it was there held that Srikrishna's opinion was the same as that of Acharya Chudamani.

As already pointed out, it was held, in the case of Dasharathi Kundu v. Bepin Behari Kundu (1), that the half-sister's son is entitled to succeed in preference to the husband's elder brother. Even if the half sister's son does not stand in the same position as the full sister's son, he is entitled to succeed in preference to the appellant who is the daughter's son of the great-grandson of the great-great-grandfather of the deceased. The latter accordingly is not the heir of Adya Sundari and has no locus standi to oppose the grant of Probate. This disposes of the first contention.

The second contention also has no force. The mere fact that it was stated in the application for Probate that the appellant had applied for Letters of Administration to the estate of the testatrix, and that the Court had issued a citation upon him would not entitle him to come in and oppose the grant of Probate if it is found that he has no interest in the estate of the deceased. The case of Ohhatu Kurmi v. Raja Ram Tewari (3) relied on by the appellant has no application to the facts of the present case. There the relationship of the caveator with the testatrix was admitted, and the caveator would have succeeded if it had been proved that the testatrix was not a degraded woman. He wanted to cross-examine the witnesses for the petitioner for Probate to show that the deceased was not degraded ; his title to succeed depended upon the question whether the woman was degraded or not, he was a party to the proceeding and he had certainly a right to cross-examine the witnesses. In this present case, Charu Chunder, being the heir of Adya Sundari had she died intestate, the appellant had no interest in her estate and had no locus standi to contest the Will.

(3) 11 C. L. J. 124; 3 Ind. Cas. 374.

The appeal accordingly fails and is dismissed with costs three gold mohurs.

Subsequently in execution of a decree, obtained on the foot of this mortgage, the holding was sold and purchased by a stranger. No objection was raised either in the suit or in the execution proceeding that the holding was an occupancy-holding and not a fixed-rate tenure:

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the case out of which this appeal has arisen are as follows: The predecessors-in-title of the defendants-respondents were occupancy-tenants of a certain holding. On the 4th of June 1835, they mortgaged this holding describing it as a fixed-rate tenure in favoure of the zemindar of the village. A suit was brought to enforce the mortgage in December 1895 and on the 27th of July 1896, a decree for sale was passed. On the 23rd of August 1897, the property was sold as a fixed-rate tenure and was purchased by the plaintiff a stranger to that suit. The judgment-debtors objected to the zemindar being allowed to bid at the sale. On the 2nd of November 1897, a sale-certificate was granted to the plaintiff. From that date up to the 16th of October 1908, the plaintiff had been in possession of the holding paying rent to the zemindar. On the latter date, he was dispossessed by the defendants, who asserted that the land was their occupancy-tenure. Hence the present suit was brought by the plaintiffs to recover possession. The Court of first instance and the lower Appellate Court decreed the claim. On second appeal to this Court, the learned Judge, before whom the case came, dismissed the suit holding that as a right of occupancy could not be sold in execution of a decree, the plaintiff acquired no title to the holding and, therefore, he was not entitled to a decree in a suit for ejectment against the defendants. Two points are pressed before us. The first is that the judgment-debtors are estopped from saying that the tenure was an occupancy-tenure and not a fixed-rate tenure, and, secondly, even though no title passed to the plaintiff by the auction-sale, still on the 16th of October 1908, the defendants had no title themselves and, therefore, the plaintiff is entitled to a decree for possession against them on the strength of his possessory title. We think both these contentions are sound. It is clear that the defendants as well as the zemindar gave out that the tenure was a fixed-rate tenure, that is, one transferable in execution of a decree. The judgment-debtors in the mortgage-suit raised no objection whatsoever, either in the course of the suit or in execution proceedings, on the ground that the tenure was not transferable under law. The plaintiff, acting on the belief that the tenure was a fixed rate tenure as stated by the parties to the mortgage-deed and the mortgage-suit, purchased it. We think that it does not lie in the mouth of the defendants to say now that the tenure was not a fixed-rate tenure. Furthermore, it is quite clear that for about eleven years the defendants had been out of possession. The plaintiff has held possession and has been accepted by the zemindar as a tenant and has paid rent for the holding. Any right which the defendants had as tenants disappeared long ago, and when on the 16th of October 1908, they dispossessed the plaintiff, the latter had at least a possessory title, while the defendant had no title whatsoever. On the basis of his possessory title alone the plaintiff would be entitled to a decree. We allow this appeal, set aside the judgment of the learned Judge of this Court and restore the decree of the lower Appellate Court. The plaintiff will have his costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

Party—Auction-purchaser, whether necessary party—Application to set aside sale—Confirmation of sale—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 54—Delivery of possession, what is.

An auction-sale cannot be set aside after it has been confirmed in a proceeding to which the auction-purchaser is not a party.

Surendra Mohini Debi v. Loharam Chattopadhaya, 14 Ind. Cas. 67; 16 C. W. N. 570, distinguished.

Sharofan v. Mahomed Habibuddin, 10 Ind. Cas. 148; 13 C. L. J. 535; 15 C. W. N. 685, referred to.

The defendant purchased property worth less than Rs. 100 at an auction-sale in execution of a decree against the plaintiff. In 1898, he executed an unregistered document on plain paper in favour of the plaintiff in which he, the defendant, admitted that the property was the plaintiff's property and that he agreed to hold possession as a tenant for five years; it was also agreed afterwards to make the property over to the plaintiff, and that after the lapse of five years, the entire rights should vest in the plaintiff. In a suit by the plaintiff to recover possession:

Held, that, under section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act, the delivery of possession was an alternative to the execution and registration of a document which was an act formal in a high degree, that the document did not amount to a delivery of possession by the defendant to the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff did not acquire any title by means of the document.

Babu Girija Prosanna Roy Chowdhury, for the Appellants.

Babu Hem Chandra Mitra, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiff sued to recover possession of certain lands. The lands were sold to the predecessor of the defendants at an execution sale following a money-decree on the 5th of January 1893. The sale was confirmed in March of the same year. An application was made by the judgment-debtor to set aside the sale. It failed in the first Court; but on appeal the sale was set aside by an order of the 14th June 1893. The auction-purchaser was no party to the appeal in which the sale was set aside. The first question, therefore, which arises is whether the title which vested in the auction-purchaser in consequence of the execution sale was ever taken away from him. The case of Surendra Mohini Debi v. Loharam Chattopadhaya, (1) is an authority for holding that the auction-purchaser was not a necessary party to those proceedings. The present case, however, is distinguished from that one by the fact that before the sale was set aside, it had been confirmed in favour of the auction-purchaser, a feature which is absent in the reported case. The effect of this confirmation seems to have been to complete a title in the auction-purchaser which was before inchoate and make absolute that right which was only provisional. This view is consistent with the decision in the case we have just mentioned. It is also borne out by the judgment of Mookerjee, J., in the case of Bibi Sharofan v. Mahomed Habibuddin (2). The title, then, having become absolute in the auction-purchaser on the confirmation of the sale, can it be said that he was deprived of it by proceedings to which he was no party? We know of no authority for saying that this can be so. There is a question in this case as to the respective dates of the institution of the proceedings to set aside the execution sale, and the confirmation of the sale, and we do not know which of these occurences was the first, but we see no reason for treating the rights, which the auction-purchaser got by the execution-sale, as anything less than absolute. We, therefore, hold that the title vested in the auction-purchaser on the confirmation of the sale, and the subsequent proceedings in relation to the sale have not in any way diminished his rights.

(1) 16 C. W. N. 570; 14 Ind. Cas. 67.
(2) 10 Ind. Cas. 148; 13 C. L. J. 435; 15 C. W. N. 685.

We then come to the second point in the case, which is a document, dated the 15th of April 1898. In that document, the defendant admits that the premises are the properties of the plaintiff. He agrees to hold possession of them practically as a tenant for five years, and afterwards to make them over to the plaintiff. The rent, which will accrue in respect of these premises, is to go to satisfy a debt due from the plaintiff to him and defendant agreed that after the lapse of five years, "the entire rights to the said house and land should vest in the plaintiff." What effect are we to give to this document? It is clear that under the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act, it cannot be treated as a conveyance, because for one reason, it is not registered. Does it amount to a delivery of possession under section 54, the property being of less value than Rs. 100? We are of opinion that it does not.

It is argued that the defendant being in possession of the lands says, substantially, to the plaintiffs: "Henceforth I am your tenant," that thereupon he becomes his tenant and his possession becomes the possession of the plaintiff. We cannot hold that this is a delivery under the section in question. The delivery there is an alternative to the execution and registration of a document which is an act formal in a high degree. We consider that the delivery must at all events be something more formal than what is put forward in this case. We accordingly hold that the plaintiff has not made out his title either by reason of the setting aside of the execution sale or the execution of the document.

The result, therefore, is that this appeal is allowed, the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court are set aside and the suit is dismissed. The appellant is entitled to his costs in this Court and in the Courts below.

Appeal allowed.

DHALIPALA VENKATARAMAYYA—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908). s. 11—Res judicata—Appellate Court not recording findings on some points—Vakil not arguing some points—Absence of finding on those points.

Where an Appellate Court, in the exercise of its discretion, omits to record findings on certain points raised in the case, on the ground that they were unnecessary for the decision of the case, its judgment does not, in respect of those points, operate as res judicata.

Sheosagar Singh v. Sitaram Singh, 24 C. 616; 24 I. A. 50; 1 C. W. N. 297, referred to.

Quære:—Whether, when an appellant in a Court of appeal does not argue against the findings on some of the points and confines his arguments to some particular issues, the decision of the Appellate Court, which goes against him, will be res judicata on the points not argued?

Second appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Ellore, dated 21st December 1909, in A. S. No. 150 of 1909, presented against the decree of the Additional District Munsif of Tanuku, in O. S No. 42 of 1908

FACTS.—The facts of the case are sufficiently clear from the following judgment of the lower Appellate Court:—

The suit out of which this appeal arose was instituted for recovery of possession of the suit lands with past and future mesne profits.

2. The suit property among others originally belonged to one Ramappa. She had two daughters, by name Gunnamma and Peramma. Their respective husbands were Kailasam and Lingayya. Ramappa sold her properties to her sons-in-law, the aforesaid Kailasam and Lingayya. In Original Suit No. 566 of 1880 on the file of the District

Munsif's Court of Tanuku, the two daughters sued for a declaration that the alienation by their mother in favour of their husbands was not valid and binding on them. Therein they prayed for immediate possession of the properties sold to the sons-in-law. They were unsuccessful both in the Original and Appellate Courts and the sale-deeds in favour of the two sons-in-law by Ramappa were found to be transactions binding on the two daughters.

3. While the sons-in-law were in enjoyment of the properties, the former (Kailasam) sold a portion to one Bapayya, who brought Original Suit No. 232 of 1892 on the file of the Tanuku District Munsif's Court against Kailasam's widow Gunnamma and his brother's son for recovery of the lands sold to him. In that suit a compromise was effected whereby it was agreed that Bapayya, the purchaser, should take 35 cents of the land sued for and that the remaining acre 1—25 cents, which now forms the subject-matter of this suit, should be enjoyed by Gunnamma in lieu of her maintenance till her death and that afterwards it should go to the plaintiff.

4. Subsequent to the compromise in the said suit, the 1st defendant herein became the purchaser of the very same properties from Gunnamma's sister, Peramma, who alleged to be the heiress of the deceased Gunnamma. Hence the suit out of which this appeal arose.

5. The District Munsif decreed the plaintiff's claim. Hence this appeal by the 1st defendant.

6. The first question arising for determination in this appeal is whether the razinama decree in Original Suit No. 232 of 1892 on the file of the Tanuku District Munsif's Court was true and whether the sale by Gunnamma's sister is sustainable or not. The razinama decree therein is marked Exhibit B in this suit. It clearly stated that on the death of Gunnamma the present plaintiff should obtain possession of the properties. According to the said razinama decree, Gunnamma had only right to enjoy the properties till her death on account of her maintenance. In such circumstances, Gunnamma's sister had no right to sell the properties to the 1st defendant herein.

7. The second point argued in this appeal was that Gunnamma inherited the properties from her father and, therefore, her mother Ramappa had no right to sell the properties to her sons-in-law Kailasam and Lingayya. I have already stated in para. 2 supra that the District Munsif of Tanuku and on appeal the District Judge of Rajahmundry held that the sales made by Ramappa in favour of her sons-in-law were true and bona fide and binding on the ground that they were effected in order to discharge the debts contracted by her husband and herself as well. When once it was found that the properties in question had become the properties of Kailasam and Lingayya, the 1st defendant is now estopped from saying that such alienations by her were not binding on Gunnamma.

8. That was a suit brought by the two daughters of Ramappa. In such a suit their right was found against. Hence that decree was binding on Gunnamma and, therefore, her sister had no right to sell the properties to the 1st defendant herein.

9. The third point argued in this appeal was that the arrangement made in Original Suit No. 232 of 1892 between Gunnamma and the present plaintiff was not binding on the 1st defendant's vendor. She was, no doubt, not a party to it. But I find that it is binding on her inasmuch as her predecessor-in-title was bound by it. Therein Gunnamma clearly stated that the property should go to the plaintiff herein after her death.

10. These are the only points argued in this appeal.

11. This appeal fails and is dismissed with costs."

Mr. P. Narayanamurti, for the Appellant.

Mr. V. Ramesam, for 1st Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case, the judgment of the Subordinate Judge is based on the finding on the 2nd issue, viz., whether defendants are estopped from asserting that their vendor got the suit property from her father under the decree in O. S. No. 566 of 1880 on this Court's file and whether it is a collusive decree. He finds that, as a matter of fact, the decree in that suit is res judicata. In coming to this conclusion, he proceeds on what is apparently a misreading of the judgment of the Appellate Court in that suit. He says that the Appellate Court in the above-mentioned suit decided: "that the sales made by Ramappa in favour of her sons-in-law were true and bona fide and binding on the ground that they were effected in order to discharge the debts contracted by her husband and herself as well." There is no such finding in the judgment of that Court. All that is found there is that the sales made in favour of the sons-in-law were genuine, and, having regard to the scope of the suit, that finding was enough to dispose of the case against the plaintiff in that suit. The only difficulty that arises in the appeal before us, is whether the question regarding the binding character of the sale-deed was raised in the previous suit before the Appellate Court or not. The Subordinate Judge, who heard the appeal in the suit of 1880, mentions two points, one of them being the question regarding the genuineness of the deed, as the points which he had to decide in that appeal, but does not say that those were the only points raised in the appeal. We are not prepared to hold that other points were not argued before him, including the question whether the sale-deed was binding or not. We need not, therefore, decide the somewhat difficult question of law whether, when an appellant has not argued against the findings on some of the points and confines his argument in the Appellate Court to some particular issues, the decision of the Appellate Court which goes against him will be res judicata on the points not argued. We cannot say that, in the present instance, the omission to decide the question of the bona fides and binding character of the sale-deed in favour of the son-in-law was due to the view which the appellant's Pleader in that case took of his client's case or to the fact that the Appellate Court thought that it was not necessary to go into questions other than the genuineness of the sale-deed. If the omission was, as is quite possible, owing to the discretion exercised by the Appellate Court in not going into any unnecessary question, then the decision in Sheosagar Singh v. Sitaram Singh (1) covers the case and the judgment is not res judicata on the points not decided. We, therefore, set aside the judgment of the lower Appellate Court and remand the case for disposal according to law on the other issues in the case on the evidence on record. The lower Appellate Court will also find on the question whether the sale-deed was made for purposes binding on the appellants in the previous case. On this issue, the parties will be permitted to adduce fresh evidence. Costs will abide the result.

Appeal allowed.

CIVIL APPEAL No. 169 OF 1908.

April 19, 1912.

Present:—Sir Ralph Benson, Judge, and Mr. Justice Sundara Aiyar.

ANNAVARAPU NANCHARAMMA AND ANOTHER—APPELLANTS

versus

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Hypothecation—Instalments—"Due," meaning of—Failure of instalment—Right to claim whole debt.

An instalment hypothecation bond executed by the defendant to the plaintiff contained the following stipulation:—

"I agree that if I fail to pay the said balance of purchase-money with interest thereon .....according to the terms herein before contained, it shall be lawful for the said Collector on behalf of the Secretary of State to sell the said lands and apply the proceeds of such sale in or towards the payment and satisfaction in the first place of the expenses of such sale and then of the amount due or owing by me on account of the said balance of purchase-money, etc., etc.":

Held, that the word 'due' in the said bond meant payable, and that the creditor could in default of any instalment claim only the overdue instalments and not the entire balance due on the bond.

Appeal against the decree of the District Court of Guntur, in O. S. No. 44 of 1905.

FACTS.—The facts of the case are clear from the following judgment of the lower Court:

In the auction held by the Collector of Kistna of certain Government lands in the Tenali Taluq on 29th and 30th April 1901, 1st defendant's husband (Annavarapu Pundareekakshudu) bought 171 acres and 73 cents in the village of Adavalduri and acres 44.45 cents in the village of Allaparru for Rs. 8,918. Out of the sale amount 1st defendant's husband paid Rs. 1,466, and for the balance of Rs. 7,452, he executed to plaintiff the registered hypothecation bond sued on and, dated 10th June 1901 hypothecating the said 2 sets of land as also 3 acres, 14cents already belonging to him in Bapatla and stipulating for the payment of the money in 8 annual instalments payable on 1st February of each year commencing with 1st February 1902 with interest at 4 per cent. per annum and for plaintiff's power of sale and other terms in the event of default. First defendant's husband died on 25th July 1901.

Alleging payment of the 1st instalment only (on 5th February 1902) and the sale by plaintiff of the said 2 sets of land, after notice under the power reserved in the document, for Rs. 208 only and crediting the same and another item of Rs. 6, plaintiff sues to recover, by the sale of the said 3 acres 14 cents and from the assets of 1st defendant's husband the entire balance of Rs. 8,171-9-11, calculating interest at $6\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. per annum, the higher rate of interest provided for in the document in case of default, from the date of sale itself (30th April 1901)

The plaint was presented on 16th December 1905 with 1st defendant as the sole defendant.

The 1st defendant as sole defendant put in a written statement on 10th February 1906, denying that she came into possession of any assets of her husband.

She stated that her husband left a Will bequeathing his properties to certain legatees, with injunction to pay this debt and thus she has come into possession of certain properties which are not liable for plaintiff's claim and that plaintiff should implead the said legatees.

She further pleaded that the right to sue for instalments 5—8 had not accrued to plaintiff on date of suit, that there was no undertaking to pay the full amount in case of default of payment of any one instalment and that the higher rate of interest could be claimed at the most from date of default, and contended that the mortgaged properties (the said 2 sets of lands) were not properly sold after giving proper notice to proper persons, that the lands were in consequence sold for a very low price and that plaintiff was liable to this defendant in damages which should be ascertained herein and credited.

Upon 1st defendant's said plea, the legatees named by her were brought in as defendants Nos. 2—6.

Of these, 2nd defendant contends that the suit for a portion of the money is premature, that the sale as alleged by plaintiff is ultra vires and void for several reasons, that 1st defendant fraudulently got the lands purchased in her brother's name to defeat the claims of the other legatees, and committed other frauds in relation to the legacies, that plaintiff could get no relief against the legatees, in the absence of an adminstration suit and that this defendant is not a necessary party to the suit now.

Defendants Nos. 3 and 4 have put in similar written statements.

Fifth defendant denies any interest in himself.

Sixth defendant also disclaims interest as legatee and asserts the legality of the auction-purchase which he says he made for himself.

It appearing that 7th defendant was set up by 1st defendant as adopted son, plaintiff brought him on the record on 2nd December 1907. First defendant was appointed his guardian, but no written statement was put in on his behalf.

The following issues were framed by one of my predecessors on 22nd August 1906:—

(1) Whether the suit bond is true and supported by consideration ?

(2) Whether the right to recover the last 4 instalments of the bond accrued to plaintiff at the time of the institution of the suit ?

(3) Whether the re-sale held by the plaintiff was irregular and fraudulent ? If so, what damages have accrued in consequence thereof ?

(4) Whether plaintiff has no right in this suit to proceed against other than mortgaged properties to the prejudice of the legatees ?

(5) Whether the suit is bad for non-joinder of other legatees ?

(6) Whether 5th defendant and 6th defendant are necessary parties to the suit ?

(7) What relief is plaintiff entitled to ?

First Issue :—The execution of the suit document, Exhibit A, by 1st defendant's husband is proved by the writer and attestor, plaintiff's 1st witness. Consideration is denied by no one. Nor would such a plea hold good, as the hypothecation was made for the unpaid purchase-money, Rs. 7,452. Having bought the lands, 1st defendant's husband hypothecated them and the plaint item (the land in Bapatla) for the debt. It is true that in para. 5 of 1st defendant's written statement there is a frivolous statement that there was no consideration as no regular sale-deed was executed. But this objection seems to have been properly given up and at any rate was not pressed before me. Plaintiff's very acceptance of the properties in mortgage, their being sold and purchased by 1st defendant's brother, 6th defendant, as 1st defendant's properties and part payment and other treatment by both parties leave no room for question in the case ; and I am not able to say more in the absence of further elicitation.

I find the issue in the affirmative.

Second Issue.—Omitting the details as to the instalments, the 4 per cent. rate of interest and the mortgaged properties, the material p rtion of Exhibit A is as follows:—"and I agree that if I fail to pay the said balance of purchase-money with interest thereon at the rate aforesaid or any part thereof respectively according to the terms therein before contained, it shall be lawful for the said Collector, on behalf of the Secretary of State, etc., to sell the said lands and the ryotwari rights therein and to apply the proceeds of such sale in or towards the payment and satisfaction, in the first place, of the expenses of such sale and then of the amount due or owing by me on acconnt of the said balance of the purchase-money with interest thereon at 6$\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. per annum ; or otherwise to recover from the said land or me or my representatives the balance then due in respect of the said balance of purchase money with interest thereon at such last mentioned rate."

Admittedly, the 2nd instalment due on 1st February 1903 was not paid, nor any subsequent instalment since. For payment of the amount of the second instalment, 1st defendant applied to the Tahsildar on 12th May 1903 (Exhibit G) for time till 1st February 1904. This was granted to her (see Exhibit G1, dated 25th May 1903). It was not paid accordingly and so, after notice Exhibit C to 1st defendant, the 2 sets of land were sold on 26th and 27th February 1904 and struck down in favour of 6th defendant whose bid, in all Rs. 208, was the highest (see Exhibit E and plaintiff's 2nd witness). The sale was confirmed by the Sub-Collector.

Then, for the balance of purchase-money, deducting the payments or credit as aforesaid, has the cause of action accrued or not ? Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 contend it has not.

As I construe Exhibit A, it seems to me that the first portion of the above extract in para. 7 does empower plaintiff to sue for the full amount when there has been default in payment of any part of the balance of purchase-money (for which Exhibit A was passed) as stipulated for.

I, therefore, find the issue in the affirmative.

Third issue.—The contention of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 is that the sale is ultra vires and void because,—

(1) the notice, Exhibit C, is not a notice satisfying the requirements of clause (1) of the proviso to section 69, Transfer of Property Act, and no notice satisfying those requirements was given on the expiration of the extended time granted till 1st February 1904 under Exhibit G1;

(2) the sale proceedings were irregular as they were conducted on the footing of an arrear of revenue and not for dues under a mortgage with power to sell;

(3) there was not sufficient publication and the sale amount was unduly low and thus enormous loss has accrued to the estate.

While I am inclined to think that there is some force in these objections, I am of opinion that under section 69 the point need not be determined in this suit as desired by defendants Nos. 1 and 2. The expression "any person damnified may have his remedy in damages" does not, in my opinion, necessarily cast on the Court the duty of ascertaining the damages and deducting the same from the amount of debt claimed.

Fourth issue.—There is the personal liability and it is not barred by limitation. Therefore, plaintiff is entitled to a decree under section 88, Transfer of Property Act, with liberty to apply for a decree under section 90 [see Damodar Sakarchand v. Vyanku Gangu Ram (1).] Nothing more need be done now.

Fifth issue.—The legatees were set up by 1st defendant, and plaintiff, to avoid any possible defect, brought in all the persons named by 1st defendant in her list, dated 11th February 1906. Whether other legatees exist or not is not known. The Will itself is not produced and no legacy is proved. If there are legatees, plaintiff is interested in proving the debt even against them in order that there might be no impediment when he proceeds against the assets. But he has joined all those whose names were disclosed.

So, I find the issue in the negative.

Sixth issue.—Fifth defendant was given out by 1st defendant as one of the legatees.

Plaintiff had no other means of knowledge and he had to remove all defect of parties. If 5th defendant is not a legatee he has only to retire. If any costs are due to him, the same must be paid by 1st defendant and not by plaintiff.

Seventh issue.—Somehow no specific issue has been raised on plaintiff's right to claim the higher rate of interest as he has done. But the objection is shadowed forth in para. 4 of 1st defendant's written statement. The provision as to a higher rate of interest as from the date of the bond and not merely from date of default (here plaintiff has claimed it from date of the original obligation itself, i.e., the date of sale) is ordinarily held to be penal and plaintiff is entitled only to reasonable compensation. But I do not regard the terms of Exhibit A as stipulating for payment of the enhanced rate from the date of sale or of the bond itself (in respect of the 2nd and subsequent instalments). In any view, $6\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. is a moderate rate of interest and here I allow it from 1st February 1904 on the amount then due. Prior to that date interest is allowed only at 4 per cent. per annum.

Subject to this deduction in interest, the rest of the amount sued for is decreed in terms of section 88, Transfer of Property Act, with costs thereon with interest, with liberty to apply under section 90. Defendants to bear their several costs.

(1) 9 Bom. L. R. 199; 31 B. 244.

The defendants appealed to the High Court.

Mr. K. Balamakunda Aiyar, for the Appellants.

Mr. J. L. Rozario, Government Pleader, for the 1st Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appeal relates only to one instalment of the debt due. The appellant's Vakil says it may be taken to mean the last or 8th instalment. On the construction of the document A, we are of opinion that the appellant's contention is well founded. There is no provision in the document that, in default of payment of any of the instalments, the whole debt shall become due. When default is committed, the creditor is entitled to sell the property and apply the proceeds of the sale to the balance of the debt due. We are of opinion that the word 'due' in the context means payable. The whole debt was not due in this case at the same time. This is made clear by the next provision, that, if the sale does not realize what is due to the creditor, the debtor's other properties might be proceeded against for the balance then due. We must, therefore, allow the appeal and modify the decree of the lower Court by dismissing the suit so far as it relates to the last instalment with proportionate costs thereon both here and in the lower Court. The plaintiff will have his costs in the lower Court on the remainder of the claim. The appellant will not have any costs in this Court on the portion of the appeal relating to costs.

Appeal allowed: Decree varied.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of Madura, in A. S. No. 70 of 1910, presented against that of the District Munsif of Madura, in Civil Suit No. 375 of 1908.

FACTS.—The material facts appear from the following extracts from the Munsif's judgment:—

"This is a suit to recover Rs. 300 as damages and to obtain an injunction."

"The defendant and one Vasudeva Iyen had taken up from one A. L. A. R. Arunachalam Chettiyar the right of cutting and appropriating the leaves of certain plants within a specified area. The defendant and the said Vasudeva Aiyan have executed a document in respect thereof. But no document has been executed in their favour or by any one on behalf of the said Chettiyar."

"The case in the plaint shortly is that the defendant agreed to transfer and transferred to the plaintiff his interest in the transaction for a consideration of Rs. 40 and receiving the said Rs. 40 and another sum of Rs. 25, being one half of the amount left in deposit with the said Chettiyar by the defendant and the said Vasudeva Iyen under their agreement, consented that the plaintiff should execute a document as to the same in favour of the defendant, that, accordingly, the plaintiff executed such document and handed it to the defendant, that the defendant received the same but has subsequently not allowed the plaintiff to enjoy the profits of the transaction and appropriated to himself his share of the profits and that, therefore, the defendant is liable to pay to the plaintiff Rs. 300 assessed as the value of such damages and that an injunction should be granted restraining the defendant from interfering with the enjoyment by the plaintiff of the profits of the succeeding faslis. At the date of the suit the profits only of Fasli 1317 had been realised. The original document with the Chettiar by the defendant and Vasudeva Aiyan was for five years, that is, Faslis 1315 to 1319. The agreement with the plaintiff was only for Faslis 1317, 1318 and 1319. The plaint asks for damages as to the Fasli 1317 and injunction as to Faslis 1318 and 1319. It is also stated in the plaint that if it is found that the injunction cannot be granted for Faslis 1318 and 1319, damages at the same rate as to Faslis 1317 might be awarded."

"The pleas of the defendant are that there being no document executed by him, the plaintiff has acquired no title, that the suit is barred by limitation and that the suit is not cognizable in the original side. It is also pleaded that the suit is bad for non-joinder of the said Vasudeva Iyen. On the facts it is pleaded that the defendant agreed to transfer his rights to the plaintiff only on condition that the plaintiff procured the signature of the said Vasudeva Iyen in the document which was to be executed by the plaintiff and the plaintiff obtained for the defendant a share in a similar transaction held by the plaintiff's brother, that the plaintiff executed a document and tendered to the defendant the same but without the said attestation and without obtaining for the defendant a share in the transaction held by the brother, that thereupon the defendant refused to accept the document as proper and returned it to the plaintiff and that, therefore, the plaintiff has acquired no right whatever. It is also pleaded that the proper remedy for the plaintiff even upon the facts alleged in the plaint is to ask for joint possession or ejectment but not for damages and that, therefore, the suit is not maintainable. This is the plea in paragraph 6 of the written statement."

"It appears that the original transaction between the defendant and Vasudeva Iyen on the one hand and the Chettiyar on the other has been cancelled by the Chettiar's agent for the reason that the two first mentioned persons did not duly pay the amount payable under the document executed among them. It is also pleaded on behalf of the defendant that, therefore, the plaintiff can have no cause of action under it."

"The written statement raised a vague and general plea of estoppel, but the plea, such as it was, was given up at the time of the issues as appears from the note of my predecessor."

"The issues (which have been settled by my predecessor on the 12th March 1909) are as follows:—

"1. Whether there is a valid lease in favour of the plaintiff?"

[The remaining issues not being material are omitted.]

On the 1st issue, the Munsif made the following observations:—

"1*st Issue*:—The pleadings proceed on the basis that both the transactions amounted to leases. But the essence of a lease is that the supposed lessee should have a right to exclusive occupation of the parcels supposed to be leased. In this case, however, the parties supposed to be lessees are entitled to only to cut and gather a particular crop on the premises. The owner is entitled to put the property to any use not inconsistent with such right of the supposed lessees. Really, what the defendant and Vasudeva Iyen obtained under the document is only a right of profit to enure for five years. It is also a right of exclusive profit because there is a provision in the document between the said Chettyar and them that the former shall not allow any other to gather the same leaves. However this may be, the right acquired by the two persons was nothing more extensive than a profit a prendre.

The question, therefore, is whether it can be considered that the two persons had not acquired that right, because no document has been executed by the Chettiar in their favour. This issue has evidently been raised with reference to the decision in [Turaf Sahib v. Esuf Sahib (1)], which relates to a lease. But there is no provision of law which enacts that an incorporeal right such as a profit could be created only by an instrument in writing. I am aware that section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act requires that a sale of intangible things must be made by registered instruments. But, so far as the transaction between the Chettyar on the one hand and the defendant and Vasudeva Iyen on the other is concerned, it was not a sale or other transfer of incorporeal right. It was the case of a creation de novo of the right. Section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act applies only when an intangible thing in esse is transferred to another. Indeed, in this very case, probably, the transaction between the defendant and the plaintiff might come under section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act. But, so far as the transaction between the Chettyar, on the one hand, and the defendant Vasudeva Iyen, on the other, is concerned, it is clear that section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act does not apply. It is also true that it is enacted in section 8 of the Easements Act that "an easement may be imposed by any one in the circumstances and to the extent in and to which he may transfer his interest in the heritage on which the liability is to be imposed." Under the definition in that Act, the word "easement" includes also a "profit." But this section relates not to the mode by which the easement or profit should be created, but to the extent of the right which an owner could possibly create; for example, if an owner is entitled to a certain property only for life, he could not impose a right of profit on it to enure beyond his own life-time. The object of the section is not to provide that such owner could impose such profit in a particular mode although it was intended to enure only during the life-time of the owner. It follows, therefore, from the above reasoning that it cannot be said that the defendant and Vasudeva Iyen did not acquire any right because no registered instrument was executed on behalf of the Chettyar. Section 17 of the Registration Act, it is hardly necessary to say, does not require a written instrument for any transaction. It only requires that, if a written instrument is executed as to particular transactions, it must be registered. The Registration Act strikes at documents and not transactions. The right to cut and carry the leaves, therefore, became vested in the defendant and the said Vasudeva Iyen by the oral transaction between the agent of the Chettyar and them and the nature and provisions of the transaction are well evidenced by the document executed by them to the Chettiyar (copy Exhibit B).

But the plaintiff's right is somewhat on a different footing. If he has acquired any right, it could only be by a transfer and not by original creation. Section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act, therefore, applies; and it is provided in that section that the sale of an intangible thing can be made only by a registered instrument and the obvious principle enunciated in the said case of Turof Sahib v. Esuf Sahib (1) applies and in order that the plaintiff may acquire a valid title, the registered instrument must be an instrument executed by the transferor, that is, in this case the defendant. There being no such document, the plaintiff has acquired no title. On the 1st issue, I find that the transactions in favour of the defendant and Vasudeva Iyen are neither of them leases and that the plaintiff has acquired no title, as there has been no registered instrument executed by the defendant in his favour as required by section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act."

On appeal, the District Judge reversed the Munsif's finding by the following judgment:—

"The first point for consideration in connection with this appeal is whether what the plaintiff describes as the leases of the right of cutting and appropriating the leaves of certain plants on a certain tract of land are valid transfers of interest in property. I am unable to concur with the District Munsif's views expressed in paras. 21 and 22 of his judgment that the transaction by which the transfer of this right is said to have been effected by Subramania Iyer (as the agent of Arunachellam Chettiar) to the defendant and Vasudeva Iyen stands on a different footing from the transaction by which, it is alleged, a transfer was effected of defendant's interest to the plaintiff. The right was certainly one which existed and was enjoyed by Arunachellam Chettiar at the time when his agent purported to transfer it to the defendant and Vasudeva Iyen and I cannot understand what the District Munsif means by saying that the transfer was a creation de novo of a right. Arunachellam Chettiar had, as lessee of the village, all the rights of a lessee in the land on which the trees grew and inter alia the right to cut the leaves of the trees. It was one of this bundle of rights which his agent transferred to the defendant and Vasudeva Iyen and the right transferred was certainly an existing right or interest in property at the time of transfer. If the transfer by defendant of his share of the right thus acquired to the plaintiff can only be effected by a registered document executed by the transferor it seems to me clear that the transfer of Subramania Iyer to defendant and Vasudeva Iyen could only have been effected in the same way. In determining the effect of the two transactions in question, it is well to determine, first, what was as transferred according to the plaintiff's case. The right to cut the leaves on the plants, which were growing at the time when either transaction was entered into, was only an interest in growing crops which are moveable property and no registered document is necessary to effect the transfer of such an interest. Some crops such as cultivated cotton crops remain on the land for two years and a right to gather cotton during a period of two years from crops which are in existence at the time of the contract is certainly only an interest in moveable property. In the case of the shrubs whose leaves the defendant and Vasudeva Iyen obtained a right to cut for a period of five years, there is no evidence to show how many of these shrubs were growing when they entered into the contract with Arunachellam Chetty's agent but the terms of Exhibit B show that that right was to be exercised with respect to future growths as well as the existing shrubs. The right to cut the former was clearly a right in immoveable property as decided in the rulings in Seeni Chettiar v. Santhanathan Chettiar (2) and Mammikkutti v. Puzhakkal Edom (3). The original transfer of this right, therefore, by Arunachellam Chettiar's agent to defendant and Vasudeva Iyen could only have been effected by a registered document and the same holds good as regards the transfer by defendant to plaintiff.

2. The question is whether such a transfer can only be effected by registered document executed by the person in whom the right was vested at the time of the transfer. In the present case, there are the registered documents, Exhibit B and Exhibit A, which evidence the terms of the contract entered into (1) between Arunachellam Chettiar's agent and defendant and Vasudeva Iyen and (2) defendant and plaintiff, but both these documents are signed only by the transferees and were accepted by, though not signed by, the transferors. They are none the less valid contracts. They are not obnoxious to the Stamp or Registration law. They would certainly operate to convey the transfer of a mere license but more than that was contracted for, viz., a grant of an interest in moveable and immoveable property. I am not prepared to hold that they are inoperative as transfers of such a grant on the strength of the ruling in Turaf Sahib v. Esuf Sahib (1) which deals with the four forms of transfer of property mentioned in the Transfer of Property Act and nothing more. It is settled law that there are other valid modes of transferring property besides those referred to in the Transfer of Property Act and I do not understand why it should be contended that no transfer can be effected unless the transferor signs the instrument evidencing the same. If an instrument evidences a contract by the terms of which the transferor is bound to do or abstain from certain acts and if the effect of his so doing or abstaining secures for the transferee the full enjoyment of an interest in the property which forms the subject-matter of the contract, I fail to see what further is necessary to effect the transfer of that interest or why the instrument should be held to be inoperative as to such transfer.

3. In the present case, I hold that the contracts evidenced by Exhibits B and A are binding on all the parties thereto. Under them, the transferors were bound by implication to abstain from obstructing the transferees from enjoying the right of cutting the leaves directly or indirectly and the transfer of the right, so far as the transferor and transferee are concerned, was thus fully effected in both cases by documents, which are not obnoxious to the provisions of either the Stamp or the Registration law.

4. It has to be observed, however, that, as held in Mammikkutti v. Puzhakkal Edom (3), such grants as those evidenced by Exhibit B and Exhibit A do not carry with them an implied covenant for title or quiet enjoyment (vide page 357 of the ruling).

It remains to be considered whether Exhibit A was given effect to as plaintiff contends. With regard to this point, I entirely differ from the District Munsif's finding on the facts. The contract between the plaintiff and the defendant has been reduced to writing in the original of Exhibit A and, when this is so, oral evidence is not admissible to alter or vary the terms of the contract as therein disclosed. The oral evidence adduced by the defendant has also, in my opinion, not been properly appreciated by the District Munsif for the new case, which defendant for the first time set up in cross-examination, to the effect that a a part of the corsideration for his agreement with the plaintiff was that he should get share in some other transaction in which plaintiff's brother was concerned, is not proved by any other evidence. Further, there is no mention in notice Exhibit F that one of the conditions of the agreement was that the plaintiff should obtain the consent of Vasudeva Iyen to the contract. The recitals in the receipt Exhibit C corroborate plaintiff's evidence that the defendant agreed to accept the original of Exhibit A as embodying the terms of the contract. If defendant refused to abide by the terms of the Exhibit A after that, he was guilty of a breach of the contract.

6. With regard to issue 8, the issue as it stands seem to me to be meaningless because it is admitted on both sides that the original agreement which Arunachellam Chettiar entered into with the defendant and Vasudeva Iyen was cancelled by Arunachellam Chettiar. It is in connection with this cancellation of the original agreement between Arunachellam Chettiar's agent and defendant and Vasudeva Iyen that the ruling in Mammakkutti v. Puzhakkal Edom (3) becomes important. Defendant's contract with plaintiff cannot be presumed to carry with it an implied covenant for title or quiet enjoyment. I hold, therefore, that plaintiff has no claim for damages against defendant after the date when the contract entered into by Arunachellam Chetty's agent was revoked, i.e., for Faslis 1318 and 1319.

7. The District Munsif assesses the damages for Fasli 1317 at Rs. 182 and there is no objection taken to this finding in the Appeal Memo. A further sum of Rs. 25 must be added to this sum on account of the deposit which plaintiff expected to get refunded at the end of the contract.

8. I grant the plaintiff a decree for damages for Rs. 182 plus Rs. 25=Rs. 207 and proportionate costs throughout. In other respects, the appeal is dismissed with costs."

JUDGMENT.—This is a case of transfer by a joint sub-lessee of his interest in the sub-lease. The transfer is of the "umari plants now standing or that may hereafter form in the undermentioned villages," and was, therefore, a transfer of an interest in immoveable property according to the decision in Seeni Chettiar v. Santhanathan Chettiar (2). Therefore, it can only be made by a registered instrument executed by the transferor. The recent decision in Syed Ajam Sahib v. Ananthanarayana Iyer (4) does not apply as the document before us is not a lease, and we are not prepared to extend it. We allow the appeal and restore the decree of the District Munsif with costs here and in the lower Appellate Court.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 199 (1) (b)—Decision of Revenue Court—Res judicata.

Section 199 of the Agra Tenancy Act, 1901, is confined to questions of title to land.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Shahjahanpur, dated the 16th June 1911.

Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji, for the Appellant.

Mr. Abdul Raoof, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the respondent for possession of a plot of land No. 817/2 and 20 trees standing on the plot. The first Court gave the respondent a decree for possession of the land but dismissed her claim to the trees. On appeal her claim to the trees also was allowed by the District Judge.

The facts are fully stated in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court. It will be sufficient to give a short summary of them here. Ahmad Hossein and Nuruddin owned land including No. 817, on which Ahmad Hossein planted a grove. Ahmad Hossein was succeeded by his daughter Tausifunnissa who in January 1895 sold part of her zemindari to Wahiduddin husband, of the respondent. The sale-deed stated expressly that groves were included. In September 1898, a partition was effected between Tausifunnissa and Wahiduddin by which No. 817 was allotted to the latter and Fakhruddin a son of Nuruddin already mentioned. In December 1899, Tausifunnissa transferred her property including No. 817 to Taufikunnissa the present appellant. In 1908, there was another partition at which the plot was subdivided and No. 817/2 was allotted to the mahal of the respondent and Shafi Ahmad the latter being appointed lambardar. All this time the appellant had remained in possession of the plot as a tenant. In 1909 Shafi Ahmad as lambardar sued her for possession of the trees. The Munsif, whose judgment is dated June 10th, 1909, dismissed that suit holding that the appellant was the owner of the trees. At about the same time Shafi Ahmad again as lambardar sued in the Revenue Court for the ejectment of the appellant. On August 3, 1899, an Assistant Collector allowed the claim as far as the land was concerned but excepted the trees from the operation of his order saying that it had been decided by a competent Court that the trees belonged to the appellant. In 1910 there was a partition between Shafi Ahmad and the respondent at which No. 817/2 was allotted to the respondent. The present suit was instituted by the latter in September 1910. It originally embraced a claim to possession of the whole plot on the allegation that although the appellant had been ejected by the Revenue Court, she had re-entered on the land. We are concerned now with the claim to the trees only.

In the Courts below and here, the appellant has urged that her title to the trees is res judicata under the decision in the Civil Suit of 1909. The final decision in that case is that of the High Court and it is clear, as the learned District Judge has pointed out, that the High Court did not decide the question of the title to the trees. It confirmed the dismissal of the suit on the ground that whether the trees belonged to the appellant or not she could not be deprived of the enjoyment of them while she remained tenant of the land. In this Court it has been argued that question of title is res judicata under the decision of the Assistant Collector of August 3, 1909. We were referred to section 196 of the Tenancy Act and the decisions in Beni Pande v. Raja Kausal Kishori (1) and Bihari v. Sheobalak(2). In the first place, the Assistant Collector did not decide any question of title. He declined to do so saying that the question had already been decided by a competent Court. It is clear that he did not act under section 199 (1)(b). He relied upon the decisions of the Munsif and Subordinate Judge in the Suit of 1909 which, as already explained, were not confirmed in their entirety by the High Court. He relied also upon a decision of the Revenue Court but the learned Advocate for the appellant has been unable to show us what that decision was or when it was pronounced. Next the dispute before the Assistant Collector did not relate to land as defined in the Tenancy Act and section 199 is confined to questions of title to land. We must, therefore, hold that the question of the title to the trees is not res judicata.

It has not been suggested that the appellant has acquired title to the trees by long continued adverse possession. The appellant is, therefore, in no better position than was Tausifunnissa who transferred the plot to her. Ahmad Hossein, father of Tausifunnissa, held the land on which he planted the trees jointly with his co-sharer, Nuruddin. Tausifunnissa succeeded to his rights whatever they were. When at the partition between Tausifunnissa and Wahiduddin the plot was assigned to the latter the trees presumably went with the land and Wahiduddin became the owner of the trees. There is nothing to suggest that the trees did not pass to him except the fact that Tausifunnissa remained in possession of the plot It has been found, however, that Tausifunnissa and after her the appellant were tenants of the plot. In the Civil Suit of 1909 it seems to have been suggested that Tausifunnissa must be regarded as having been the owner of the trees because Wahiduddin witnessed the deed of gift of December 1899. This point has not been raised in the present case and cannot be taken up now. It is a fact that the appellant and Tausifunnissa before her have held possession of the trees for a large number of years but that may be explained on the ground that they were tenants of the plot. The appellant has failed to establish a title to the tree. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Mortgage by conditional sale—Foreclosure—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Sch. II, Arts. 135, 144, 147—Limitation Act (XIV of 1859), s. 1, cl. 12—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 30, Sch. I, Art. 135.

RAM DAWAR RAI v. BHIRGU RAI.

A mortgage by conditional sale was executed in 1830 with a provision that the mortgagee would be entitled to enter into possession of the property if the mortgage-debt was not paid on a certain date in 1850. The debt was not paid on that date. No application under Regulation VII of 1806 was made for foreclosure of the mortgaged property. On 11th of July 1910, the mortgagee brought a suit for foreclosure:

Held, that the suit was barred by limitation.

The cause of action arose on the mortgagor's failure to pay the mortgage-money on the due date in 1850 and the mortgagee's right to possession of the property mortgaged was extinguished under section 1, clause 12 of Act XIV of 1859 as soon as twelve years had elapsed from the due date and the subsequent creation of foreclosure suits could not revive the extinct right.

Section 31 of the Limitation Act, IX of 1908, had, therefore, no application and the suit was barred by Article 135 of the Limitation Act.

Srinath Das v. Khetter Mohun Singh, 16 C. 693 at p. 700; 16 I. A. 85, followed.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Ghazipur, dated the 16th February 1911.

Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji, for the Appellants.

Mr. A. Kareem (with him Mr. Surendro Nath Sen), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On Sawan Sudi Ashtami 1237 (28th July 1830), a mortgage by conditional sale was executed by Pabarn Rai and Chittra Bal Rai, predecessors in-title of the defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3, in favour of Bachan Rai, predecessor-in-title of the plaintiffs, to secure a sum of Rs. 800. The deed contains a provision to the effect that the mortgagee shall be entitled to possession at the end of 1257 (18th of September 1850) on default of payment of the mortgage-debt on the due date. I may note here that due date in the judgment of the first Court is stated as the 4th of October, 1850 and in that of the lower Appellate Court as the 4th of April 1850.

No application for foreclosure was ever made under Regulation XVII of 1806, but on 11th of July 1910, a suit for foreclosure was instituted. Limitation was pleaded in defence. The Courts below accepted it and dismissed the suit.

The contention in second appeal is that the suit is not time-barred. The substance of the argument of the learned Vakil for the appellants is as follows:—

The mortgage by conditional sale in suit was executed when Regulation XVII of 1806 was in force. Section 8 of that Regulation allowed a mortgagee to apply for foreclosure on the expiration of the stipulated period or at any time subsequent before the sum lent is re-paid and fixed no time within which to apply. With regard to the language of the section, a Full Bench of this Court in Buldeen v. Golab Koonwer (1) held that there was no limitation for an application to foreclose under Regulation XVII of 1806. The Limitation Acts of 1859 and 1871 contain no express provisions for foreclosure suits nor was there anything in section 28 of Act XV of 1877 to extinguish the mortgagee's right to take foreclosure proceedings. Such being the case, the right to foreclose was in existence when Act XV of 1877 came into force and Article 147 of that Act gave to the mortgagee the right to sue for foreclosure 60 years from the date when the money secured by the conditional sale became due i.e., the 18th of September 1850. The suit, therefore, which was brought on the 11th of July 1910 was, according to the provisions of section 31 of the present Limitation Act (IX of 1908), not barred by limitation.

Article 135 of Act XV of 1877 has no application to a foreclosure suit. In terms it applies to a suit for possession as a mortgagee and there is a radical distinction between possession as a mortgagee and possession as an owner.

The Calcutta High Court cases, in Denonath Gangooly v. Nursing Proshad Dass (2), Ram Chunder Ghoasul v. Juggutmanmohiney Dobee (3), Modun Mohun Chowdhry v. Ashad Ally Beparee (4) and Shurnomoyee Dasi v. Srinath Das (5), proceed on the assumption that when a mortgage by conditional sale contains a stipulation that on failure to pay on the due date the mortgagee is entitled to possession as an absolute owner and discard the provisions of section 8 of Regulation XVII of 1806. Strictly speaking, they have no bearing on the limitation applicable to a foreclosure suit. The Privy Council case in Srinath Das v. Khetter Mohun Singh (6) is based on the notion of an English mortgage in which the mortgagee becomes the absolute owner of the property mortgaged with a liability to re-convey on the happening of certain events.

The cases in Murlidhar v. Kanchan Singh (7) and Karim Dad Khan v. Mustaqim Khan (8) are in conflict with the Full Bench case in Buideen v. Golab Koonwer (1). That Full Bench case had not been overruled. The learned Vakil for the respondent urges that the rulings of the Calcutta and the Allahabad High Courts, which have been referred to by the learned Vakil for the appellants, expressly lay down that twelve years' limitation applies to the present case, that the Privy Council case in Srinath Das v. Khetter Mohun Singh (6) is conclusive on the point and that the cases in Janki v. Musammat Jai Dei (9) and Moman v. Ishri Pershad (10) are to the same effect.

Apart from the case law on the subject, there is much force in the contention of the learned Vakil for the appellants that there is no limitation for an application to foreclose under Regulation XVII of 1806 and that the present suit is not barred by time, but the rulings of this Court, the Calcutta High Court, of Oudh, of the Punjab and of the Privy Council are against him.

So far back as in Denonath Gangooly v. Nursing Proshed Dass (2), in a suit upon mortgage by conditional sale providing that the mortgage-debt should be paid on the 9th of July 1855 and that on default of payment the deed of conditional sale should become one of absolute sale and that the mortgagee should thereupon acquire the absolute proprietary right, it was held that the cause of action arose on the 9th of July 1855, when default was made in payment of the mortgage-debt and the suit not having been instituted within twelve years from that date, was barred by section 1 clause 12 Act XIV of 1859 and that no new cause of action arose by reason of the foreclosure proceedings on the expiry of the year of grace in August 1868.

Since the decision in the above case, the trend of authority in the Calcutta High Court has been in the same direction regarding suits on mortgages by conditional sale which contain a stipulation to the effect that on failure to pay on the due date the mortgagee will be entitled to possession. In Ram Chunder Ghosaul v. Juggutmanmohiney Dobee (3), it was held that the suit by a mortgagee under a conditional sale was barred by Act XIV of 1859 as being brought more than 12 years after the cause of action arose and that that Act not only barred the remedy but extinguished the right and that, therefore, the plaintiff could derive no advantage from the extended period of limitation given by Article 149 of Act IX of 1871 which repealed the Act of 1859.

Modun Mohun Chowdhry v. Ashad Ally Beparee (4) expressly draws a distinction between the conditional sales in which there is a stipulation that the mortgagee on default of payment of the mortgage debt is to take possession of the property and those in which there is no such stipulation and lays down that in the former case he has twelve years from the date of default and that in the latter the right of the mortgagee to take possession does not accrue until after the expiration of the year of grace.

Shurnomoyee Dasi v. Srinath Das (5) rules that a mortgage in the English form between Hindus in the mofussil outside Calcutta has always been treated by the Courts as a mortgage by conditional sale and that under Act XIV of 1859 a mortgagee was ordinarily bound to bring his suit within twelve years from the date of default and was barred thereafter. This is an important case. It went up in appeal to the Privy Council and the decision of the High Court was upheld. See Srinath Das v. Khettar Mohun Singh (6). In Girwar Singh Thakur v. Narain Singh (11) the following important passage occurs:—"Under the Acts of 1859 and 1871, the law of limitation governing suits by mortgagees under kutkobala or bill of conditional sale was as follows:—Where a kut-kobala gave to the mortgagee the right to recover possession on default of payment, the period of limitation for a suit based upon this stipultion was 12 years, see Brojonath Kundu Chowdhry v. Khelat Chandra Ghose (12), Article 135 of the Act of 1871. In Courts not established by Royal Charter in the Presidency of Bengal, the period of limitation for a suit for possession of the mortgaged property, upon the conditional sale becoming absolute under the provisions of Regulation XVII of 1806, was 12 years from the date when the sale became absolute, Ghinaram Dobey v. Ram Monaruth Dobey (13); Madun Mohun Chowdhry v. Ashad Ally Beparee (4). But in the cases where the right of the mortgagee has been extinguished by the law of limitation, the proceedings under Regulation XVII of 1806 did not give a fresh start. See Madun Mohun Chowdhry v. Ashad Ally Beparee (4). Now in the year 1877 when the present Act was passed, foreclosure suits were not known in the Courts not established by Royal Charter in the Bengal Presidency. In the year 1877, therefore, suits under kut-kobalas or conditional bills of sale for possession of the mortgaged property were not covered by Article 147. The period of limitation for such suits, which was 12 years under the Act of 1871, was consequently not altered by the new Act. Srinath Das v. Khetter Mohun Singh (6) is the most important case on the point. Their Lordships of the Privy Council in it remark:—"From this decree sixteen of the defendants appealed to the High Court. The Court was of opinion that the mortgagor's right to possession determined on the 17th of February 1866; that the mortgagee's right to bring a suit for possession was barred on the 17th of February 1878; that with the right to possession was lost the right to take foreclosure proceedings under the Regulation of 1806; and that suits for foreclosure were then unknown in the Bengal Mofussil. They, therefore, concluded that the suit was barred by force of Article 135 and they dismissed it against all defendants except Huri Narain.....No one has appeared, and their Lordships have not had the advantage of hearing argument in support of the decree; but after taking time to consider, their Lordships find themselves in agreement with the High Court.....If Article 135 is the one applicable to the case, the 12 years there allowed ran out in the month of August 1878 at the latest. In order to succeed then, the plaintiff must show that Article 135 is wholly inapplicable to this case. To do so it is contended that Article 135 applies only to those cases in which a mortgagee desires to take possession in that character; that if he wishes to foreclose he may do so within the time limited by Article 147, that on the 1st July 1882 the right to maintain foreclosure suits was conferred on Bengal mortgagees; and that the Limitation Act immediately fastened on those suits, and provided 60 years as the limit for them.

"To this argument it is sufficient for the present case to answer that in the year 1878 when no suit for foreclosure could be brought, the right of Shama Sundari to possession was wholly extinguished, and the title of the purchasers under Huri Narain freed from mortgage. The subsequent creation of suits for foreclosure could not except by clear enactment revive the extinct right, and in effect the clear enactment is the other way for section 2 clause (c) of the Transfer of Property Act says that nothing therein shall affect 'any right or liability arising out of a legal relation' constituted before this Act comes into force, or any relief 'in respect of such right or liability.' Their Lordships consider that within the meaning of this section the rights of the purchasers to unencumbered ownership of their plots have arisen out of the legal relations between them and Huri Narain and Shama Sundari. It is, therefore, unnecessary to discuss what has been so much urged at the bar, viz., the effect to be attributed to Article 147 a provision which appeared for the first time in the Act of 1877."

The ruling not only lays down that Article 135 applies to the present case but answers almost all the points urged by the learned Vakil for the appellants. Janki v. Musammat Jai Dei (9) was a suit on a mortgage by conditional sale, dated the 3rd May 1863, in which the stipulation was that in default of payment on the due date the mortgagee would be entitled to possession. Article 135 of the Limitation Act of 1877 was applied. Wells, A. J. C., had considerable doubts about the case but the rulings of the Calcutta High Court and especially the ruling of the Privy Council in Srinath Das v. Khetter v. Mohun Singh (6) made him hold that the suit was barred by limitation.

Regulation XVII of 1806 is still in force in the Punjab and in a suit on a conditional sale [Moman v. Ishri Pershad (10)], in which foreclosure proceedings were instituted more than 12 years after the determination of the mortgagor's right to possession, it was held that the suit, not having been brought within 12 years of the date fixed in the mortgage for the payment of the mortgage money, was barred by limitation either under Article 135 or Article 144 of the Limitation Act of 1877. In Nagar v. Saudagar (14), it was held that there was no time limit for the foreclosure of a mortgage by conditional sale and that a mortgagee in possession was entitled to take out such proceedings at any time during the subsistence of his mortgage and the learned Judges who decided the latter case distinguished the former on the ground of possession. Our own Court in Murlidhar v. Kanchan Singh (7), although the case of Buldeen v. Golab Koonwer (1) was referred to by the learned Subordinate Judge in his judgment, held that in a suit for foreclosure upon a mortgage by conditional sale executed in 1846, the plaintiff's remedy was barred by reason of Act XIV of 1859 during the currency of that Act and that the time within which he was entitled to maintain an action for foreclosure, if he had taken the proper proceedings, expired in 1863. The learned Judges disregarded the distinction drawn by the Calcutta High Court in cases in which the mortgagee was entitled to possession in default of payment on the due date and the cases in which he was not. They said:—"It now appears that no proceedings were taken under that Regulation. But even if they had been taken, we should be prepared to hold that the cause of action was the original non-payment of the money on the due date and that the provisions in Regulation XVII of 1806, which was passed for the protection of the mortgagor, could not create a fresh cause of action.

In Karimdad Khan v. Mustaqim Khan (8), the view taken in Murlidhar v. Kanchan Singh (7) was accepted and the case of Buldeen v. Golab Koonwer (1) was sought to be distinguished on a ground which is difficult to follow.

We, however, are bound by the ruling of the Privy Council in Srinath Das v. Khetter Mohun Singh (6) and must hold that the cause of action in the case before us arose on the failure to pay the mortgage-money on the due date, i.e., the 18th of September 1850, that the mortgagee's right to possession of the property mortgaged was extinguished under section 1, clause (12), Act XIV of 1859, as soon as twelve years had elapsed from the due date and that the subsequent creation of foreclosure suits could not revive the extinct right. Section 31 of the present Limitation Act (IX of 1908) has, therefore, no application and the suit is barred by Article 135 of the present Limitation Act, corresponding with Article 135 of the Limitation Act of 1877.

The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Appeal dismissed.

Gift of mere proprietary rights or usufruct for maintenance—Restraint on alienation by donee, condition as to—Sale in invitum—Voluntary transfer.

The predecessor-in-title of the plaintiffs-appellants executed a deed in 1873 in favour of the ancestors of the defendants-respondents by which certain land was granted to them for their maintenance without any power to transfer.

The deed authorized the grantees to cultivate the land and to appropriate the usufruct thereof, but enjoined that if they wanted to transfer their rights, they must do so to the grantor or his descendants. It also provided that if the donee at any time died childless, the land was to revert to the donor or to his heirs:

Held, (1) that the deed was not a gift of full proprietary rights but only of usufruct of the land for the purposes of maintenance;

(2) that the deed not being a gift of proprietary rights, the conditions in restraint of alienation were valid, as they formed an essential portion of the grant itself;

(3) that the sale in execution of a decree based on the mortgage of the said lands could not be considered as a sale 'in invitum', which could override the provisions of the deed of grant but must be treated as a voluntary transfer, the decree and sale being the necessery consequences of such transfer and as proceeding directly out of the same.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are as follows. The village of Dakkhin Gaon was transferred on the 2nd of August 1873 by Jwala Singh and Gulzari Singh to Lalta Bakhsh Singh. It is stated that the said village had originally belonged to the ancestors of Lalta Bakhsh Singh, that they had assigned it to the ancestors of Gulzari Singh and Jwala Singh for their maintenance, that Gulzari Singh and Jwala Singh had borrowed certain money from Lalta Bakhsh Singh and had pledged in security to him the interests which had been assigned to them in the village giving him a deed of conditional sale, and that, the money not having been re-paid, Lalta Bakhsh Singh had foreclosed, and obtained possession of the village on the 2nd of August 1873. On 4th August 1873, Lalta Bakhsh Singh executed a deed in favour of Gulzari Singh and Jwala Singh by which he conveyed to them certain interests in 400 kham bighas in the same village on certain conditions. The representative in-interest of Gulzari Singh and Jwala Singh is now Kalka Singh, defendant-respondent No. 6, and the representatives-in-intereset of Lalta Bakhsh Singh, are now Jagdeo Bakhsh Singh, Maheshar Bakhsh Singh and Bindra Bakhsh Singh, plaintiffs-appellants. It appears that the defendant-respondent No. 6 executed a deed of mortgage of 6 bighas 17 biswas standard (pucca) in favour of defendants-respondents Nos. 1 to 5. This area is included in the 400 bighas in question. The latter sued on the basis of this mortgage-deed and obtained a decree in execution of which the 6 bighas, 17 biswas in question were put to sale under a proclamation of sale, dated 10th July 1909. The plaintiffs-appellants instituted a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Sitapur, on the allegation that Gulzari Singh and Jwala Singh and the defendant-respondent No. 6 had no transferable right in the land and asked for a declaration that the 6 bighas 17 biswas decreed to be sold were not liable to sale in execution of the decree in question. The learned Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit on the ground that the defendant respondent No. 6 was proprietor of the land in question with full power of alienation. The plaintiffs-appellants preferred an appeal to the Court of the District Judge, Sitapur. The learned District Judge dismissed the appeal on two grounds. His first ground was in the main one of agreement with the learned Subordinate Judge. His second ground was that, in any circumstances, the property had been transferred by a sale "in invitum", and that no restrictions in the original deed of 4th August 1873, could operate to save the 6 bighas and 17 biswas in question from sale. The plaintiffs-appellants have come before this Court in second appeal, and the appeal has been referred by an order of Mr. Evans, late Judicial Commissioner, to a Bench of two Judges for decision.

The main contest has naturally been as to the interpretation of the terms of the deed of 4th August 1873. We find that the ancestors of Lalta Bakhsh Singh had originally granted the village of Dakkhin Gaon to the ancestors of Gulzari Singh and Jwala Singh, who appear to have been their relatives, for their maintenance, that the latter persons had subsequently borrowed money from Lalta Bakhsh Singh and assigned in consideration thereof their rights as grantees by meaus of a deed of conditional sale, that Lalta Bakhsh Singh had foreclosed on this deed and obtained possession of the village on the 2nd of August 1873. On the 4th August 1873, he executed a deed in favour of Gulzari Singh and Jwala Singh.

The following is a translation of the deed:—

"I, Lalta Bakhsh son of Raghunath Singh, Talukdar of Riwan and Panseri, mouza Dakkhin Gaon, Pargana Munwan, Tahsil Mahmudabad, and of Bari District Sitapur. Whereas from ancient times the village Dakkhin Gaon, Pargana Munwan, Tahs Mahmudabad, was given for their mainten ance by my ancestors to those of Gulzar Singh and Jwala Singh, sons of Pitam Singh, who have been in possession and enjoyment thereof up to this time, and whereas on the 1st August 1868 it was mortgaged by a deed of conditional sale to me, the declarant, in lieu of Rs. 3,950 now on the present date foreclosure has been obtained on that deed for Rs. 6,000, the previous and the present consideration, and I, the declarant, have obtained absolute possession and occupation thereof and whereas these persons are the descendants of the same stock as my family and there remains nothing now for their support, I, the declarant, of my own accord and free will, do hereby give to them 400 bighas kham land, numbered and bounded below, without any power to transfer the same to a stranger, for their maintenance from 1281 F. and empower them that they and their descendants should take possession thereof themselves having entered upon the said lands, should cultivate the same as they like, and should appropriate profits thereof having nothing to do with the rent or the village expenses thereof. Out of the aforesaid land the rabi land shall be irrigated from the tanks numbered below, in proportion to the entire village to the extent of 1/8th, i.e., the donees shall irrigate 1/8th of the land from the water of the tanks and the rest by digging kham wells and shall have nothing to do with the fish, water-nuts and other zemindari dues of these tanks; and if per chance the donees or their descendants ever desire to transfer the said rights conveyed by gift, they shall not be competent to do so, i.e., to mortgage, sell and give the same to any person other than me, the declarant, or my descendants. If at any time (God forbid) there remains no child begotten by the donee, then the said land shall revert to my and my descendants' ownership and none else shall have any claim thereto. Wherefore I have executed this deed of gift so that it may serve as an authority and be of use."

The learned Subordinate Judge and the learned District Judge considered that this document should be interpreted as a deed by which full proprietary rights were transferred by gift, with a condition super-added whereby the power of alienation was restrained, and whereby in the event of failure of issue of the donees the proprietary right reverted to the donor and his issue. The same view was pressed by the learned Counsel for the contesting respondents. We consider that this is not the correct interpretation to be placed on the terms of the deed. We read it to be a deed of gift, but not a deed of gift by which full proprietary rights were transferred, and take it to be a deed of gift, by which the right to the usufruct of certain fields for the purpose of maintenance was assigned subject to two limitations, one of which was that the assignee should have no power to alienate the right assigned, and the other of which was that in the event of the failure of the issue of the assignees, the right of usufruct should revert to the grantor and his issue. Interpreting the document as we do, it is immaterial to enter into most of the points raised in the lower Courts and in argument in this appeal. Had the deed, in our opinion, transferred full proprietary right, there could have been no doubt as to the fact that the restrictions on alienation would have been null and void on the principles of equity and policy which are now embodied in the provisions of Act IV of 1882, and which had legal authority in Oudh before that Act was passed. If the transfer had been of complete proprietary right, a condition to restrain alienation would have been repugnant to the nature of the transaction, and would, according to recognized and binding principles of equity, have been inherently void and of no effect. But on the interpretation which we place on this document, which interpretation is in effect that it transferred the usufruct only, there is nothing repugnant in the imposition of these conditions which form an essential portion of the grant itself. We do not find that the conditions contained in this deed are in any way opposed to the principles of the Hindu Law that binds the parties, or to any statutory enactment or to the general principles of equity and good conscience. In the circumstances we consider that these limitations are good and binding, and are, therefore, in accord with the contentions of the plaintiffs-appellants on this point.

We are unable to accept the view of the learned District Judge that the transfer in question, being of the nature of a transfer "in invitum", was a good transfer which must override any provisions contained in the deed of 4th August 1873. The learned Counsel for the contesting respondents has stated that he has been unable to support this portion of the learned District Judge's judgment, and the arguments for the plaintiffs-appellants have remained unimpeached. They are briefly that this was not a transfer "in invitum", but that the defendant-respondent No. 6 had made a voluntary transfer which he had no title to make, and that the subsequent decree, and sale were the necessary consequences of this voluntary transfer and could only be taken as proceeding directly out of the same. With this view, we are in complete accord. We decree this appeal accordingly and direct that the contesting respondents shall pay their own costs in all Courts and those of the plaintiffs-appellants.

Appeal allowed.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 124 OF 1911.

April 16, 1912.

Musammat SUBHADRÁ—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

TRIBHUAN DAT AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS RESPONDENTS.

Second appeal—Finding as to custom—Right to challenge—Custom, elements necessary to establish—Reversioners, right of, to sue for declaration—Daughter's son alive, effect of.

It is open to an appellant in second appeal to show that the evidence relied upon by the other side, even if believed and considered sufficient, does not, in law amount to the proof of an alleged custom.

Kakarla Abbayya v. Raja Venkata Papayya Rao, 29 M. 24; 16 M. L. J. 8; Hashim Ali v. Abdul Rahman, 23 A. 698; 3 A. L. J. 467; A. W. N. (1906) 187; Paragi v. Baiju, 4 O. C. 71, referred to.

A custom to be valid must be ancient, continuous, reasonable and definite and all these elements must be established by clear and unambiguous evidence.

Mussammat Parbati Kuar v. Rani Chandrapal, 8 O. C. 94, followed.

Where the evidence established the custom to be only 16 years old and where the instances proved were so few in number that they could not establish the continuity of the custom, it could not be held to have been established in law.

Where the custom as to the exclusion of daughters is not established and the reversioners sue to set aside a deed of gift executed by the widow, their suit is not maintainable in the presence of a daughter and especially a daughter's son.

Uda v. Durgadin, 5 O. C. 360, Rajadei v. Umed Singh, 9 A. L. J. 158; 34 A. 207; 13 Ind. Cas. 632, distinguished.

Appeal against an order of the District Judge of Gonda, dated 24th January 1911, upholding that of the Munsif of Gonda, dated 2nd December 1910.

Babu Basudeo Lal, for the Appellant.

Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the reversioners of one Ramdas Pande for a declaration that a transfer made by the widow of the latter in favour of her daughter was not binding upon them.

It appears that Ramdas Pande was the last male owner of 8-annas share in Mouza Nibia Paraspur. He died some time in 1908, leaving a widow Musammat Bishra, two daughters, Musammat Subhadra and Parbhudei and a grandson Balak Ram, the son of Musammat Subhadra. Balak Ram is now 9 years old. Musammat Bishna executed a deed of gift on the 4th. of June 1910, in favour of her daughter Musammat Subhadra in respect of 4-annas out of the 8-anna share of Ramdas Pande in Mouza Nibia Paraspur.

The plaintiffs-respondents instituted a suit in the Court of the Munsif of Gonda on the 5th of July 1910 against Musammat Bishna and Musammat Subhadra on the allegation that they were the next reversioners of Ramdas, as under a custom obtaining in the family, daughters and daughter's sons were excluded from inheritance, and that the deed of the 4th of June 1910 had been made without any legal necessity, which they prayed should be declared null and void as against them.

The claim was resisted by the two ladies who denied the custom set up in the plaint and alleged that the deed of the 4th June 1910 was made for legal necessity. They further said that Musammat Bishna had inherited the property with unrestricted power of alienation and that the suit was not maintainable because Ramdas Pande's daughters and grandsons were alive. The status of the plaintiffs-respondents was also denied, but subsequently in the pleadings it was admitted that they were the remote reversioners.

The learned Munsif decreed the claim holding the custom set by the plaintiffs-respondents to have been proved. Musammat Subhadra alone preferred an appeal to the District Judge who affirmed the decree of the first Court. She has preferred a second appeal to this Court.

She attacks the decree against her on the ground that the custom alleged by the plaintiffs-respondents does not obtain in her family.

On behalf of the respondents, a preliminary objection is taken to the effect that the question of the proof of custom cannot be raised in second appeal. It is said that as the lower Courts have come to the conclusion on the evidence on the record that the alleged custom is proved, it is not open to the appellant to dispute that finding. In support of this contention the case of Paragi v. Baiju (1) is referred to. The particular passage in that case upon which the learned Counsel for the respondents relies is this:—"It follows from what I have said above that the question whether a particular wajib ul-arz is a sufficient proof of a custom recorded in it, is a question not of law but one of fact as it is a question as to the weight or value to be attached to it. The District Judge held that the wajib-ul-arz in this case, if not rebutted, was conclusive proof of the custom. Here I think that he was wrong. But he has also looked at the wajib-ul-arz in another way, that is to say, in the way in which I think he should have looked at it, namely, to see what weight should be attached to it as proof of the custom, merely as a piece of evidence. Looking at it in that way, he was of opinion that the entry in it was sufficient proof of the custom, if the entry was not rebutted. Sitting as a Court of second appeal, I am not competent to consider whether the District Judge should or should not have attached as much value to the wajib-ul-arz as he has done, dealing with it on the assumption that it is not conclusive proof, even if not rebutted."

For the appellant, the reply is that the custom is a mixed question of fact and law and whenever it is in dispute, the Court can in a second appeal examine the evidence bearing on it both as to the credibility of the evidence and the weight to be attached to it. In support of his argument, the learned Counsel for the appellant refers to Kakarla Abbayya v. Raja Venkata Papayya Rao (2) and Hashim Ali v. Abdul Rahman (3).

In the Madras case it was held that "although the provisions of section 584 of the Civil Procedure Code disallow a second appeal with reference to findings of fact, yet the existence or non-existence of a usage having the force of law is unaffected by such disallowance. Consequently, it is the duty of the Court, when it has to pronounce an opinion upon such question, to examine the evidence bearing on it, not only as to the sufficiency thereof to establish all the elements required to constitute a valid usage having the force of law but also the credibility of the evidence relied on and the weight due to it."

The Allahabad High Court takes a narrow view. It held in the case mentioned above that: "Where on a question as to the existence or non-existence of a particular custom, the Courts below have acted upon illegal evidence or on evidence which is legally insufficient to establish an alleged custom, the question is one of law, and can be entertained in a second appeal, but if there is legal evidence upon which the lower Courts have pronounced an opinion, the High Court will not in second appeal consider the weight to be attached to that evidence."

The case of Paragi and others(1), relied upon by the respondents, takes a still more limited view of the rule. I must, however, follow that case. The appellant is not entitled to argue that the evidence in support of the custom is insufficient or that it does not prove the custom. But it is open to her to show that the evidence relied upon by the respondents, even if believed and considered sufficient, does not in law amount to the proof of the alleged custom. I have, therefore, to see whether there is legal evidence in support of the custom set up in the plaint. It has been held in more cases than one that a custom to be valid must be ancient, continuous, reasonable and definite and that all these elements must be established by clear and unambiguous evidence. Vide Musammat Parbati Kuar v. Rani Chandrapal Kuar (4).

The respondents examined four witnesses, two of whom describe themselves as distant connections of Ramdas, deceased. The other two are zemindars of the village where the parties live. The witnesses give three instances in which it is said that the daughters' sons were excluded from inheritance by remoter reversioners. The oldest instance is said to have happened only 16 years ago. It is impossible to hold the ancient nature of the custom on the basis of an instance that is only 16 years old, not can it be said that three instances prove the continuity of the custom. I find that there is no legal evidence to prove two of the main elements of a valid custom, namely, its age and continuity. I hold that the custom set up by the respondents has not been proved. This finding would dispose of the appeal but for a contention for the respondents that in spite of their failure to establish the custom set up by them, they can, as the nearest presumptive heirs to the full ownership of the estate of Ramdas, maintain the suit. In support of their contention, they rely on the following cases:—Uda v. Durgadin (5); Rajadei v. Umed Singh (6).

In the first case, it appears that the plaintiffs were the brothers of a deceased Hindu whose widow had created a mortgage of a part of her husband's estate in favour of a third party. The plaintiffs sued the widow and the mortgagee for a declaration that the mortgage was made without legal necessity and was, therefore, void as against them after the death of the widow. The suit was resisted upon the ground among others that the deceased owner of the estate had also left a daughter who was alive and the plaintiffs not being the immediate reversioners could not maintain the suit. It was decided that the plaintiffs, as the nearest presumptive heirs, could maintain the suit without proving that the daughter of the deceased male owner had refused without sufficient cause to sue or had precluded herself by her own act or conduct from suing or had colluded with the widow or was concerned in the alienation.

In the Allahabad case, the facts were that one Nagina died leaving a widow, Musammat Waziri, and a daughter, Rajadei. Musammat Waziri made a gift of the property that came to her from her husband to her grandson Kan Singh, the son of Rajadei. The next male reversioners of Nagina brought a suit to set aside the alienation. One of the pleas in defence was that the suit was not maintainable. It was urged in defence that the existence of Rajadei and the fact that Kan Singh was at the date of the institution of the suit the next reversioner presumptively entitled to the full ownership of the property, were fatal to the maintenance of the suit. The Court disallowed the plea and held that the suit was maintainable.

I do not think that either of these cases helps the respondents. All that was laid down in the Oudh case was that a suit by a remote reversioner could be maintained when the immediate reversioner was a female entitled to a life-estate only. It seems to have been conceded in that case that had the daughter a son born to her prior to the institution of the suit of the presumptive heirs, their suit could not be maintained, as would appear from the following passage:—" It appears that since the appeal was presented, the daughter has given birth to a son. The appellant, therefore, contended that as daughter's son was a nearer reverisonary heir than the plaintiffs, they could not maintain the suit. But the plaintiffs had a right to sue when the suit commenced and that right cannot be taken away by the mere fact that since the commencement of the suit they have ceased to be the nearest male reversionary heirs." Vide Uda v. Durgadin (5).

In the Allahabad case, the reasons for holding that the suit by the presumptive heirs was maintainable seemed to be that such a suit could be brought because the daughter had a life estate only and the daughter's son had colluded with the widow in accepting the transfer from her. Mr. Chamier in support of the second reason quoted the following dictum of their Lordships of the Privy Council from the case of Rani Anand Kunwer v. Court of Wards(7): "If the nearest reversionary heir refuses, without sufficient cause, to institute proceedings, or if he has precluded himself by his own act or conduct from suing or has colluded with the widow or concurred in the act alleged to be wrongful, the next presumptive reversioners would be entitled to sue."

In the present case, the existence of Musammat Subhadra and Parbhudei may not be a bar, but the existence of Balak Ram, in my opinion, is a bar to the maintenance of the suit of the respondents. For he is admittedly the nearest reversionary heir and being a minor cannot be said to have refused without sufficient cause to institute the proceedings to challenge the gift of 4th of June 1910 or to have precluded himself by his own act or conduct from suing or to have colluded with Musammat Bishna or given his consent to the gift by the latter.

For these reasons, I accept the appeal and set aside the decree of the Court below

Babus J. K. Banerji, holding brief of Mr. Aditya Prasad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal against the appellate judgment of the District Judge, Fyzabad. The case has arisen out of a suit for profits brought by one Musammat Habib-un-nissa against Imdad Ali and other defendants. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit. In appeal the learned District Judge reversed the lower Court's order and decreed the plaintiff's claim to the extent of Rs. 85 with proportionate costs. One of the grounds upon which the decree of the lower Appellate Court is attacked here is that the learned Judge acted illegally in receiving certain documentary evidence at the hearing of the appeal merely on the ground that such documentary evidence proved an important point. It is also argued that no fresh documentary evidence ought to have been received without allowing the opposite party some opportunity of rebutting it. It is admitted that, apart from what is stated in the judgment of the learned Judge, there is nothing on the proceedings to show why this additional evidence was admitted during the hearing of the appeal. In Order XLI, rule 27 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it is laid down that wherever additional evidence is allowed to be re-produced by an Appellate Court, the Court shall record the reasons for its admission. In the old Code of Civil Procedure, section 568, it was directed that in cases where additional evidence is admitted by an Appellate Court, the reasons for its admission should be recorded on the Court's proceedings. Order XLI, rule 27 (2), which corresponds to section 568 of the old Code, does not say in so many words that the record of the reasons for the admission of additional evidence should be made on the proceedings but taking into account the language of Order XLI, rule 29, it seems clear that the law contemplates that a record of the reasons and the circumstances in which additional evidence is allowed to be taken should appear on the Court's proceedings. It has been ruled in this Court, in Second Civil Appeal No. 303 of 1903, which was a ruling under the old Code of Civil Procedure, that the law is not complied with merely by the Judge stating in his judgment the reason for admitting additional evidence. This case was decided by Mr. Wells on the 30th June 1904 and in his judgment he pointed out that when section 568 directed that the reasons for the admission of evidence should be recorded on the Court's proceedings, it did not mean in the Court's judgment, which, as Mr. Wells pointed out, might be written weeks later. Mr. Wells referred to the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Sreeman Chunder Dey v. Gopal Chander Chuckerbutty (1). It has been the practice of this Court to require that a separate record of reasons for the admission of additional evidence should always be kept in cases where such evidence is admitted and I see no reason for thinking that the state of the law has been altered since the introduction of the new Code of Civil Procedure. What appears in the present case is this, namely, that the appeal came up for hearing before the learned District Judge on the 13th November 1911. The judgment was written on the 16th November. An application was made at the hearing of the appeal on behalf of the appellant for the admission of certain documentary evidence which, it was stated, had been presented to the Court of first instance but had been refused. The application for the admission of this evidence was supported by an affidavit but, according to the language of the judgment, it would seem that this affidavit was not accepted by the District Judge. It cannot, therefore, be said that this documentary evidence which consists of certain decrees has been properly admitted under the terms of Order XLI, rule 27 (1) (a); nor does the reason recorded by the learned District Judge for the admission of the evidence appear to satisfy the requirements of rule 27 (1)(b). It is not a sufficient reason for admitting additional evidence that such evidence proves a very important point. It is the duty of the parties to produce all the evidence at their disposal in the Court of first instance and it is only for very exceptional reasons that any further evidence should be admitted in the Court of appeal. Another difficulty which presents itself in considering what was done in the Court is this, namely, that so far as appears from the record and from the decrees themselves, it is not apparent that they were admissible in evidence. It is pointed out that on the face of them the decrees do not appear to have been passed between the parties to this suit or their representatives; and further it seems to me reasonable to hold that if the appellant was allowed to put in this further evidence in the Court below, the opposite party was certainly entitled to ask the Judge to receive any evidence which they could produce to rebut it. Had the application for the reception of additional evidence been dealt with in a proper manner, the question of the admissibility of the documents in question would have been decided in a separate proceeding. At the present stage, I am not in a position to say whether or not these decrees were admissible in evidence. As the procedure in the Court below has been irregular, the only course which is open to me now is to set aside the judgment and the decree of the Court below and direct that the appeal be re-heard after considering in a separate proceeding the application of the appellant Habibunnissa for the reception of the additional evidence and anything which the respondents in appeal may have to urge by way of objection to the admission. If the respondents desire to produce any evidence in rebuttal of the additional evidence which Habibunnissa may be allowed to produce, their application must also be considered. The respondents will pay the appellants costs.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Banda, dated 29th June 1911.

The Hon'ble Dr. Sunder Lal, for the Appellants.

Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for pre-emption. The property sold is zemindari. The plaintiffs are owners of isolated plots. They are not co-sharers with the vendors in the sense that they share in the profits of the vendor's property, or the vendors in theirs nor are they jointly responsible for Government revenue. This being the case it lay upon the plaintiffs to prove not only that some custom of pre-emption existed in the village but also that there was a custom of pre-emption which gave the owner of an isolated plot a right of pre-emption in the case of the sale of a zemindari share. The only evidence adduced in support of the case of the plaintiffs was the wajib-ul-arz of 1842 and the wajib-ul-arz of 1886 and also one case in which pre-emption was claimed, and which resulted in a compromise. It does not appear whether or not the plaintiff in the case was, like the plaintiffs in the case now before us, merely an owner of an isolated plot, or a co-sharer in the zemindari. If he was the latter, the case is really of no importance whatever. The case then really rests on the extracts from the two wajib-ul-araiz. The first is as follows:

"In this village, land is sub-divided. All have power to sell their property to a stranger with consent of Shikmis."

This is very obscure. In all probability the division of the land at that time was very different to what it is at present. But there is no reference whatever to the owner of isolated plots. The second extract is as follows:

"In case proper price is paid, first a cosharer in a mahal and then a co-sharer in the village will have the right of pre-emption."

This is very different from the first. It gives a right to a co-sharer in the village and it may be that this was merely an arrangement entered into by the parties which would terminate with the Settlement. However this may be, in our opinion, the evidence adduced by the plaintiff in support of the right which he alleged was altogether insufficient to establish his claim. A custom of pre-emption must like any other custom be proved by clear and sufficient evidence. We, therefore, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore the decree of the Court of first instance with costs in all Courts including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Decree set aside.

A decree for recovery of possession of land was obtained in a Munsif's Court, and it was directed that the amount of mesne profits would be determined in the execution proceedings. The amount of mesne profits so ascertained was more than Rs. 1,000 but less than Rs. 5,000:

Babu Sarat Chandra Ghosh, for the Appellant.

Babu Jadu Nath Kanjilal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against an order passed by the lower Appellate Court confirming an order made by the Court of first instance in certain execution proceedings relating to mesne profits. It appears that the respondent in the present appeal obtained a decree against the present appellant for recovery of possession of a certain piece of land with mesne profits.

It is alleged that the plaintiff-respondent had been dispossessed on the 23rd Chait 1311 and mesne profits were claimed for the years 1312 to 1315. The suit was instituted on the 6th March 1907 in the Munsif's Court and a decree was obtained by the plaintiff for recovery of possession of the land in suit together with mesne profits from the date of dispossession up to the date of the restoration of possession and it was directed that the amount of mesne profits would be determined in the execution proceedings. The decree was appealed against but it was confirmed. The execution proceedings for the purpose of determining the amount of mesne profits then commenced and, as a result, it was determined that the plaintiff was entitled to recover mesne profits for 1312, 1313 and 1314 but was not entitled to any mesne profits for 1315 because during that year, he had himself taken away the crops on the land. The total amount of mesne profits so ascertained was Rs. 1,630-8 which sum included interest amounting to Rs. 294.

An appeal was preferred against the decision of the executing Court allowing mesne profits to the plaintiff to the extent of that sum and in support of it various points were taken which also had been argued before the Court of first instance. For the purposes of this appeal, the only point which it is necessary for us to consider is that urged on behalf of the judgment-debtor, the present appellant, namely, that the executing Court being a Munsif's Court was not entitled to award mesne profits of a higher amount than Rs. 1,000, that being the ordinary pecuniary jurisdiction of such Court. In support of that contention, reliance was placed on the case of Golap Sundari Debi v. Indra Kumar Hazra (1). Both the Court of first instance and the lower Appellate Courts held that, that case had no application whatever to the facts of the present case, that being a suit brought for accounts and this High Court having held in that case that it was the duty of the plaintiff to ascertain approximately before instituting the suit the amount which he claimed to be due on taking accounts so as to determine the Court in which the plaint should be filed. In that case, the sum which was found to be due by the Court exceeded Rs. 8,000. In the present case, both the lower Courts, relying on the decision of this Court in the case of Rameshwar Mahton v. Dilu Mahton (2), were of opinion that, under the provisions of section 211 of the old Code of Civil Procedure, which corresponds with Order XX, rule 12 of the new Code, the Munsif's Court had jurisdiction in execution of the decree to award as mesne profits the sum allowed in the present case.

The judgment-debtor has appealed to this Court and, in support of the appeal, the main contention which has been advanced is that the lower Courts erred in holding that the Munsif's Court as a Court of execution had power to award to the plaintiff a decree for mesne profits in excess of Rs. 1,000. In support of this contention, reliance is placed on the decision of this Court in the case of Bhupendra Kumar Charkrabuty v. Purna Chandra Bose (3). We have read through the judgment of this Court delivered in that case and, in our opinion, the facts of that case and the grounds which influenced the decision of the learned Judges in that case are very distinct from the facts of the present case. There the suit was to recover possession of land valued at Rs. 686-8 and mesne profits valued at Rs. 200 up to the date of the institution of the suit and mesne profits from the date of the institution of the suit up to the date of the recovery of possession to be ascertained in execution. The suit was decreed in favour of the plaintiff for recovery of possession of the land claimed and also for mesne profits claimed, the amount to be determined in execution proceedings. When execution proceedings were taken, the claim for mesne profits pendente lite was laid at over Rs. 60,000. It does not appear in that case that any mesne profits were, in fact, ascertained, but, on appeal to this Court, it was held that the Munsif had not jurisdiction to entertain the claim for mesne profits pendente lite for such a large amount The learned Judges in that case pointed out that there were two weighty and obvious reasons why the Munsif should not be allowed to exercise jurisdiction and why the rule laid down in the case of Rameshwar Mahton v. Dilu Mahton (2) could not possibly be extended to that case. The two reasons were, first, that the value of the claim for mesne profits pendente lite which the decree-holder invited the Court to investigate was much in excess of the value of a suit which the Munsif was generally competent and specially authorized to try and, secondly, that if the Munsif investigated the claim, there would be insuperable difficulty as to the forum of the appeal which could not be either the Court of the District Judge who could hear appeals only in suits of which the value did not exceed Rs. 5,000 or this Court because the Legislature never contemplated an appeal direct from the decision of the Munsif to the High Court. For these reasons, the learned Judges held that the Munsif could not entertain the application for investigation of mesne profits pendente lite as the claim was laid at over Rs. 30,000. In the present case, the claim was not laid at anything like that sum and, in fact, the amount was only ascertained in the course of the execution proceedings by a Commissioner specially appointed for that purpose. In the present case, the amount of mesne profits ascertained does not exceed Rs. 5,000 or, in fact, approach near that amount and no question as to the forum of appeal arises. Furthermore, this is not an appeal, as the case in Bhupendra Kumar Chakrabutly v. Purna Chandra Bose (3) was, against an application to the Munsif to investigate the mesne profits, but is an appeal against an award of mesne profits made by the Munsif in execution of a decree which has become final and which investigation appears to have been conducted without any objection raised on behalf of the appellant. It was only after the amount of the mesne profits had been ascertained that the objection was taken that the Munsif had no jurisdiction to award mesne profits in excess of Rs. 1,000. In our opinion, therefore, the ruling on which the learned Pleader for the appellant relies has no application whatever to the facts of the present case. The principles laid down by this Court in the case of Rameshwar Mahton v. Dilu Mahton (2), which have been followed by the lower Court, appear to us, on the other hand, to be fully applicable. In that case, the learned Judges pointed out that the amount of mesne profits to be awarded up to the date of the delivery of possession, which the decree-holder would be entitled to recover, would be dependent not on his action but on the opposition which the judgment-debtor might be able to offer to the delivery of possession to him and it was considered that it was neither the intention of the law nor would it be right that the decree-holder should be deprived of his rightful profits or driven to a subsequent suit to recover the amount simply in consequence of the conduct of the judgment-debtor. The learned Judges also pointed out that, in most cases where a suit is brought for recovery of possession and mesne profits, the Court would not be in a position at the time of the institution of the suit to say whether it had or had not jurisdiction until the inquiry as to the amount of the mesne profits had been completed. No doubt, there is in this case an opinion expressed that where mesne profits are claimed prior to the institution of the suit, such profits and the value of the property in suit should not exceed the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Court trying the suit; but, in the present case, this question does not appear to have been raised in any of the lower Courts nor, in fact, was it raised at first when the appeal was argued and it was only as an after-thought that the learned Pleader for the appellant suggested that the mesne profits for 1312 and 1313 together with the value of the property in suit would exceed Rs. 1,000 We have not the materials before us in this appeal to enter into that question and decide it even if we were prepared to do so. Certainly, if that question had been raised in any of the lower Courts, it would have been open to the decree-holder to determine whether or not he would relinquish any part of his claim for mesne profits prior to the institution of the suit, so as to bring the claim for mesne profits and recovery of possession within the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Munsif. As the facts at present stand before us, it is not possible for us to say that the contention is correct that the mesne profits claimed prior to the institution of the suit with the value of the property exceed Rs. 1,000. If the judgment-debtor relied on the contention now advanced before us, it was his duty to have taken the objection in the Munsif's Court or in the Court of first appeal and not to advance it as a sort of last argument in this Court in second appeal. In our opinion, the reasons given by the learned Judges in the case of Rameshwar Mahton v. Dilu Mahton (2) apply fully to the facts of the present case and we are of opinion that it was with the object of allowing a plaintiff to recover the mesne profits claimed in a suit for recovery of possession of land after the institution of the suit, without being driven to a subsequent suti, that the provisions of section 211 of the old Code, which are now re-produced in rule 12 of Order XX of the new Code, were enacted. In our opinion, the view taken by the lower Courts is correct. The judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court are, therefore, confirmed and the appeal is dismissed with costs, three gold mohurs.

(2) 21 C. 550.
(3) 8 Ind. Cas. 34; 13 C. L. J. 132; 15 C. W. N. 506.

An occupancy-holding was sold in execution of a money-decree against the defendant and the purchaser obtained possession and subsequently granted a permanent lease to the plaintiff. The sale was afterwards set aside but in the application for the reversal of the sale, the plaintiff was not made a party. The plaintiff brought this suit for recovery of possession, and the defendant pleaded that the sale, which was the basis of the plaintiff's claim, having been set aside, the plaintiff had no enforceable title as against the defendant:

Held, that, as the plaintiff was not made a party to the proceedings for the reversal of the sale, he was not bound by the order.

Menajuddi v. Toam Mandal, 15 Ind. Cas. 175, followed.

The true object of section 85 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, is to entitle the landlord of a raiyat to question the validity of a sub-lease granted in contravention thereof. Therefore, an under-raiyat, who holds under a permanent lease granted by a raiyat, can successfully maintain a suit for possession or defend his possession against the raiyat or his representatives-in-interest. It is not open to the raiyat in such a suit to question the validity of the sub-lease on the ground that it was granted in contravention of clause (2) of section 85 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal on behalf of the defendants in an action in ejectment. The subject-matter of the litigation is an occupancy-holding which was sold in execution of a money-decree on the 15th May 1893. The sale was duly confirmed and the purchaser obtained possession. He subsequently granted a permanent lease to the plaintiffs-respondents on the 15th April 1896. The case for the plaintiffs is that they also obtained possession but were later on evicted by the appellants. The defendants resist the claim on the ground that the sale, which is the foundation of the title of the plaintiffs, was reversed on the 25th August 1906 and that consequently the plaintiffs have no enforceable title as against them. This defence has been overruled by the Court below and, in our opinion, rightly. It is clear that as the purchaser alone was made a party to the proceedings for reversal of the sale after he had granted a permanent lease in favour of the respondents, they are not bound by the order which was made behind their back. It cannot be disputed, in view of the decision of this Court in the case of Durga Charan Mandal v. Kali Prasanna Sarkar (1), that appropriate proceedings have to be taken for reversal of a sale of an occupancy-holding when the sale is impeached on the ground that the holding is not transferable by custom and is not liable to be sold in execution of a money-decree. In the case before us, as we have just explained, this proceeding was infructuous in so far as the respondents are concerned, because they were not brought before the Court and were not afforded any opportunity to contest the application of the judgment-debtors. Consequently, in so far as they are concerned, they are clearly entitled to maintain the position that there was a valid sale. See Menajudi v. Toam Mandal (2).

It has been finally argued on behalf of the appellants that even though the sale be treated as a valid sale, the plaintiffs have acquired no valid title because the sub-lease in their favour was granted in contravention of the provisions of clause (2) of section 85 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In our opinion, there is no substance in this contention, because, it is not open to the present appellants to question the validity of the sub-lease on the grounds alleged. As explained in the cases of Manik Borai v. Bani Charan Mandul (3) and Arabali v. Rochimuddi (4), an under-raiyat who holds under a permanent lease granted by a raiyat can successfully maintain a suit for possession or defend his possession against the raiyat or his representatives-in-interest. The true object of section 85 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is to entitle the landlord of the raiyat to question the validity of a sub-lease granted in contravention thereof.

The conclusion follows that the plaintiffs have established their title as against the defendants whose title must be taken to have been extinguished by the sale, in so far, at any rate, as the present plaintiffs are concerned. The decree made by the Subordinate Judge must, therefore, be affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

It is conceded that this judgment will govern the other appeal (No. 1486 of 1910) which is, therefore, also dismissed with costs.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 48—Land in holding of raiyat, *of different qualities—No indication to show rates of assessment of various classes of lands—Part of land sub-let to under-*raiyat—Whether s. 48 applicable.

Section 48 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not expressly mention the land held by the under-raiyat, but the meaning plainly is that the landlord of the under-raiyat who holds under a money rent is not entitled to recover rent exceeding by more than a quarter the rent which he himself pays in respect of the land let out to the under-raiyat.

Therefore, in cases in which the land comprised in the holding of the raiyat is of different qualities and there is no indication to show at what rates the various classes of lands were assessed, section 48 cannot be made applicable, if only a part of the land has been sub-let to an under-raiyat.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge of Tipperah, dated October 11th, 1909, modifying that of the Fourth Munsif of Comilla, dated March 29th, 1909.

Babus Tara Kishore Chowdhury and Gopal Chandra Das, for the Appellant.

Babu Birendra Chandra Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal on behalf of the plaintiff in an action for rent. The sole point in controversy relates to the rate at which the plaintiff is entitled to realise rent, in view of section 48 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The plaintiff is an occupancy raiyat and the defendants are under-raiyats under him. The defendants were on a previous occasion sued in ejectment; they then pleaded that they held these lands on payment of rent at the rate of Rs. 10 a year. On the present occasion, the plaintiff claims at the rate of Rs. 14 a year. The defence is, that under section 48 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, he is not entitled to claim rent at a higher rate than Rs 3-5. This contention was overruled by the Court of first instance and a decree was made at the rate of Rs. 10 a year. Upon appeal, the District Judge has allowed the contention of the defendants to prevail. The question raised is apparently one of first impression and the solution must depend upon the true construction of section 48.

The plaintiff has an occupancy-holding which contains 12 kanis and 13 gandas of land. In his lease, the lands are classified and rent is assessed at rates varying from Rs. 2-4 to Re. 1 a kani; the aggregate rent is stated to be Rs. 21-14 a year. The defendants have taken a lease of one of these plots only, the rent whereof was assessed at Rs. 2-4 a kani in the lease of the plaintiff. The contention of the defendant is that under section 48, clause (b), the plaintiff is not entitled to recover rent at a rate in excess of Rs. 2-13 a kani. In our opinion, there is no foundation for this contention.

Section 48 of the Bengal Tenancy Act provides that the landlord of an under-raiyat holding at a money rent shall not be entitled to recover rent exceeding the rent which he himself pays by more than 25 per cent. It will be observed that the section does not expressly mention the land held by the under-raiyat, but the meaning plainly is that the landlord of the under-raiyat who holds under a money rent is not entitled to recover rent exceeding by more than a quarter the rent which he himself pays in respect of the land let out to the under-raiyat. It has not been disputed that in cases in which the land comprised in the holding of the raiyat is of different qualities and there is no indication to show at what rates the various classes of lands were assessed, section 48 cannot be made applicable, if only a part of the land has been sub-let to an under-raiyat. But the learned Vakil for the respondent has suggested that where, as here, on the face of the lease of the raiyat, the rates at which the different classes of land were assessed can be determined, the under-raiyat is not bound to pay more than 25 per cent. of the rent assessed with respect to the parcels in his possession. This argument, in our opinion, is based on a fallacy. It cannot be affirmed that the raiyat pays so much rent for any particular parcel. No doubt, for the purposes of the assessment of the aggregate rent, certain rates were taken as the basis of the calculation by the superior landlord. Nevertheless, the raiyat holds the entire land of the holding for the aggregate amount. If he fails to pay any portion of this rent, the entire holding is liable to be sold, and he cannot clearly save any particular parcel out of the holding by payment of the rent assessed upon the land comprised therein. In our opinion, section 48 applies to cases in which the land held by the raiyat is co-extensive with the land held by the under-raiyat. The section was never intended to apply to cases of the class now before us.

We may add that in the course of the argument at the bar, reference was made to the decision of Mr. Justice Giedt in the case of Akhil Chandra Biswas v. Amjad Ali (1), where a question similar in scope to the one before us, appears to have been raised but not decided; that judgment, so far as it goes, supports the view we take.

The result, therefore, is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the Court below set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored with costs in this Court.

Appeal allowed.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL, REPRESENTED BY THE COLLECTOR OF TANJORE—RESPONDENT.

Madras Land Encroachment Act (Mad. III of 1905), s. 14—Suit for refund of penal assessment levied—Party aggrieved—Cause of action—Notice by Government, whether constitutes cause of action—Proof of possession—Presumption as to prior possession.

Under Madras Act III of 1905, section 14, the cause of action arises when a party deems himself aggrieved by the levy of a penalty or by eviction or forfeiture, that is, on the date of the levy of the assessment or penalty or of the eviction or forfeiture. A mere preliminary notice given by Government before exercising these powers under the Act cannot be regarded as a proceeding by which a person is "aggrieved". The notice itself is no grievance and cannot be the starting point for the computation of limitation.

When possession for a certain period is shown, it will be open to a Court deciding the facts to prove that possession prior to that period was also in the party whose subsequent possession is proved.

Venkatarama Iyer v. Secretary of State for India, 33 M. 362; 5 Ind. Cas. 118; 7 M. L. T. 139; 20 M. L. J. 74, referred to.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of Tanjore in A. S. Nos. 884 and 886 of 1909, presented against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif Tiruwalur, in O. S. No. 345 of 1908.

Messrs. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar and T. R. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. J. L. Rosario, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

This Second appeal coming on for hearing on 3rd and 4th days of January 1912, the Court (Sundara Aiyar and Spencer, JJ.) delivered the following JUDGMENT.—It is not quite clear from the judgment of the learned District Judge whether he considered the question whether the plaintiff's predecessors-in-title were in possession of the two links of the pial in dispute before the plaintiff obtained his conveyance. The District Judge observes that the plaintiff's possession was proved to date only from 1903. He says also "plaintiff's possession is evidently not such as to throw the burden of proof on the other side," i.e., apparently, that possession for two years is not sufficient to shift the onus.

We may also observe that when possession for a certain period is shown, it will be open to a Court deciding the facts to presume that possession prior to that period was also in the party whose subsequent possession is proved. See Venkatarama Iyer v. The Secretary of State for India in Council (1).

We request the lower Appellate Court to record a finding on the evidence on record on the question of possession of the two links of the pial and the seven links of the brick alodi. He will also record a finding on the 2nd issue. The findings will be submitted within one month from the date of the receipt of this order. Seven days will be allowed for objections.

In compliance with the above order, the District Judge of Tanjore submitted the following FINDINGS:—On the question of possession, the finding was that the plaintiff and his predecessors-in-title were in possession of the 2 links of pial and the 7 links of alodi for a period of 30 years and more.

On the question of limitation, the District Judge said :—

"As regards the question of limitation, I think the suit is clearly time-barred by section 14 of Act III of 1905 (Madras). The suit is not one for a declaration of title to the disputed site but one for an injunction restraining the defendant from intefering with plaintiff's possession of the site by taking action against him under Act III of 1905, and for the recovery of the penal assessment already levied from him under that Act. Both these causes of action clearly come within the scope of section 14 of Act III of 1905, and are governed by the rule of limitation therein laid down. In the plaint the plaintiff himself has given the dates of his causes of action as 27th November 1907, the date on which the defendant served him with notice to vacate the disputed sites, and 18th January 1908, the date on which penal assessment was collected from him in respect of the alleged encroachment. Clearly, those are the dates on which the two causes of action arose and the plaintiff's suit was, therefore, time-barred in respect of both the reliefs prayed for by him or the date on which he presented his plaint to the District Munsif's Court i.e., 28th September 1908. My findings on the second issue is, therefore, that the suit is barred by limitation.

This second appeal coming on for final hearing after the return of the findings of the lower Appellate Court upon the issues referred by this Court for trial, the Court delivered the following JUDGMENT.—The finding of the lower Appellate Court is that the plaintiff and his predecessors-in-title have been in possession of the plaint lands for more than thirty years prior to the suit. The presumption, therefore, is that he was in possession prior to that time also, unless it be proved on behalf of Government that the land was unoccupied land or land in the occupation of Government before. The plaintiff's title, therefore, must be held to be established.

The next question is whether the suit is barred by limitation. The District Judge holds that it is barred under section 14 of Act III of 1905. That section, while entitling persons, deeming themselves aggrieved by any proceedings under the Act, to apply to the Civil Courts for redress, provides that the Civil Courts shall not take cognizance of any suit instituted by such persons for any such cause of action, unless such suit shall be instituted within six months from the time at which the cause of action arose. Then the explanation to this section states that in respect of any assessment or penalty levied by Government, the cause of action shall be deemed to have arisen on the date on which such assessment or penalty was levied; and in respect of eviction or forfeiture, on the date of the eviction or forfeiture. The proceedings which the Government are entitled to take suo motu under the Act against persons, who, in its opinion, are in unauthorized occupation of land, are either the levying of penal assessment or summary eviction of the persons in occupation. Hence the statement in section 14 that the cause of action arises when a party deems himself aggrieved by either of these steps taken by Government. A mere preliminary notice given by Government, before exercising these powers under the Act, cannot be regarded as a proceeding under it by which a person is "aggrieved". The notice itself is no grievance. The result of the inquiry made by Government on the notice may be to recognise the title of the person to whom it is issued. The party has a grievance only when his claim to the land is not recognized by Government and steps are taken by it either to evict him or to levy penal assessment.

In this case, the plaintiff's suit, so far as it seeks to recover the assessment levied by Government, must be held to be barred, but, in so far as the claim to the injunction is concerned, section 14 is inapplicable for the reasons already given. As against the Government, we consider it unnecessary to give an injunction. It will be enough to declare the plaintiff's title to the land with respect to which the injunction is sought. In the circumstances, there will be no order as to costs in any of the Courts.

Decree modified.

JUDGMENT.

CARNDUFF, J.—The appellant before us was the gomashta of the respondent. He was prosecuted by the respondent for criminal breach of trust under section 408 of the Indian Penal Code in respect of certain moneys collected in the course of his duty. The Magistrate, before whom the case was being tried, suggested, after having drawn up a charge, that the matter was one which might appropriately be settled out of Court. Accordingly, the matter was settled out of Court. The appellant executed a mortgage-bond for the amount embezzled, and, though the withrawal of the criminal prosecution is not mentioned in the instrument as forming part of the consideration, the prosecution was in fact dropped by the respondent after the execution of the deed and the appellant was then acquitted or discharged. The suit, out of which this appeal arises, was afterwards brought upon the mortgage-bond executed in the circumstances just described, and it has been decreed by both the Courts below. The defendant has now preferred this second appeal to the High Court.

In my opinion, the appeal clearly must be allowed. The lower Appellate Court has held that no general rule as to what is, or what is not, contrary to public policy can be, or has been, laid down; and, relying on Nubbee Buksh v. Musammat Bibee Hingon (1), has declared that its conscience felt no repugnance towards the agreement between the respondent and the appellant and that it entirely failed to see any danger to the public good therein. Now, the case cited by the learned District Judge stands, as far as I know, absolutely alone, and it appears to me to run counter to the trend of all authority. It is a case, moreover, of 1867, that is to say, at a time when the law on the subject had not been codified by the Indian Contract Act of 1872 and when the Code of Criminal Procedure in force contained no provision such as that to be found in section 345 of the present Code for the compounding of offences. The law, therefore, as to where there might be a compromise in a criminal case was not settled and the law as to agreements contrary to public policy was probably equally unsettled. Now, we have for our guidance section 345 of the Code of Criminal Procedure of 1893 and section 23 of the Indian Contract Act of 1872 with its Illustration (h) and there can, so far as I can see, be no doubt as to what the legal position is.

The broad principle is laid down by Lord Westbury in Williams v. Bayley (2) and the learned District Judge has himself referred to that decision, although he seems to have failed to appreciate its effect. If a criminal case is declared to be non-compoundable, then it is against public policy to compound it, and any agreement to that end is wholly void in law. Criminal breach of trust is (see section 345 of the present Code of Criminal Procedure) non-compoundable, either with or without the sanction of the Court. Keir v. Leeman (3), which was affirmed by the Exchequer Chamber in Keir v. Leeman (4) and followed by the Court of Appeal in Windhill Local Board of Health v. Vint (5), is ample authority for holding the view that the circumstance that the Magistrate wrongfully suggested or sanctioned the compromise makes no difference whatever. And the principle, established by Collins v. Blantern (6), that illegality may be pleaded as a defence to an action on a bond has been so often recognised and is so well settled that it would be useless to enter into any discussion regarding it.

This appeal, therefore, must be allowed, the decrees of the Courts below discharged and the respondent's suit dismissed with costs throughout.

CHAPMAN, J.—I agree but desire to carefully confine my reason for holding that the bond was void to the ground that the consideration for the bond was found by the lower Court to be a promise to withdraw from the prosecution in a case, the compromise of which is expressly forbidden by the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Appeal allowed.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

CIVIL RULE No. 472 OF 1912.

May 14, 1912.

Present:—Mr. Justice Carnduff and Mr. Justice Chapman.

ALI AHMAD KHAN AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—PETITIONERS

versus

H. F. BROWN AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS 1ST PARTY, AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS 2ND PARTY—OPPOSITE PARTIES.

Ex parte decree—Application to set aside—Decree against contesting defendants—Whether suit to be re-opened entirely—Decree executed against contesting defendants—Contesting defendants not made parties to application to set aside ex parte decree—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. IX, r. 13 proviso and r. 14.

The plaintiff brought a suit against four defendants for redemption and recovery of arrears of rent due to the plaintiffs under a zur-i-peshgi lease. The suit was decreed ex parte against defendants Nos. 2 and 3, and the decree directed that defendants Nos. 1 and 4 should merely yield up possession of two villages. The plaintiffs did not appeal against the decree so far as defendants Nos. 1 and 4 were concerned, but executed it and recovered possession of the two villages.

Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 applied to have the ex parte decree against them set aside. In that application defendants Nos. 1 and 4 were not made parties. The Court set aside the ex parte decree against defendants Nos. 2 and 3, but declined to re-open the whole suit even as against the other defendants. The plaintiffs moved the High Court:

Held, (1) that there was really no question of jurisdiction or irregular exercise of it within the meaning of section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code, (2) that having regard to the fact that the plaintiffs were satisfied with their decree against defendants Nos. 1 and 4, the decree should not be set aside in so far as those defendants were concerned, (3) that the case was not covered by the proviso to rule 13 of Order IX of the Civil Procedure Code, and (4) that as defendants Nos. 1 and 4 were not parties to the application to set aside the ex parte decree, the Court below should not have passed an order prejudicial to them behind their backs.

Rule against the order of the First Sub-Judge of Mozaffarpur, dated January 9th, 1912.

FACTS.—The plaintiffs instituted a suit for recovery of Rs. 4,360 as rents and profits due under a zur-i-peshgi lease and for its redemption. The lease was executed by the predecessor of the plaintiffs in favour of one Mr. C. R. Brown for seven years (1894 to 1901). On the death of Mr. C. R. Brown, his widow, Mrs. Brown, and son, Mr. R. C. Brown, sold their rights to Mr. H. F. Brown in 1905 and the latter again sold his interest to Mr. H. K. Gray in 1906. The plaintiffs made the widow and the son of the original lessee as defendants Nos. 2 and 3, and Mr. H. F. Brown and Mr. H. K. Gray as defendants Nos. 1 and 4 respectively in the suit.

The defendants Nos. 2 and 3 did not appear; but defendants Nos 1 and 4 contested the suit. They contended that they did not purchase any of the mortgaged properties and were, therefore, not liable for rents and profits, but they admitted that they held two of the mortgaged properties under a private arrangement from the heirs of the mortgagee, for which they paid rents to them.

The Sub-Judge held that defendants Nos. 1 and 4 did not purchase the zur-i-peshgi lease and there was no cause of action against them, and directed that they should yield up possession to the plaintiffs of the two properties which they admitted to hold under the mortgagees. The plaintiffs in execution of the decree recovered possession of the two properties from the defendants Nos. 1 and 4.

Subsequently, defendants Nos 2 and 3 applied to the Sub-Judge for setting aside the ex parte decree passed against them on the ground that no summons was served on them, and the Court on January 9th, 1912, set aside the ex parte decree and restored the suit so far as they were concerned, but declined to re-open the whole suit even as against the contesting defendants Nos 1 and 4 on the ground that it would be inequitable to require the contesting defendants "to fight the battle over again after their victory". In this application to set aside the ex parte decree, the defendants Nos. 1 and 4 were not made parties.

The plaintiffs moved the High Court and obtained this Rule against the defendants Nos. 1 and 4 to show cause why the order of the Court below should not be modified by setting aside the original decree in its entirety on the ground that it was of such a nature that it could not be set aside as against defendants Nos. 2 and 3 only.

Babu Umakali Mukherjee and Moulvi Mohammad Mustafa Khan, for the Petitioners.

Babu Atul Krishna Roy, for the Opposite Parties, defendants Nos. 1 and 4, in showing cause contended, first, that as the Court below had power to set aside the whole decree or the decree as against the applicants defendants Nos. 2 and 3 only, there was no want of jurisdiction, and the High Court could not interfere under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code; secondly, as the defendants Nos. 1 and 4 were not made parties to the proceeding to set aside the ex parte decree, no order could be passed against them in their absence; thirdly, as the plaintiffs did not appeal against the original decree but executed it and recovered possession of the two properties from defendants Nos. 1 and 4, they could not now ask the Court to re-open the whole suit even as against those defendants; and fourthly, the case did not fall under the proviso to rule 13 of Order IX of the Civil Procedure Code.

The following cases were cited. Manaku v. Sitaram (1); Monomohini Chowdhurani v. Nara Narayan Roy (2); Jadubansa Narain v. Mohunt Hari Charan Bharati (3).

JUDGMENT.—The petitioners as plaintiffs sued four defendants for redemption and the recovery of Rs. 4,000 odd, being the arrears of rents and profits due to them under a zur-i-peshgi lease. The second and third defendants did not contest the suit. The first and fourth defendants were alleged to be assignees from the second and third defendants, or rather the first defendant was said to be an assignee from the second and third defendants and to have transferred his interest to the fourth defendant. The first and fourth defendants pleaded that they had nothing to do with the mortgage, but admitted that they had, by a subsequent private arrangement, been put in possession of two of the mortgaged villages.

After a keen contest, the Court below found that the statement of the first and fourth defendants was true; and in decreeing the suit against the 2nd and 3rd defendants ex parte, it directed that the rents and profits should be recovered from them alone, and that the 1st and 4th defendants should merely be required to yield up possession of the two villages occupied by them. This decree the petitioners did not appeal against. On the contrary, they accepted it and actually executed it by obtaining possession of the two villages from the 1st and 4th defendants.

The 2nd and 3rd defendants, however, moved to have the ex parte decree against them set aside, and the lower Court set it aside accordingly. The question whether it ought also to be set aside in so far as the 1st and 4th defendants were concerned, was very carefully considered by it, and it was deliberately held that it would be most inequitable, as the lower Court put it, to require those defendants "to fight the battle over again after their victory".

(1) 18 B. 142.
(2) 4 C. W. N. 456 at p. 458.
(3) 6 C. L. J. 226 at pp. 229, 231.

The petitioners have obtained the present Rule against the opposite party to show cause why the whole decree should not be set aside; and we are of opinion that the relief they seek, cannot for the following reasons be granted.

First, there is really no question of jurisdiction or irregular exercise of jurisdiction within the meaning of section 115, Civil Procedure Code. The Court below clearly had jurisdiction, and it certainly did not exercise it arbitrarily. No doubt, this Court has still wider powers of interference under section 15 of the Charter: but, having regard to the fact that the petitioners were satisfied with their decree against the 1st and 4th defendants and, as we have said, put it in execution, we are not disposed to interfere in the exercise of those powers by setting the decree aside now in so far as those defendants are concerned.

In the second place, the real object of this Rule is to set aside that part of the decree which was in favour of the 1st and 4th defendants; and, we are inclined to think that that can hardly be done under the proviso to Order IX, rule 13. It is there laid down that, where the decree is of such a nature that it cannot be set aside only as against the defendants who did not appear, it may be set aside against all or any of the other defendants also. As we have said, this does not seem to cover the case of a decree in so far as it is in favour of the contesting defendants, nor in this instance is it clear that the decree was of such a nature that it could not be set aside against the non-appearing defendants only.

Finally, the 1st and 4th defendants had no notice of the application made under Order IX, rule 13, and were apparently no parties to that proceeding: and on first principles, it seems to us that the Court below could not have passed an order prejudicial to them behind their backs.

The result, therefore, is that this Rule must be discharged with costs. We assess the hearing fee at two gold mohurs.

Rule discharged.

APPEAL AGAINST ORDER No. 110 OF 1911.

MANGALASERI PULLIKANDI PAKRAM HAJI—RESPONDENT.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 82, 83, 100—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 69—Contribution, suit for—Several lands burdened with payment of common revenue—Liability of owners who have not paid to person who pays the revenue—Nature of decree—Plaintiff's right to a charge.

Where several lands are liable for payment of a definite amount of Government revenue and the amount has been paid by the owner of one of such lands, the latter is entitled, in a suit for contribution, to a charge on the land of each of the others for the proportionate fraction of the amount payable by each, and not to a personal decree.

Appeal against the order of remand by the District Court of North Malabar, in A. S. No. 342 of 1910, presented against the decree of the District Munsif of Kootuparamba, in O. S. No. 624 of 1909.

Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Iyer, for the Appellants.

Mr. T. K. Govinda Aiyar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, J.—The District Judge bases his decision on the ground that the plaintiff and defendants are co-owners in the parambas on which the plaintiff has paid the land revenue, but the allegations in the plaint do not seem to support this view. The plaintiff in the plaint alleges that the defendants are, by a karar, which is not on the record, owners in jenmi right of one of the three parambas contained in the survey field in question, and that he himself is the owner in jenmi right of the other two. The plaintiff does not claim any interest in the paramba of defendants, nor admits that the defendants have any interest in his parambas.

The District Munsif gave him time to amend his plaint and rely on the karar by which parambas were divided, but he failed to take advantage of the opportunity so given. If then, the District Judge's order is to be supported, it must be on the ground that the fact that the survey field is undivided for purposes of assessment of the land revenue upon it, brings the case within the rule established, so far as we are concerned, by the Full Bench of this Court in Rajah of Vizianagram v. Rajah Setrucherla Somasekhararaz (1).

Now, in that case, both Bashyam Iyengar, J., (in the referring order) and Benson, J., were inclined to hold that sections 82 and 100 of the Transfer of Property Act were applicable and the former learned Judge points out (at page 709) that those sections would clearly have applied but for the fact that the property then in question was not strictly the "several properties of several owners." Here, in the plaint, the parambas are the "several properties of several owners," and they are all charged, by reason of the Revenue Recovery Act, with the payment of a single debt, the revenue assessed on the survey field. I have no doubt that Bashyam Iyengar, J., and, I think, also Benson, J., would have held in the present case that the plaintiff is entitled to a charge by virtue of section 82, Transfer of Property Act read with section 100.

I should be content to base my decision on the Transfer of Property Act on the authority of those learned Judges, but it may equally rest on the principles of equity on which both Subramanya Iyer, J., and Benson, J., rested theirs in the same case in delivering the judgments of the Full Bench. The principle does not, I think, depend on the parties being co owners in the lands; they must be co-sharers of the burden, and, in this case, as the pleadings show, the burden is common to the plaintiff and defendants because their lands are both charged with the payment of the whole revenue. It is true that defendants are not debtors of the Government not being the registered pattadars, but their land is nonetheless subject to the burden, and has been by the plaintiff relieved of it. But as the common burden is a burden on the land only, as the Government could recover the revenue only from defendants' land and not from them personally, so all that plaintiff is entitled to is a charge on the land for the amount, if any, paid by him.

(1) 26 M. 686.

I think, therefore, that, though the District Judge is wrong in holding the plaintiff and defendants to be co-owners of the land, so far as the pleadings have at present disclosed their position, he is right in reversing the decision of the District Munsif on the 2nd issue. I do not think we can or need decide what are the interests of the parties in the land. The plaintiff, if he has paid the revenue, is entitled to a charge on the lands, and the other issues in the suit must be decided. I would, therefore, confirm the order of the District Judge and dismiss the appeal with costs.

SADASIVA IYER, J.—I entirely agree. The case of Subramania Chetty v. Mahalingasami Sivan (2), went upon the ground that a person, who, as pattadar, pays the whole revenue on the pattah land, cannot sue for a mere money contribution from the owner of a share in the pattah land, that is, cannot get a personal decree for money claimed as due on such share because neither section 35 of the Revenue Recovery Act, nor section 69 of the Contract Act gives the pattadar such right or imposes an obligation on the owner of the share.

The question whether, when several shares on the same land or when several lands are liable under a common burden, the dischage of the whole burden by the owner of a distinct share or a distinct land would give him a charge on the remaining shares or lands for the proportionate sums they were equitably liable for was not gone into in Subramania Chetty v. Mahalingaswami Sivan (2), but was, on the other hand, expressly decided in Rajah of Vizianagram v. Rajah Setrucherla Somasekhararaz (1). The reason why it was not gone into in Subramania Chetty v. Mahalingaswami Sivan (2) was because the question did not arise in that case.

In the present case, the plaintiff claims recovery of the proportionate sums chargeable as revenue in defendant's paramba both from defendants personally and by sale of defendant's parambas on which he claims a charge for such proportionate sums. It may be that Subramania Chetty v. Mahalingaswami

(2) 33 M. 41; 3 Ind. Cas. 624; 19 M. L. J. 627; 6 M. L. T. 198.

Sivan(2) would prevent plaintiff from getting a personal decree against defendants for any portion of such amounts. The case of Rajah of Vizianagram v. Somasekhararaz (1), undoubtedly, prevents him from getting such a personal decree for more than three years' dues. But the ratio of the decision in that case allows him clearly a charge on defendants' parambas for the proportionate dues, the limitation period being twelve years under Article 132. The present suit claims a charge of only six years before suit.

A co-owner or co-sharer may not be liable personally to contribute towards sums paid to remove a burden on his property also, the whole burden being jointly imposed on the payor's and his co-owner's property. He may not have cared to discharge the burden as he might have been content to lose the property itself as not worth the expense of the removal of the burden It may, therefore, not be equitable to give a personal decree against him as the contribution required may be larger than the value of his property. But these considerations do not apply to the claim for a charge on his share for a proportionate share of the burden. The case of Rajah of Viziangaram v. Rajah Setrucherla Somasekhararaz (1), allowing such a charge, has been followed in Alayakammal v. Subbaraya Goundan (3), the limitation to enforce such a charge being twelve years. I find also that in Sri Maharaja Parbu Narain Singh v. Babu Beni Singh (4), the learned Judges, while refusing plaintiff's right to rely on section 69 of the Contract Act, gave him a charge on the defendants' shares for the proportionate fraction of the amount paid by plaintiff to dischage the burden on all the shares.

The remand order of the District Judge is, therefore, right and the appeal will be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Landlord and tenant—Registered tenant—Surrender by registered tenant—Collusion with landlord—Prejudicing right of unregistered co-sharer tenant—Validity of surrender—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 86.

It is not open to a registered tenant of an occupancy-holding to surrender, in collusion with the landlord, a part of the holding in favour of the latter, with the express object of destroying the right of his co-sharers or their transferees and thus prejudice their title and possession; and the surrender cannot be accepted as a good foundation for an action in ejectment by the landlord.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal on behalf of the plaintiff in an action in ejectment. The subject-matter of the litigation is an occupancy holding which was purchased by the third defendant on the 30th January 1885. It has been found that the purchase, though made in the name of the third defendant, was for the benefit of his father. Consequently, upon the death of the latter, the third defendant and his brother, the fourth defendant, along with the other heirs of their father, became jointly interested in the tenancy. It appears that the first two defendants held a decree for money against the fourth defendant and in execution thereof attached the tenancy. The wife of the fourth defendant preferred a claim on the allegation that the property belonged to her father-in-law and had been transferred to her by way of gift. This was supported by the third defendant. But the claim was overruled. She then instituted a suit for declaration of her title and was unsuccessful. The decree was thereupon executed and the right, title and interest of the fourth defendant has been purchased by the first two defendants who, it has been found, obtained possession of the land. The third defendant thereupon preferred a claim under section 335 of the Code of 1882 which proved infructuous, and a subsequent suit by him for declaration of title was equally unsuccessful. He then preferred an objection in execution proceedings under section 244, Civil Procedure Code. But there also his efforts were fruitless. Thereupon, on the 17th July 1907, he went to the landlord and executed in his favour a deed of surrender in respect of the portion of the land purchased by the first two defendants at the execution sale. The plaintiff landlord now sues to recover possession on the basis of this surrender, and the question in controversy is, whether the plaintiff is entitled to eject the first two defendants. On his behalf, reliance has been placed upon the provisions of section 86 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and upon the cases of Tamiz-ud din Khan v. Khoda Nawaz Khan (1) and Ananda Mohan Roy Chowdhury v. Guru Dayal Saha (2). It has been broadly contended that as the third defendant was the registered tenant, it was open to him to surrender a part of the holding in favour of the landlord and thus prejudice the title and possession of the first two defendants. In our opinion, this contention cannot prevail. The learned Judge has found that this surrender was collusive. As we understand his decision, his finding is that this surrender was made by the third defendant with the express object of destroying the right of the first two defendants. Now, it cannot be disputed that the effect of the purchase of a part of the holding by the first two defendants was not to operate as forfeiture of the tenancy. In support of this proposition, reference may be made to the leading case of Kabil Sardar v. Chunder Nath Nag Chowdhury (3), as also to the decisions in Chandra Mohun v. Biresswar (4); Durga Prosad v. Doula Ghazee (5); Gozaffur v. Dablish (6) and Jogendra Nath v. Tincowri(7). As was pointed out by Mr. Justice Banerjee in the case of Peary Mohun Mandal v. Radhika Mohun Hazra (8), the effect of his purchase is to constitute the purchaser a joint tenant of the holding along with the tenants whose right, title and interest have not been sold. The landlord is entitled to look for payment of rent to his registered tenants and to bring the holding to sale in execution of the decree obtained against them. But he is not entitled to treat the purchaser as a trespasser and sue him in ejectment. In fact this position is not seriously disputed on behalf of the appellants, and they base their title to re-enter on surrender. The question, therefore, arises whether this surrender, which has been found to be collusive, because made with the express object of defeating the title of the first two defendants, can be accepted as a good foundation for the claim. In our opinion, it cannot be so accepted. The cases of Tamizuddi v. Khoda Newaz (1) and Ananda v. Guru Dayal(2), upon which reliance is placed on behalf of the plaintiff, are plainly distinguishable, and so we need not examine whether they were correctly decided. It is obvious from an examination of the judgment that no question of fraud or collusion arose in those cases.

The result is that the decree made by the learned Judge must be affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Lunacy Act (XXXV of 1858), s. 9—Lunatic's estate—Appointment of manager—Court of Wards, failure to assume superintendence of an estate of lunatic, effect of—Guardian of property, appointment of.

Where a person, possessed of landed estate, was declared by the District Judge as of unsound mind, it was not necessary for the Judge under the provisions of Act XXXV of 1858 to inquire from the Court of Wards whether it would assume the management of estate and only in case of refusal by that Court to appoint a manager of the lunatic's property. The appointment by the Civil Court of a manager of a lunatic's property is valid, until the Court of Wards avails itself of its power of assuming the management of the estate.

Appeal against an order of the District Judge of Gonda, dated 17th November 1911.

Babu Ishwari Dayal, for the Appellant.

Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra and Babu Ishwari Prasad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against an order of the District Judge of Gonda, passed in certain proceedings in lunacy taken under the Lunacy (District Courts) Act, 1858 (Act XXXV of 1858). The facts of the case are that one Shankar Bakhsh, who is a proprietor of certain property and an under-proprietor of certain other property situated in the Gonda district, has become of unsound mind. The learned District Judge has found expressly that Shankar Bakhsh is of unsound mind. Having so found, the other matter which was before the District Judge was the appointment of a manager for the estate of the lunatic. In this connection, there were two applications before the Court. One of them was on behalf of Rani Jairaj Kunwar and the other on behalf of the wife of the lunatic, Musammat Oudhraj Kunwar. Rani Jairaj Kunwar appears to have suggested the Raja of Mankapur as a suitable candidate for the position of guardian of the lunatic. The Raja of Mankapur, however, refused to accept the responsibility. Musammat Oudhraj, the wife of the lunatic, suggested the appointment of Pande Dwarka Prasad, who is described in the learned District Judge's order as a man of wealth and respectability and one who holds the position of Honorary Magistrate. The learned Judge has appointed Pande Dwarka Prasad. The present appeal is against this order and filed on behalf of Musammat Jairaj Kunwar. The main contention for the appellant is that in accordance with the provisions of section 9 of Act XXXV of 1858, the District Judge ought, before passing any order for the appointment of Dwarka Prasad, to have suggested to or directed the Court of Wards to assume the management of the estate. This, however, is not the interpretation which we place upon section 9 and the matter appears to be concluded by a ruling of the Allahabad High Court reported as Manohar Lal v. Gauri Shankar (1). According to the view taken by the Allahabad High Court, until the Court of Wards avails itself of its power of assuming the management of the estate, the appointment by the Civil Court of a manager of a lunatic's property is valid. It cannot, therefore, be said in the present case that Dwarka Prasad's appointment is invalid merely by reason of the fact that the Court of Wards has not been invited by the District Judge to assume the management. As for the merits of the case, it is complained that the District Judge gave the applicant no opportunity of showing cause against the appointment of Dwarka Prasad. Various allegations have been set out before us with the intention of showing that he is not a fit person for appointment. We do not think we can pay any attention to allegations of this kind made on behalf of a person who is at the best a very distant relation of the lunatic. It seems to us that when a person so intimately related to the lunatic as his own wife has expressed a desire for the appointment of a particular person, the appointment of such a person is in every way a proper one. We are not, therefore, disposed to interfere with the Judge's order appointing Dwarka Prasad manager of the lunatic's estate.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this case is between the plaintiffs and the defendants as to succession to the land of Ramdia. The genealogical trees given on page 4 of the paper book are admitted to be correct. The plaintiffs first claimed on the grouud that their ancestors had gifted the land to Ramdia's ancestors, but both the lower Courts have found that no such gift was ever made. As the learned Divisional Judge remarks, it is much more likely that the plaintiffs' ancestors, coming in from another village, Fatehgarh (Naraingarh tahsil), where they still hold ancestral land, acquired land by gift from Ramdia's ancestors. Subsequently, the plaintiffs put forward another reason for their claim, viz., that one of their ancestors had married a daughter of one of Ramdia's ancestors. This plea was advanced by plaintiffs' Pleader on 16th February 1909, the day after issues were framed. Gopala plaintiff was then examined, and stated that Raja had married Mansa's daughter. Pakhar, defendant, was then examined, and admitted that "plaintiffs' ancestors were the daughter's sons of the ancestors of Ramdia" but said he could not give details. The first Court held that this admisssion was not binding on the defendants, but the learned Divisional Judge held that it was. It is also to be noted that the mutation proceedings mention the Bugla Jats (i.e., the defendants) said that the ancestors of Gopala etc, were nawasas (daughter's sons) of Ramdia's ancestor. It is urged on behalf of the defendant-appellants that this was a random statement, not necessarily correct, and that plaintiffs have taken advantage of it to attach a second string to their bow, and that plaintiffs should be required to prove the alleged relationship. But, as already noted, the admission was repeated by Pakhar in the trial of this case, and we see no reason for holding that a matter which has been admitted requires to be proved. We agree, therefore, with the Divisional Judge that the plaintiffs are cognates of Ramdia.

The defendants allege that they are agnates of Ramdia, but both the lower Courts have disbelieved the evidence of the parohit and his bahi, by which it was sought to prove the alleged relationship, and we see no reason to differ from the concurrent findings on this point.

The defendants are, no doubt, of the same got as the deceased Ramdia, but this alone is not sufficient in our opinion. The history of the village is that a Daiya Jat founded it, and called in other Jats and some Brahmins to help him. For defendants it is argued that the presumption is that all Bugla Jats to be found in the village are agnates, but we cannot agree. The village is said to be about 300 years old, and we consider that there can be no presumption that all Bugla Jats in this village are related. One Bugla Jat may have come in from one village, and another Bugla Jat may have come in from another village.

Then it is urged that such distant cognates cannot be preferred to the defendants who are some of the proprietary body, so as to oust the defendants from the possession which they already hold, and Badhawa v. Dewa Singh (1) is relied on. But, as is pointed out in Waryama v. Hira

Nand (2), this case was decided partly on the ground that the common ancestor of the plaintiff and the deceased owner had got the land by gift from the founders of the village, and so in default of heirs of the deceased owner, the land would revert either to the shamilat or to the heirs of the original donor.

But, according to the recent rulings of this Court, the land would not so revert unless there were left no descendants, male or female, of the donee [Gurdit Singh v. Musammat Prem Kaur (3) and Lachhman v. Bhagwan Sahai (4).] The learned Divisional Judge has decided in plaintiffs' favour on the strength of Waryama v. Hira Nand (2). The Counsel for the defendants-appellants urges that in that case the cognates were preferred only to a heterogeneous proprietary body of a different got. But here, too, the proprietary body are not all of one got. The defendants are of the same got as the deceased, no doubt, but in the absence of proof that they are agnates of the deceased, we fail to see how they can have any greater claim than any other members of the proprietary body. Then it is urged that the plaintiffs' degree of relationship in the present case is not clear, and that Waryama v. Hira Nand (2) is an extreme case, and cognates more remotely related than in Waryama v. Hira Nand(2) should not be allowed to take possession. But the principle laid down in Waryama v. Hira Nand (2) would apply to cognates even more distantly related. The principle is, that in the absence of all agnates, any cognate can claim to succeed.

It may, of course, be said that the defendants must be agnates if we go back far enough, which is as much as to say that all men are descended from Adam, but this is an argument which does not appeal to us. We repeat that we cannot look upon the defendants as possessing any higher status than that of the proprietary body in general, and the rights of the proprietary body as a rule are even less than those of the Crown (vide Rattigan's Digest, Art. 28) and certainly cannot be regarded as superior to the claim of persons who are related by blood to the last male owner.

We, therefore, agree with the learned Divisional Judge that the plaintiffs are entitled to a decree.

The plaintiffs have filed a cross-objection as to costs. The first Court dismissed the suit with costs. The learned Divisional Judge, though accepting the plaintiffs' appeal and decreeing the claim, left the first Court's order as to costs intact. We cannot see why the plaintiffs, when succeeding in their claim, should pay the defendants' costs in any Court. At the same time, we note that the case is not one in which the plaintiffs are near relations, and, but for the admission by the defendants, the plaintiffs might have found it very hard to prove any relationship at all; we note, too, that the plaintiffs set up a fanciful story of a gift which they failed to prove, and have succeeded only on a ground which was not originally advanced.

We, therefore, dismiss the appeal, upholding the Divisional Judge's decree for possession, but allowing the cross-objections we order the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

Appeal dismissed.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought to enforce specific performance of a contract.

The defendants, who are the appellants before us, entered into an agreement on the 22nd April 1908, to sell certain landed property to the plaintiff, the father of the substituted minor respondents in this appeal, for the sum of Rs. 25,000. A sum of Rs. 6,000 towards the purchase-money was paid down by the plaintiff at the time of the agreement on the understanding that the necessary conveyance would be executed and duly registered within two months, and that the balance of Rs. 19,000 would be forthcoming on completion. It was, as evidenced by the written agreement Exhibit I, further stipulated that, if the transaction were not completed in consequence of any default on the part of the defendants, the plaintiff would be free to enforce specific performance at law and would be entitled to be credited with interest on his deposit from the date on which it was made; whereas, if the transaction were to fall through owing to the plaintiff's default, then the plaintiff would be entitled to the refund of the bare deposit without interest, and the defendants would be at liberty to dispose of the property in any other way they might choose. The transaction did fall through, and the plaintiff brought his suit for specific performance alone.

The Court below refused him a decree for specific performance, but, nevertheless, gave him a decree for the refund of the deposit with interest, although he had not asked for any such alternative relief. The defendants have now appealed to this Court.

According to the findings of the Court of first instance, which have not been challenged by the respondents either in their cross-appeal or in the arguments before us, the plaintiff alone was to blame for the non-execution and non-registration of the necessary conveyance in June 1908. Subsequently, however, he changed his mind, or circumstances altered; and he brought his suit for specific performance a year later. It is suggested by the learned Subordinate Judge that he did so because of the discovery of minerals on the property; but as an issue on this point was expunged and cross examination upon it was stopped, we think that this further finding ought to be ignored. The contention is that, in the circumstances, the suit ought to have been dismissed in toto.

We have come to the conclusion that, in the broad view that he took of the case, the learned Subordinate Judge was, in the main, right. It does not necessarily follow from the dismissal of a suit for specific performance that an order for the refund of any part payment of the purchase-money should also be denied. If any authority, as to this, be required, we need only refer to the cases of Ibrahim Bhai v. Fletcher (1); Alokeshi Dassi v. Hara Chand Dass (2); Amma Bibi v. Udit Narain Misra (3) and Howe v. Smith (4). The plaintiff could, notwithstanding that his suit for specific performance had been dismissed, and no matter on what ground it failed, have brought a suit for the recovery of his deposit. This is, we think, clear from the terms of section 29 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, and the case of Parangodan Nair v. Perumtoduka Illot Chata (5). And now that the same Courts administer both law and equity, and Order VII, rule 7 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, lays it down that "it shall not be necessary for the plaintiff to ask for general or other relief, which may always be given as the Court may think just to the same extent as if it had been asked for," it seems to us the Subordinate Judge was right in refusing to relegate the parties to further litigation. There could have been but one result of another suit on the contract. As Bowen, L. J., said in Howe v. Smith (4), already referred to, "the question as to the right of the purchase to the return of the deposit money, must, in each case, be a question of the conditions of the contract." Here the conditions of the contract were very clearly expressed. The right

(1) 21 B. 827.
(2) 24 C. 897; 1 C. W. N. 705.
(3) 31 A. 68; 9 C. L. J. 512; 11 Bom. L. R. 525, 19 M. L. J. 295; 6 M. L. T. 89; 1 Ind. Cas. 890.

(5) 27 M. 380.

of the plaintiff to withdraw from the contract and obtain a refund of his deposit money without interest, was recognised and it was distinctly stipulated that the only penalty for the plaintiff's breach should be the loss of interest. It seems to us, therefore, that there is no substance whatever in the contention that, if the plaintiff had expressly claimed the refund in the alternative, the defendants would have been able to prove and set off damages caused by his failure to complete the transaction. Time has been found, as alleged by the defendants, to have been of the essence of the contract, and, therefore, it was for the defendants to make other arrangements as soon as the two months fixed had expired without the completion of the contract. Any loss caused in this respect was their affair. We consider, therefore, that the decree of the Court below is substantially correct, but we are of opinion that it is wrong in one respect, namely, as regards the interest which it has been made to carry. On the plaintiffs' own showing, he would not have accepted the refund, because his case was that he was throughout anxious to enforce the contract as a subsisting one. That being so, he ought, in our view, to be allowed no interest whatever.

The decree will, therefore, be modified so as to allow the plaintiff Rs. 6,000 (rupees six thousand) without any interest up to the date of the lower Court's decree and the usual interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum from that date till the date of realisation. In other respects the decree will stand.

We make no order as to the costs of this appeal.

Rule No. 2265-12.

This rule stands discharged, and as to it we make no order as to costs.

Party wall—Treatment as such by common consent of a wall built by one owner—Evidence of conduct, force of—Memorandum of appeal, point not raised in—Privacy, right of—Easement—Pleading.

Where a wall stands between two houses, it is open to each of the owners of the two houses to show that it is a mere party wall. Although the wall may have been built by one of the two owners, yet if their conduct shows that they have by common consent always treated it as a party wall, it must be treated as such.

A Court is not bound to allow a point to be raised which has not been taken in the grounds of appeal.

A plaintiff cannot ask the defendant to close his windows on the ground of the invasion of his right of privacy when it is proved that the said windows do not look out upon the plaintiff's house but upon certain plots of land acquired by him less than 20 years before the construction of the windows and in respect of which no right of privacy by custom or otherwise has been established.

JUDGMENT.—These are cross-appeals in a suit for recovery of possession over a certain wall, for demolition of a room newly built in the house of the defendant and certain similar reliefs. The facts found by the lower Appellate Court seem to me to dispose at once of the greater part of the plaintiff's case. The plaintiff's father, Hakim Mohammad Sajjad, was the elder brother of the first defendant, Hakim Mohammad Jawad.

The former went to Calcutta and gradually acquired a lucrative practice there as a doctor. He eventually sent for his younger brother, Mohammad Jawad, and associated him with himself in carrying on the said practice. There was a plot of land belonging to the family in their native village, and out of the savings of the income earned by the two brothers in the practice of their profession in Calcutta, a house was built upon a portion (apparently just about half) of the said land, which is the house marked A in the plan prepared in the present suit. The younger brother, Mohammad Jawad, eventually married a lady of considerable wealth and returned to his own village. He then proceeded to construct, with the consent of his elder brother, the house marked B on the plan, adjoining the house A on the east side, and in this house he eventually resided, while Hakim Mohammad Sajjad, and his sons after his death, remaining in the house marked A. From a variety of circumstances disclosed by the evidence, both oral and documentary, the lower Appellate Court has come to the conclusion that, from the time when the house marked B was built, the wall between the two houses was, by common consent of the two brothers, treated as nothing more than a party wall between the houses, and that the brothers were joint owners of the same. The evidence has been discussed before me in considerable detail and I may say that I think the finding of the learned Additional Judge is a very reasonable one. It is in any case a finding of fact, and I do not see that the plaintiff-appellant has made out the beginning of a case against the defendant in second appeal. He seems to think that the mere fact that the house A was built before the house B is in itself sufficient to make it impossible for the wall between the two houses to be nothing more than a party wall and the joint property of the owners of the said houses. I find no force in this contention. There is good evidence that, at the time when the house marked A was built, the intention of the parties was, at sometime or another, as soon as funds were available, to extend the building over the rest of the land belonging to the family to the east of the said house marked A. Then, at the time when the second house marked B came to be built, there is abundant evidence that what was formerly the eastern wall of the first house was treated by consent of both parties as nothing more than a party wall between the two houses. It may be that the Courts below could have determined this suit upon a somewhat different basis by holding that there was no adequate evidence that Mohammad Sajjad and Mohammad Jawad had ever come to a formal partition of the land owned by them in their native village, or of the houses built thereon; but assuming for the sake of argument that the house marked A could be treated as the separate property of the plaintiff and his brothers (I may note in passing that the plaintiff has two brothers who have refused to join with him in this vexatious litigation against his uncle, and whom he has, therefore, been compelled to implead as defendants), and that the house marked B is the exclusive property of Mohammad Jawad, defendant No. 1, I think it is fully established by the finding of the lower Appellate Court that the wall between the two houses is nothing more than a party wall and the joint property of the persons in possession of the two houses. This finding is sufficient to justify the dismissal of the plaintiff's appeal, except as regards one single point. The construction of which the plaintiff complained was upon an upper story of the house marked B, and had been effected by means of beams resting upon a portion of what I have held to be the party wall between the two houses. The plaintiff claimed the removal of this structure and of these beams, primarily on the ground that the wall in question was his exclusive property and the defendant had no right to make any use of it whatever in erecting an upper story on a portion of his roof. He further claimed, however, that there were small doors or windows on the east side of the upper story room of the plaintiff's house, which had been closed by the new constructions set up by the defendant Mohammad Jawad, and that the plaintiff had a right of easement in respect of light and air through these doors or windows which had been interfered with by the new constructions. The Court of first instance granted the plaintiff the relief claimed in respect of this part of the case upon a finding that what has now been held to be the party wall between the two houses was the exclusive property of the plaintiff; it consequently did not enter into any discussion of the claim to an alleged right of easement. The learned Additional Judge on appeal found against the plaintiff on the question of the ownership of the wall and did not go on to discuss the alternative plea to relief on the ground of easement which had certainly been put forward in the plaint. I have felt some hesitation as to whether I ought not to remit an issue on this point, but I am most reluctant to allow this preposterous and vexatious litigation to continue. I am content to say that I have examined the evidence and that I do not believe a case for relief on the ground of easement has been made out in respect of the small doors or windows in question. Moreover, I do not think that this point has really been taken in the memorandum of appeal presented on behalf of the plaintiff to this Court. It is certainly not pleaded in express terms that the lower Appellate Court should have determined the question whether the plaintiff was or was not entitled to a right of easement in respect of the free admission of light or air through any doors or windows in the upper story of his house, and whether such right had been interfered with by the new constructions of the defendant Mohammad Jawad. The fifth paragraph of the memorandum of appeal I can only understand as referring to the finding of the lower Appellate Court on quite a different question, namely, the alleged interference with the plaintiff's right of privacy. I am not bound to allow any point to be raised in appeal which is not taken in the mamorandum of appeal itself, and I do not think that this is a suitable case for permitting the plaintiff any such indulgence. The question about the right of privacy to which I have referred above has been very properly decided against the plaintiff by the lower Appellate Court. The new windows or doors which the defendant Mohammad Jawad is said to have opened in his own upper story do not look out upon the plaintiff's house marked A in the plan, but upon certain plots of land to the south of that house which were only acquired by the appellant's father in the year 1900, and in respect of which no right of privacy by custom or otherwise has been proved. They seem to be mainly occupied by a mosque and the courtyard appertaining to the same. The plaintiff's appeal, therefore, fails altogether and I dismiss it with costs.

I have before me also a cross-appeal by the defendant Mohammad Jawad in respect of the order directing him to close a certain spout. That spout, it has been held by the Courts below, has been newly opened by the said appellant in his upper story and it discharges water on to the plot of land occupied by the mosque. The Courts below have not recorded any finding as to whether the plaintiff and his brothers are or are not the exclusive owners either of this plot of land or of the mosque standing thereon. The plaintiff undoubtedly claimed the plot of land in question as the property of himself and his brother. The defendant replied that this plot of land No. 1290 had been gifted by the plaintiff's father to Musammat Sultan Begam, the wife of the said defendant. Neither party pleaded that the plot in question was occupied by a mosque, that it had been dedicated to the Almighty or that it belonged to the public generally. The defendant-appellant does not seem to have proved his plea regarding the alleged gift to his wife. The lower Appellate Court contented itself with remarking that the plaintiff appeared to have in any case a sufficient interest in this mosque, or in the land on which it stood, to entitle him to proceed against a trespasser, or a person interfering with the same by opening a new spout so as to discharge water upon it. I am not prepared to say that, on the pleadings and on the findings arrived at by the lower Appellate Court, this decision is wrong. I accordingly dismiss also the defendant's cross-appeal with costs.

Valuation of suit—Jurisdiction—Appeal—Suit for declaration in respect of land.

AIYYA PILLAY v. VRITHACHELLAM PILLAY.

For the purposes of determining the course of appeal and jurisdiction, the value of a suit for a declaration that an alienation of land is null and void so far as plaintiff's proprietary rights in it are concerned, is thirty times the land revenue of the land in respect of which the declaration is sought.

Rai Bahadur Lala Sukh Dial, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant, Sahib Ditta, who was a minor at the time when the appeal was filed in this Court, has now come of age and he has applied that his next friend, Musammat Bhagwan Devi, be discharged. He elects to proceed with the appeal. The application is accepted and the name of Musammat Bhagwan Devi is struck out.

It also appears from Sahib Ditta's application that he has compromised the case with Jinda Ram, respondent, who was a rival pre-emptor, and Rai Sukh Dial, who appears for Jinda Ram, states that his client has no desire to contest the appeal and prays that his name be struck out. We grant the application and strike out the name of Jinda Ram.

The first question for decision is whether an appeal lies to this Court or not. The value of the suit, so far as the claim for pre-emption in regard to two-thirds share of the land in dispute is concerned, is admittedly Rs. 207-15-8, and we have to see what the value of the suit is as regards the claim in respect of the remaining one-third share of the land in question, as to which the appellant sued for a declaration to the effect that the sale thereof by his elder brother was not binding upon him and was null and void so far as his proprietary rights in it were concerned. The appellant valued the relief which he sought in respect of that one-third share at Rs. 1,055, but, on the authority of Jalla v. Gehna (1), the value of this kind of suit is thirty times the land revenue of the land in respect of which the declaration is sought, and it is not pretended that thirty times the land revenue of the one-third share in dispute is more than Rs. 104. The total value of the suit as brought by the plaintiff is, therefore, not more than about Rs. 312 and as both the Courts have agreed in dismissing the suit, no further appeal lies to this Court. Ghulam Ghaus v. Nabi Bakhsh (2), which is relied upon by the plaintiff's Pleader, is clearly inapplicable to the facts as stated above.

It is not contended that there is any ground for revision in this case under either clause (a) or clause (b) of the old section 70 of the Punjab Courts Act, and we, therefore, dismiss this appeal.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), Sch. II, Art. 18—Suit by trustee—Claim based on agreement by defendant to pay a specified sum to plaintiff.

A suit by a trustee for the recovery of a specified amount agreed to be paid to him by the defendant for being used as a trust is not a suit relating to a trust within the meaning of Article 18 of Schedule II of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act and is triable by a Small Cause Court if the amount of the claim falls within its pecuniary jurisdiction.

Sundralingam Chetty v. Mariyappa Chetty, 26 M. 200 and Venkatachelapatti v. Kanakasabapathy Pillay, 20 M. L. J. 146; 5 Ind. Cas. 912; 8 M. L. T. 67, referred to.

Case referred, under Order XLVI, rule 7 of Act V of 1908, by the District Judge of Tanjore, in O. P. No. 859 of 1911 (O. S. No. 254 of 1911 on the file of the Court of the District Munsif of Tiruvadi and S. C. S. No. 374 of 1911 on the file of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Tanjore).

FACTS.—The following plaint was filed in the Court of the District Munsif of Tiruvadi:—

* * * * * * * * * * * * *

3" The plaintiff is the Dharmakarta and the pooja maker for the Samadi of Tatwarayaswami in Keel Kapisthalam aforesiad.

4 "For the pooja of the said Samadi, Rs. 200 was given as a present by one Ramaswami Pillay who is not a party herein. That amount was given as a loan to Siva Chidambaram Pillai, who is not a party herein, by the plaintiff and by Ramasawmi Pillai who made the present aforesaid, and for that amount an othi deed was executed on 3rd July 1902 by Siva Chidambaram Pillai aforesaid in favour of Ramasawmi Pillai and was also duly registered. In accordance with the term of that othi deed, Ramaaswami Pillai aforesaid let the othi lands for the Samadi of Tatwarayaswami aforesaid to Siva Chidambaram Pillai aforesaid on lease, had enjoyment thereof and gave their profits for the pooja Naivedyam of the said Samadi.

5 "Afterwards Ramaswami Pillai aforesaid transferred the said othi right created in his favour to the defendant in this suit on 16th March 1909 and left the lands also in possession of the defendant.

6 "Then an assignment was made to the defendant by Ramasawami Pillai aforesaid so that the amount of Rs. 200 as per the said othi deed may be given to the plaintiff; and in the said deed of transfer also it is stated that through the assignment of the payment to be made to the plaintiff, the pooja maker of the said Samadi, it has been debited to self; further, Ramasawmi Pillai aforesaid made an assignment on the said date to the defendant that payment be made to the plaintiff of Rs. 95, the value of 40 kalams of paddy, being the kuttagai balance due from the said Siva Chidambaram Pillai's heirs who had leasehold enjoyment of the lands on his behalf till the time of the said deed of transfer; a deed of transfer of lease was also executed and the defendant also agreed with the plaintiff on 16th March 1909 aforesaid at Kasba Mayaveram in the jurisdiction of the District Munsif of Mayaveram to pay off the said amount of Rs. 295.

7 "The defendant, who is accordingly in enjoyment of the othi property, has not paid as agreed Rs. 200, the amount of consideration for the said deed of transfer, and Rs. 95 in the matter of the transfer of lease.

8 "As the defendant, who is bound to give the above compound amount of Rs. 295 to the plaintiff, has not made immediate payment, it is reasonable that by way of damages, interest at the rate of one per cent. a month should be paid on the said amount.

9 "The cause of action in respect of this claim has accrued at Kasba Mayaveram, Mayaveram District Munsifi from 16th March 1909, when the defendant agreed to pay to the plaintiff the amounts aforesaid assigned in accordance with the said transfer deeds.

10 "Although the cause of action has arisen in the jurisdiction of the District Munsif of Mayaveram, yet, as the defendant lives at Divangudi in the jurisdiction of this Court, this claim has been preferred in this Court.

11 "Jurisdictional value for purposes of Court-fees put in by the plaintiff on this claim is Rs. 360.

12 "The plaintiff, therefore, prays that this Court may be pleased to pass a decree that the under-mentioned amount, further interest and costs of suit be paid by the defendant."

On this plaint, the District Munsif passed the following order:—

"The suit is based on an agreement by the defendant to the plaintiff to pay him a specified sum of money. The fact that the money is claimed by the plaintiff as a trustee cannot make the suit one relating to a trust. The suit, as framed, is clearly cognizable by a Small Cause Court. It is, therefore, returned."

Thereupon, the plaintiff presented the plaint to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Tanjore, who exercises Small Cause powers up to the pecuniary limit of Rs. 500.

The Subordinate Judge passed the following order:—

"The plaintiff brings this suit as poojari and trustee of some Samadi. It is a suit relating to trust, and, as such, falls under Article 18 of Schedule II of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. I return the plaint to be presented to the proper Court. Costs to abide the result."

Subsequently, on plaintiff's application, the District Judge of Tanjore referred the matter for the order of the High Court.

The parties were unrepresented,

NAND LAL v. GOOJAR.

The High Court passed the following

ORDER.—No one appears on either side. We are of opinion that the suit is cognizable by the Small Cause Court. The only reason suggested by the Subordinate Judge for his contrary view is the fact that the plaintiff is a trustee; and that is clearly not a sufficient reason. [Vide Sundaralingam Chetti v. Mariyappa Chetty (1) and Venkatachelapathy v. Kanakasabapathi Pillay (2).] These authorities support the view that the present case is not a suit relating to a trust within the meaning of Article 18 of the second Schedule of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act and is cognizable by the Subordinate Judge.

We set aside the order of the Subordinate Judge and direct him to receive the plaint and dispose of the suit according to law.

Order set aside.

Lala Balwant Rai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The question for decision by the Division Bench is given in the order of the Judge who referred the case dated the 17th May 1911. Briefly, the question is whether a mortgagee under a deed of conditional sale, who has not taken foreclosure proceedings under Regulation XVII of 1806 within 12 years of the date fixed in the deed for payment of the mortgage-money, is barred by time when suing for possession as an owner. The Judge who referred this case found some conflict between the rulings reported as Bhandari v. Musammat Jasodhan (1) and Moman v. Ishri Pershad (2) on the one hand, and Nagar v. Saudagar (3) on the other.

In Bhandari v. Musammat Jasodhan (1), it was held that the plaintiff's suit was within time as he had taken foreclosure proceedings according to the Regulation within 12 years of the due date. The case is, therefore, distinguishable from the present.

The case reported as Moman v. Ishri Pershad (2) is on all fours with the present case. In that case the suit, not having been instituted within 12 years of the date fixed on the mortgage-deed for payment of the mortgage-money, was held to be barred by limitation either under Article 135 or Article 144 of the second Schedule of the Limitation Act.

In Nagar v. Saudagar (3), the head-note is that there is no time limit for the foreclosure of the mortgage by conditional sale, and the mortgagee in possession is entitled to take out such proceedings at any time during the subsistence of his mortgage. The important words to be noted in this are "the mortgagee in possession."

In the present case, the mortgagee was entitled to immediate possession from the date of the mortgage, but the lower Courts have concurred in holding that he never took possession under the mortgage, and as this is an appeal under section 70 (1) (b) of the Punjab Courts Act, we are precluded from questioning the finding of fact. In Nagar v. Saudagar (3), the Judges were careful to distinguish Moman v. Ishri Pershad (2) by saying that "no question arises in the present case as to the suit being barred under Article 135 as it is not a suit for possession." That was a suit for declaration that plaintiffs-mortgagees who had all along been in possession were absolute owners by reason of foreclosure. The present case is distinguishable from it. Moman v. Ishri Pershad (2) was followed in Civil Appeal No. 915 of 1906 and also in No. 792 of 1905. We see no reason to dissent from the views expressed in the above quoted rulings and we, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs, without calling upon respondent's Pleader to reply.

(1) 90 P. R. 1895.
(3) 57 P. R. 1908; 115 P. W. R. 1908.

Appeal dismissed.

Insolvency, right to benefits of—Insolvent's accounts—Effect of failure to keep proper accounts—Reckless contracting of debts.

The benefit of Insolvency Acts is intended for traders who act honestly and straightforwardly and according to the recognized proper mode essential to knowing their position but who through misfortune incur loss. The benefit should not be extended to those traders who fail to keep proper accounts or who deal extravagantly and contract debts recklessly without any reasonable prospect of being able to pay them.

Appeal against the judgment and order passed by the learned Commissioner of Insolvency in Case No. 121 of 1909.

JUDGMENT.

FOX, C. J.—It appears to me that the proper order in the case would have been an order dismissing the petition. A grosser case of extravagance and reckless contracting of debts without any reasonable prospects of being able to pay them can scarcely be imagined.

Further it seems obvious that the insolvent had not made a full and proper disclosure of his dealings and his affairs. The excuse that Burmese paddy brokers do not keep accounts or are negligent about accounts cannot be accepted. If they or any other traders fail to keep proper accounts, they must understand that they do so at the risk of the benefits of Insolvency Acts not being extended to them if they fall into difficulties. These benefits are intended for traders who act honestly and straightforwardly and according to the recognized proper mode essential to knowing their position, and through misfortune incur loss.

I cannot agree with the learned Judge's definite statements that there had been no fraud on the part of the insolvent, and that his creditors had got all his property. It appears to me that there is manifestly strong ground for further inquiry into the extent of the insolvent's interest in the Taungwin estate, and the reality of his sale of a one-third share in it. As to the former, the insolvent himself admitted that his mother did not subscribe anything towards the purchase-money of the property, and her name was put in as a purchaser only because she was the eldest of the family. As regards the reality of the sale, the insolvent appears to have continued to receive a share of the rents after the sale, as if nothing had happened to affect his interest in the property. The reason given by the learned Judge for not acceding to the opposing creditors' request to postpone the discharge without protection, does not appear to me to be a very cogent one under the circumstances.

In my opinion, the order, so far as it gave protection from arrest during the two years for which the insolvent's discharge was postponed, should be altered by striking out the words "with protection." The appellant should have his costs of this appeal out of the estate if any is recovered.

Babu Basdeo Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant in this case, Raja Mohammad Abul Hasan Khan, was a defendant in a suit brought in the Court of the Munsif of Fatehpur (Bara Banki) by the plaintiffs-respondents Keshori Lal and Sarabjit. The suit was one for recovery of possession of certain trees standing on plots Nos. 672 and 664 in the village of Pakariapur. The case of the plaintiffs was that the trees standing on these plots had been mortgaged to their father on the 19th April 1892 by the defendants, Lalta and Luchmi Narayan. Under the terms of the mortgage, the mortgagee was entitled to take possession after a period of five years in case the mortgage-debt was not sooner paid. They alleged that in accordance with this condition, their father got possession of the trees in suit in 1897 and that from that date he, and, after his decease, they themselves remained in possession of the trees till the 11th May 1910, when they were forcibly dispossessed by a servant of the appellant. The relief sought by the plaintiffs was either that they might be put in possession of the trees as mortgagees or that they might have a decree for the mortgage-money against the mortgagors. The defence raised on behalf of the defendant-appellant was to the effect that Lalta and Lachmi, the mortgagors, had no title to transfer any interest in the trees to the plaintiffs and that, therefore, the plaintiffs were not entitled to a decree for possession. The Court of first instance refused to give the plaintiffs a decree for possession. It gave them a decree for the mortgage-money against the first and the second defendants. In appeal this decree was reversed by the Subordinate Judge of Bara Banki. He differed from the Munsif and held that it was not proved that Lalta and Lachmi had no transferable interest in the trees and that, therefore, the plaintiffs were entitled to recover possession. He gave a decree accordingly. This decree is attacked here on behalf of the appellant on the same grounds on which the claim of the plaintiffs was resisted in the Court of first instance. It is argued that under the terms of the wajib-ul-arz embodying the village custom, the mortgagors had no right to transfer any interest in these trees to the plaintiffs' predecessor-in-title. The case for the appellant rests entirely upon the provisions of the wajib-ul-arz and that portion of the Settlement Record which is known as the Hissa Kashi Baghat. I do not consider it necessary to enter into a discussion of all the points pressed on behalf of the appellant in support of the argument that by the village custom the mortgagors had no right to transfer the trees. Whatever may be the interpretation to be put on these documents, it is quite clear and is in fact admitted that they contain no provisions enabling the Talukdar to re-enter and take possession of any trees which have been dealt with by tenants in a manner contrary to that allowed by the village custom. The matter, therefore, resolves itself into this. Are the plaintiffs, who were admittedly in possession from 1897 till 1910, entitled to recover possession as against the defendant-appellant? Under the law they are clearly entitled to possession unless the appellant has succeeded in establishing that he is the rightful owner. The rule of law is that possession is good title against all persons except the rightful owner and entitles the possessor to maintain an action in ejectment against any other person than such owner who dispossesses him [Cf. Gopal v. Sant Bakhsh (1) and the authorities referred to in that ruling]. It is admitted that in the present case a servant of the defendant-appellant took forcible possession of these trees in May 1910 and, as already said, there is no evidence to show that the appellant is the rightful owner or that he was in any way entitled to take possession. It follows, therefore, that whether or not the plaintiffs have a good title, they are justified in asking that their possession be maintained against any person who has not proved himself to be the rightful owner of the trees. In my opinion, the appellant has failed to prove his title and this being so I consider that the decree of the Court is quite correct and that the plaintiffs are entitled to have the appellant ejected. It was argued that the suit brought by the plaintiffs was not one based upon a possessory title but, so far as the case of the appellant was concerned, it is quite clear that as against him the case was one of this nature. The appeal must, therefore, fail and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Mr. B. Sitaram Raw, for the Appellants.

Mr. K. Narain Row, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Mr. Narain Row took the preliminary objection that the 1st appellant could not prosecute this appeal since she had parted with her interest in the subject-matter of the suit. The appellant is still on the record as defendant in the suit. In our opinion, the preliminary objection fails.

The decision of this appeal turns on the effect to be given to a clause in a sale-deed, Exhibit H, executed in 1874 by certain wargdars, Krishna Naick and his wife and mother. By this document, the vendor purported to sell to one Juan Fernandez, a portion of the lands comprised in the warg, while retaining for the benefit of Krishna Naick's son, Vankatesu Naick, their warg lands, and also certain Kumaki rights over a specified area which admittedly would ordinarily attach to the warg lands, which were sold to Juan Fernandez. It is these Kumaki rights which are now the subject of dispute. The plaintiff (respondent), who claims under Venkatesu Naick, sues to enforce them, which defendants (appellants) who now represent the vendee under Exhibit H, claim them as inseparably attached to the warg lands, title to which has passed to them.

The District Munsif dismissed the suit, holding that the plaintiff had no interest in the plaint land, and that the defendants were entitled to enjoy the Kumaki rights therein as being attached to their warg lands.

The District Judge reversed this decision apparently holding that the Kumaki rights were transferable and were validly transferred under Exhibit H, and that the defendants were precluded from contesting the validity of the transfer. He, therefore, gave a decree in plaintiff's favour and granted a perpetual injunction restraining the defendants from interfering with the land in question.

It seems to us that the view of the District Munsif is correct. There is no dispute now as to the nature and extent of Kumaki privileges. "Kumaki" land, (i e., lands over which Kumaki privileges are exercised), are waste lands adjoining warg lands on which the ryot holding the latter is allowed to collect leaves for manure and to pasture his cattle as an assistance to the cultivation of the warg lands. This is in effect the definition of Kumaki found in the District Manual, as also that adopted by this Court in Secretary of State for India v. Krishnayya (1), in which the exact meaning of the term is fully discussed. These Kumaki privileges are extinguishable by Government, which may assign the land over which they are exercised to another person than the holder [Vide Subbaraya v. Krishnappa (2) and Secretary of State for India v. Krishnaya (1)], and it is abundantly clear that the reason of their existence is simply to facilitate the cultivation of the warg lands which they adjoin.

Can such privileges be transferred apart from the lands for the benefit of which they are allowed? In our opinion, they cannot.

[They are not rights "in gross"—to follow the classification of English law—but rights "appendant" and as such inseparable from the land to which they are appendant. Strictly speaking, of course, they are only "rights" in a limited sense inasmuch as they are exercised only by the permission of Government, and it is on this ground a Bench of this Court held in Nagappa v. Subba (3) that the Kumaki' right was not, strictly speaking, an easement. This decision was arrived at solely with reference to the questions of whether the claim there under adjudication was barred by section 15 of the Easements Act, and does not, in our opinion, preclude us from holding that the Kumaki right is essentially in the nature of a right by way of easement as defined by section 4 of the Easements Act [Vide illustration (d)] and one which should be regarded as governed by the principle of section 6 (c) of the Transfar of Property Act.

The learned Vakil for the respondent has endeavoured to support the District Judge's decision on the ground that the appellants are estopped from contesting the validity of the severance of the Kumaki rights from the warg land. In our opinion, no question of estoppel arises. The respondent sues to establish a right, and, if we hold—as we do—that the right in question is not his, but passed with the warg land to Juan Fernandez and his assignee, the plaintiff's suit must fail.

We set aside the decree of the District Judge and dismiss the suit, but, in the circumstances of the case, direct that each side must bear its own costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

Stamp Act (II of 1899), Sch. I, Art. 1—Acknowledgment of debt—Balance-sheet signed by debtor—Amount due taken to separate account "errors and omissions excepted"—Whether such acknowledgment requires one anna stamp.

A balance-sheet prepared and signed by debtor and showing a balance, errors and omissions excepted, due from him and which was carried forward, is not an acknowledgment of debt within the meaning of Article 1 Schedule I of the Stamp Act, 1899, which requires an anna stamp, and is admissible in evidence without being stamped.

Nund Kumar Shaha v. Shurnomoyi, 15 C. 162, followed.

Appeal from the decree of Mr. Justice Chitty, made in Original Suit No. 694 of 1911, dated August 27, 1911.

Mr. J. E. Bagram, instructed by Messrs. Morgan and Co., Attorneys, for the Plaintiff-Appellant.

GALSTAUN v. HATCHISON.

JUDGMENT.

JENKINS, C. J.—The plaintiff has brought this suit to recover Rs. 58,932-1-3. In his plaint he alleges that from and after the 28th August 1905, he and the defendant had various monetary dealings; that the defendant from time to time made various part payments on account of principal and interest: that on the 1st September 1908 the account was adjusted and stated between the plaintiff and the defendant showing a balance of Rs. 45,039-9-3 due to the plaintiff and the same was admitted and signed by the defendant as correct; that thereafter further dealings took place; and that there is now due and owing from the defendant to the plaintiff Rs. 58,932-1-3.

The plaint was instituted on the 6th of July 1911, and, as provided by Order VIII, rule 1, the defendant was required to present a written statement of his defence.

The defendant entered an appearance through his Attorney, but he failed to present a written statement.

The suit was transferred from the list of defended causes to the list of undefended causes, and was heard by Chitty, J., who passed a decree in the plaintiff's favour for Rs. 2,435-10-6 with interest and costs.

He, however, refused the rest of the plaintiff's claim, not because it was not proved, but because it was barred by limitation as the document by which it was sought to gain the advantage of a fresh period of limitation did not bear an anna stamp, and so (in his opinion) was inadmissible.

From this decree, the present appeal has been preferred by the plaintiff.

It is beyond dispute that the sum of Rs. 58,932-1-3 would be recoverable unless barred by limitation, and that there is an acknowledgment of liability made in writing, and signed by the defendant on the 1st of September 1908, which would be a complete answer to the bar of limitation if it can be utilized.

Chitty, J., held that this acknowledgment could not be proved for want of an anna stamp, as in his opinion the instrument was an acknowledgment of a debt within the meaning of Article 1 of Schedule I to the Indian Stamp Act, 1899.

For the instrument to require such a stamp, all the conditions indicated in that Article must be present.

Though each case must depend on its own peculiar circumstances, I am unable to draw any fair distinction to the plaintiff's detriment between the present case and that which was the subject of decision in Nund Kumar Shaha v. Shurnomoye (1), where it was held that a balance-sheet prepared and signed by the defendant and showing a balance due from him was not an acknowledgment within the corresponding article of the Stamp Act of 1879.

If anything, the present instrument is more removed from the provisions of the Stamp Act, for here a balance was carried forward, errors and omissions were expressly excepted; and, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, I am not satisfied that the document on which the plaintiff relies is an acknowledgment within the meaning of Article 1. Any other conclusion might, I think, lead to considerable inconvenience and detriment.

The result then is that, in my opinion, the plaintiff is entitled to the relief he seeks, and the decree of Chitty, J, should be varied by passing in the plaintiff's favour a decree for Rs. 58,932-5-3 with costs of the suit as directed by Chitty, J, and also the costs of the appeal.

WOODROFFE, J.—Learned Counsel has relied on the decision reported in Nand Kumar Shaha v Shurnomoyee (1). On the question whether a particular document in suit amounts to an acknowledgment of a debt, one decision can hardly be an authority for another, for each case must depend on its own circumstances. The observations, however, as to the general nature of signed accounts in the cases next mentioned are relevant to the matter before us. If, however, we look at that decision in Nund Kumar Shaha v. Shurnomoyee (1), we find nothing stated beyond this:—"We have looked at the document ourselves, and we think that it is not an acknowledgment of a debt within the meaning of Article 1, Schedule I, of the Stamp Act and we are fortified in this opinion by a decision of Mr. Justice Prinsep and Mr. Justice O'Kinealy on a very similar point in the case of Brojo Gobind Shaha v. Goluck Chunder Shaha (2)." I may note in passing that the suit in this case was brought to recover what was due on a balance or

(1) 15 C. 162.
(2) 9 C. 127.

nikash sheet after crediting the defendant with certain amounts admitted to be due to him. It appears, therefore, that the amount of the balance sheet did not show the actual debt due by the defendant. The case, as appears from the report, was decided with reference to that in Brojo Gobind Shaha v. Goluck Chunder Shaha (2), which was stated to raise a very similar point, and we must, therefore, look at the latter case. This held that the document in question was not a promissory-note and did not require a stamp. Prinsep, J., said:—"It is exactly of the same nature as the document which forms the subject of the suit in the case of Brojender Coomar v. Bromomoye Chowdhrani (3)." Then citing White, J.'s judgment in that case, he dismissed the appeal. We are thus taken back to the decision in Brojender Coomar v. Bromomoye Chowdhrani (3), which was the foundation for the decision of the other two cases. Now, the facts of this latter decision are not entirely the same as those before us, but, as stated, the observation as to the general nature of signed accounts, is helpful. There a sum of Rs. 20,825 made up of seven different advances on different dates was sued for. Each advance was entered on a hatchitta and was signed as it was made. The first advance was stamped and the remaining six were not. These entries were held not to come within Stamp Act for the following reasons:—The account had two sides, viz., one side sums advanced, and the other of those received, the Court said "the amount due varies from time to time, and depends upon the relation of the amount advanced to the amount received. In the present case no sum is entered under the head of amount received, but that is an accident, and makes no difference in considering the question as to what is the nature of the document which is offered in evidence. The intention of the parties in requiring the signature or seal of the borrowers to each sum advanced is, strictly speaking, to secure under their hands an acknowledgment that the sum is advanced. Whether or not that sum is due, or a larger sum or a less sum, depends upon the state of the account." The entries were not intended to stand alone, in which case the Court said it might have been contended that they were acknowledgments requiring a stamp. In that case also, no sum was entered under the "amount received" column, yet the Court held that to be an accident and made no difference in considering the question as to what was the nature of the document (viz., an account), which was offered in evidence. If, for instance, an account is balanced at the end of a year and is accepted as correct and a separate entry were made admitting its correctness and acknowledging the balance found to be due on that account as owing to the creditor, then I conceive that such an entry might amount to an acknowledgment within the meaning of the Stamp Act and require a stamp. The Court in such a case might, perhaps, reasonably infer an intention to acknowledge a debt notwithstanding that such debt was transferred to the next yearly account. The question is, however, one of intention to be gathered from the circumstances of each case, and it is only necessary to deal with the facts before us. In the present case, the words "I accept this correct" were written by the plaintiff and signed by the defendant against the balance of the 1st September 1903, showing, (errors and omissions excepted), that a sum of Rs. 45,039-9-3 appeared to be payable on that account by the defendant up to that date. It was an admission that up to that date the account was correct. This amount was carried forward in the account which was continued and further debit entries were made after the date of the acknowledgment, for which alone the plaintiff has been given a decree. To use the language in the case last cited, it was an accident that no further credit entries were made. There is nothing to show that it was intended that none were to be made or that the account should close with the acknowledgment. This accident did not, in the terms of the case cited, alter the character of the document. Balances were frequently struck during the course of the account, the last being in July 1911. The plaintiff in his evidence stated that it did not occur to him at the time that the acknowledgment was taken with the object of supplying evidence (of the debt) but that he did it "so as not to worry for accounts in future. I suppose I took it to use it when the time came as I am now doing." The question is whether in fact the writing is now used as an acknowledgment of a debt as apart from an acknowledgment of liability, and whether it is in fact so within the meaning of the Stamp Act

(3) 4 C. 885; 3 C. L. R. 520.

It may be that as the result of such acknowledgment of liability, together with the accident itself and other evidence in the case, the law annexes as a consequence the obligation to pay the sum against which the acceptance of the defendant appears, but, from this it does not follow that the defendant intended to acknowledge that particular sum as a debt within the meaning of the Stamp Act. Further. the account was E. and O. E. Even assuming that such a provision was for the benefit of the creditor only and that the defendant, had he gone into the witness-box, would have been bound by his signature, (though it is by no means clear that the defendant would not also have shown that such signature was given by mistake), it may well be argued that the insertion of such proviso made the defendant's acceptance one which was conditional on the correctness of the account. Let it be supposed that an inquiry under the E. and O. E. provision disclosed that the amount shown in the balance was incorrect and that the amount due was more or less than that claimed, could it be said than that the defendant had acknowledged a "debt" when the acknowledged sum did not represent that rightly claimed? It may be admitted that the case in Nund Kumar Shaha v. Shurnomoye (1) is in one respect perhaps stronger than the present one, (for the signature against each sum as it was advanced was strong evidence to show that the signature was given to witness that particular advance) as also that the dividing line may be in many cases a narrow one, but in a matter of this kind, which seems to put the matter, most adversely to the plaintiff, at least open to doubt, I think we ought to follow the general principles of the decision in Brojender Coomar v. Aromoyee Chowdhrani (3), upon which learned Counsel for the appellant relies, and I agree in holding that the entry relied on does not, under the circumstances of this case, amount to an acknowledgment which requires an anna stamp.

Vendor and purchaser—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 92—Rescission of sale-deed by mutual consent—Parol evidence, admissibility of—Non-delivery of possession after sale—Acquisition of prescriptive title—Onus of proof.

Oral evidence to prove that parties to a sale-deed, which was duly executed and registered, subsequently rescinded it by mutual consent, is inadmissible under section 92 of the Indian Evidence Act.

Umedmal Motiram v. Davu bin Dhondiba, 2 B. 547, referred to.

Where a sale-deed has been duly executed by one party to another and duly registered, the onus of proving that possession was not given to the vendee in accordance with the sale-deed and that the vendor had acquired a title by prescription lies on the party asserting it.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of Cuddapah, in A. S. No. 84 of 1909, presented against the decree of the District Munsif of Prodattur in O. S. No. 486 of 1907.

FACTS.—The facts of the case are clear from the following judgment of the lower Appellate Court:—

Plaintiff brought a suit to establish his title and recover possession of certain immoveable property which he purchased from the first defendant. The suit having been dismissed, he appeals.

He purchased the property in 1907 for Rs. 1,500 under a registered sale-deed Exhibit A. Second defendant contends that the property was conveyed to her husband and one Rosiah in 1877 under Exhibit II. It is executed by first defendant and one Veerakka. Who that Veerakka is and what interest she had in the property is not known. It mentions the relationship of all sorts of persons and purports to make over the entire property to the transferees on condition that they are to pay Rs. 100 every year for maintenance and they have to discharge the debts due. I shall first consider thisdocument. It is clearly not a sale-deed. The only way of looking upon it is to consider it as a surrender of her rights by a Hindu widow. Under Behari Lal v. Madho Lal Ahir (1), this would be a perfeclty valid transaction if she had conveyed the whole of her estate, without any reservation; but, inasmuch as she had reserved to herself a portion, I consider it enough to invalidate the document. There is another proviso in it. It says that in case of disputes, she is to get back a portion of the lands in lieu of the Rs. 100. This is clearly not a conveyance of the entire estate.

Not long after this document, second defendant's husband died and the two widows, first and second defendants, continued to live together. First defendant died whilst the suit was pending but she admitted plaintiff's claim. Now, the plaintiff has put in Exhibits D to K, which clearly show that she was managing the property; which goes to support the contention of the plaintiff that Exhibit II was never given effect to. He has adduced ample oral evidence in support of this. Second defendant contends that she was only acting on her behalf and the evidence on this point is that of a tenant who was given a cowle, and told by 1st defendant that though it was in her name, it was really meant for second defendant. I cannot understand why it was necessary for first defendant to manage for second defendant seeing that the latter is younger, and the former a very old woman. The only point in second defendant's favour is that the patta for nine out of eleven fields stands in her name, whereas the first defendant holds only the patta for two fields. Patta is no evidence either of title or enjoyment and no importance can be placed on this evidence.

A considerable amount of irrelevant matter has been introduced regarding the giving up of one-third share to one Basamma, which I need not enter into. Having held that Exhibit II is an invalid document which was in fact never given effect to, it is needless to go into the oral evidence on both sides, which is teeming with falsehood as usual. As regards Exhibit A, it has been contended that it bears no consideration. The question of consideration can only be pleaded as between the parties and not by a third party; that is, a document without consideration is not by itself void but is voidable at the instance of the transferor. Taking this view, I set aside the decree of the lower Court, and pass a decree in plaintiff's favour with costs of both Courts.

The defendants appealed to the High Court.

The Hon'ble Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Messrs. J. R. Vencataruma Sastri and S. Krishnamurti Aiyar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—We are unable to support the judgment of the District Judge in this case. The 1st defendant parted with her woman's estate in the property by Exhibit II in 1877. It was not contended in the lower Court that that document was a sham one and not intended to be operative in law. Certainly, no reason was given for the execution of a sham instrument. The first issue, whether the 1st defendant was entitled to sell the suit property to plaintiff, was framed in very vague terms. Apparently, the contention was that after the execution of Exhibit II, effect was not given to it for some reason or other. This can only mean one of two things, i.e., that the parties by mutual consent rescinded it. But there is no evidence of such rescission, and oral evidence of rescission would be inadmissble under the provisions of section 92 of the Evidence Act. See Umedmal Motiram v. Davu bin Dhondiba (2). Or the contention must be taken to be that possession was not given to the 2nd defendant's husband in accordance with the terms of Exhibit II. In other words, the title acquired under Exhibit II was lost by limitation and the 1st defendant acquired a title by prescription. But this case does not seem to have been raised in either of the Courts below. Although the District Munsif found that the management of the property by the 1st defendant was on behalf of 2nd defendant, no ground was taken in the memorandum of appeal to the lower Appellate Court that the 1st defendant's possession was adverse and exclusive. We find that one of plaintiff's witnesses, P. W. No. 3, admitted in his deposition that the 2nd defendant's husband was in joint enjoyment of the property with the 1st defendant after the execution of Exhibit II. It is, therefore, impossible to say that no effect was given to Exhibit II at all. The 1st defendant lived with the 2nd defendant's husband and subsequently with the 2nd defendant. When members of a family live together, the ordinary presumption will be that the legal possession is in the person who had the title. n a case like this, it was incumbent on the plaintiff to allege clearly that the 1st defendant acquired a title by prescription after the execution of Exhibit II. We do not find that such a contention was put forward in the lower Appellate Court, and we do not think we should allow it to be raised here. The District Judge says nothing more than that she was managing the property. This does not amount to a finding that her possession was adverse to the 2nd defendant. We cannot now frame an issue on the question of acquisition of prescriptive right by the 1st defendant. The result is, there is nothing to displace the title acquired by the 2nd defendant's husband under Exhibit II. We are unable to follow the District Judge when he says that Exhibit II is not a sale-deed. His observation that it is not a valid surrender of the 1st defendant's right such as would accelerate the succession of the reversioner is absolutely irrelevant. We reverse the decree of the District Judge and restore that of the District Munsif with costs here and in the lower Appellate Court.

(2) 2 B. 547.

DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Road Cess Return—Admissibility in favour of zemindar—Return filed by temporary lessee if can be used in favour of zemindar—Return previously used by tenant in suit against zemindar—Return filed by tenant's predecessor-in-interest, evidentiary value against tenant—Bengal Cess Act (Bengal Act IX of 1880), s. 95—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 21.

The mere circumstance that a road cess return was successfully used in evidence by a tenant against his landlord for the purposes of another litigation, does not show that it is admissible in evidence in a subsequent rent suit on behalf of the landlord himself.

A Road Cess Return is not admissible in evidence under section 95 of the Bengal Cess Act in favour of the person by or on behalf of whom it has been filed or in favour of one who claims through him or may be deemed to be his representative-in-interest.

A Road Cess Return, filed by a ticcadar or temporary lessee of a property, is admissible in evidence in favour of the zemindar who cannot be regarded as a person by or on behalf of whom the return was filed or one who claims through the ticcadar.

The evidentiary value of a Road Cess Return, which was made by a predecessor-in-interest of the tenant defendant, is very considerable in favour of the plaintiff landlord and against the defendant tenant.

The provisions of section 95 of the Bengal Cess Act are not exhaustive. They merely limit the application of section 21 of the Evidence Act, and exclude Road Cess Returns when they are sought to be admitted in favour of the person by or on behalf of whom they have been filed.

Mohan Pandey v. Lala Bhagwati, 1 Ind. Cas. 813; Chulkho Singh v. Jharo Singh, unreported and Hem Chandra v. Kali Prosanna, 30 C. 1033; 8 C. W. N. 1; 30 I. A. 1, relied upon.

Babu Sajani Kant Singh, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal on behalf of the plaintiff in a suit for recovery of arrears of rent. The substantial question in controversy between the parties relates to the character of the holding, whether it is a holding at a money rent as the tenants allege or at a produce rent as the landlords contend. The Courts below have concurrently decided this question in favour of the tenants. That decision has been attacked in this Court as erroneous in law because relevant evidence has been excluded. The evidence in question is a Road Cess Return filed in 1896 by a ticcadar of the property by name Bisonath Singh. The learned Vakil for the appellant has contended that the Road Cess Return is admissible in evidence, first, because it was used in evidence against the plaintiffs by the defendants in another suit for declaration of title; secondly, because section 95 of the Bengal Cess Act of 1880 does not present a bar to the admission of the Road Cess Return; and thirdly, because the person by whom it was filed was no other than a benamdar for the grandfather of the defendants themselves.

In so far as the first reason assigned by the appellants is concerned, we do not feel impressed by it. The mere circumstance that the Road Cess Return has been successfully used in evidence by the tenants against their landlords for the purposes of another litigation, does not show that it is admissible in evidence in the present litigation on behalf of the landlords themselves.

In so far, however, as the second ground is concerned, it is, in our opinion, well founded. Section 95 of the Bengal Cess Act has no application to the case before us. That section provides that every return filed by or on behalf of any person in pursuance of the provisions of the Act shall bear the signature and address of such person or his authorized agent, and shall be admissible in evidence against such person but shall not be admissible in his favour. Now, as was pointed out in the cases of Mohan Pandey v. Lala Bhagwatichuran (1) and Chulkho Singh v. Jharo Singh, S. A. No. 205k of 1909 decided 30th May 1911, the provisions of section 95 of the Bengal Cess Act are not exhaustive. They merely limit the application of section 21 of the Indian Evidence Act and exclude Road Cess Returns when they are sought to be admitted in favour of the person by or on behalf of whom they have been filed. [Hem Chandra v. Kali Prosanna (2).] It has not been disputed that if a Road Cess Return is not admissible in favour of such person, it is equally inadmissible in favour of a person who claims through him or who may be deemed to be his representative-in interest. Now in the case before us, the Road Cess Return was not filed by the present plaintiffs; nor was it filed on their behalf. It was filed by Bisno Nath Singh in his capacity as temporary lessee of the property. The question, therefore, arises whether when the plaintiffs seek to have the document admitted in evidence, they can rightly be regarded as persons by or on behalf of whom the return has been filed. In our opinion, the question ought to be answered in the negative. The learned Vakil for the respondent has ingeniously contended that as during the subsistence of the ticca, a part of the superior interest was vested in the ticcadar, upon the expiry of the term of the ticca when the landlord became the sole owner, he must be deemed to have acquired a part of the interest through his ticcadar. This argument is obviously unsound. The landlord cannot be said to claim through his tenant in whose favour he had created an interest limited for a time. We are, therefore, of opinion that the Road Cess Return is admissible in evidence notwithstanding the provisions of section 95 of the Bengal Cess Act.

As regards the third reason assigned on behalf of the appellant, it is obvious that if the Road Cess Return was, as a matter of fact, made by a predecessor-in-interest of the defendants, its evidentiary value in favour of the plaintiff and against the defendants is very considerable. This does not appear to have been appreciated by either of the Courts below and consequently the question of benami has not been investigated.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the District Judge set aside and the case remanded to him for re-consideration. The Road Cess Returns will be treated as admissible in evidence and the question of benami must also be determined. The parties will be at liberty to adduce additional evidence in regard to this point; such evidence may be taken either by the District Judge himself or under his direction by the Subordinate Judge.

We may add that a subsidiary question has been raised before us, namely, whether in the event of a finding adverse to the landlords, the amount of rent payable in cash should not be assessed in this proceeding. We are of opinion that the question ought not to be determined in this suit. If the plaintiffs are unable to establish that they are entitled to recover the amount claimed by them, the only decree they can legitimately obtain is a decree for the sum admitted by the defendants. What is a fair rent in respect of this land must be determined in proceeding properly framed for that purpose. The costs of this appeal will abide the result

A suit for ejectment of a person from a specific field is not brought within section 23 of the Limitation Act by the fact that the field has been recorded as part of a thoroughfare and shamilat deh.

Where in spite of an encroachment on a road, the road left is sufficiently broad for the use of the public, the encroachment cannot be treated as an interruption of easement giving a recurring cause of action de die in diem under section 23 of the Limitation Act.

R. S. Pandit Shiv Narain, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts are stated in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court. The appeal was admitted under section 70 (1) (b) on the question of limitation only.

The plea that section 23 of the Limitation Act applies to the suit, by reason of the act complained of by the plaintiffs being a continuing wrong and a fresh period of limitation beginning to run at every moment of time during which the wrong continues, has no force. The suit was for ejectment of the respondent from a specific field and the fact that that field had been recorded as part of a thoroughfare and Shamilat-i-deh, does not bring this suit within section 23. It was found by a Revenue Court several years ago that in spite of various encroachments, the road was sufficiently broad for the use of the public, and the encroachment now complained of was made before that finding. There has been no interruption of the right of way itself and Sreemati Soojan Bibi v. Shamed Ali (1) does not help the appellants. In that suit, the plaintiff claimed a right of way over the defendant's land, basing his claim on section 26 of the Limitation Act and on a previous decree giving him the right of way. It was held that any interruption of the easement gave the plaintiff a recurring cause of action de die in diem under section 23 and that the two years' rule prescribed by section 26 was not applicable. The nature of that suit differs clearly from the nature of the present suit, the object of which is to oust the respondent from a specific portion of the Shamilat-i-deh, occupied by him adversely to the rest of the proprietors.

Authorities on the question of limitation for suits arising out of diversion of water are obviously not in point.

Narain Singh v. Ishar Singh (2) is in point and supports the conclusion of the lower Appellate Court, that Article 120 of the Limitation Act governs the case. This authority was approved in Asa Ram v. Paras Ram (3). The suit was not for possession by establishment of the plaintiff's exclusive right to the property in suit, but was nominally on behalf of the village community to remove an obstruction to the enjoyment of the Shamilat by the proprietors generally.

The learned Pleader for the respondent contended that Article 32, prescribing two years' limitation from the date of the appropriation of the land in suit, applied and cited Sharoop Dass Mondal v. Joggessur Roy Chowdhry (4). As at present advised, I am inclined to hold that Article 32 is not applicable and that Article 120 is applicable. Article 146*A* obviously is not applicable, as the suit is not by, or on behalf of, any local authority.

The argument for the appellants, that Article 144 is the general Article for suits of this description, is based on a dictum of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Mahammad Amanulla Khan v. Badan Singh (5). The dictum is:—"Article 144 as to adverse possession only applies where there is no other Article which specially provides for the case." This obviously does not bear the interpretation sought to be placed on it for the appellants and Article 144, like Article 142, applies to suits for possession based on the plaintiff's title, not to suits of the nature now under consideration.

Lower Appellate Court has held on the

In a mortgage-bond, it was stipulated that the principal and interest would be paid within one year:

Held, that the case fell within the class of cases in which the mortgage is payable before a certain day, and not within the class where a day is fixed for the payment of the debt, and that, therefore, the debtor was entitled to pay off the debt on any day within one year.

Babu Khitish Chandra Sen, for the Appellant.

Babu Akhil Bandhu Guha, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal on behalf of the first defendant in a suit to enforce a mortgage security executed by him on the 19th July 1907, for an advance of Rs. 300. It was agreed between the parties that interest would be paid at the rate of 40 aris of paddy or Rs. 100 annually; in other words, that 120 aris of paddy would be paid upon the principal amount each year. It was further provided that if interest was not paid in kind as stipulated, the value of the paddy would be taken as Rs. 100. There was, however, no time fixed for re-payment in the deed as drawn up; the position, thus, was that the mortgagee could enforce the security whenever he liked and the mortgagor could claim redemption whenever he pleased [Fitzgerald's Trustee v. Mellersh (1); Harding v. Tingey (2)]. Consequently, after the deed had been executed, a clause was added to the effect that "the money would be paid, principal and interest, within one year," and this was separately signed by the mortgagor. It is not disputed that on the 24th July 1907, the mortgagor tendered to the mortgagee the principal together with the interest which had accrued due up to that date. The mortgagee declined to accept the money whereupon the sum was deposited in Court. On the 15th March 1909, the mortgagee commenced this action and claimed to recover the principal sum together with interest up to the date of suit and pendente lite.

The Court of first instance overruled this contention and held that the mortgage had been redeemed by the tender of the principal and interest on the 24th July 1907. Upon appeal, the Subordinate Judge has held that the tender was premature and that the plaintiff is entitled to enforce the security.

On behalf of the appellant, the mortgagor, it has been argued that upon a true construction of the last clause in the deed, it was open to the mortgagor to redeem the security on the 24th July 1907. On behalf of the respondent, it has been contended, upon the authority of the cases of Vadju v. Vadju (3) and Raghubar Dayal v. Budhu Lal (4), that the mortgagor was not entitled to redeem before the expiry of one year from the date of the mortgage. It has further been argued that the right of redemption and the right of foreclosure are co-extensive; and in support of this proposition, reliance has been placed upon the observation of Lord Kingsdown in the case of Pran Nath Roy Chowdry v. Rookea Begam (5) and upon the cases of Tirugnana v. Nallatambi (6); Husaini Khanam v. Husain Khan (7); Sayad Abdul Hak Sardar v. Gulam

Jilani (8) and Brown v. Cole (9). In our opinion, the view taken by the Subordinate Judge is clearly erroneous and cannot be supported.

It need not be disputed that, unless there is an agreement to the contrary, the right of foreclosure and the right of redemption must be deemed co extensive. In each particular instance, therefore, it must be determined, upon the terms of the contract between the parties, whether there is any special provision in the contract which takes the case out of the general rule. No doubt there are observations in the case of Vadju v. Vadju (3), which may be taken to support the contention of the respondent. But the case of Raghubar v. Budhu Lal (4) is clearly distinguishable. There, it is obvious from the judgment, a date had been specifically fixed for redemption and such date was binding equally upon the mortgagor and mortgagee. The case of Brown v. Cole (9) also was obviously a case of this description. Now, in the case before us, the particular covenant upon which both the parties rely is to the effect that the mortgagor shall pay the amount of principal and interest within the term of one year. The mortgagee invites us to treat this covenant as if it provided that the mortgagor was not to pay the amount of principal and interest before the expiry of one year. It is, in our opinion, impossible to construe it in this way. It is fairly clear that this particular clause was inserted for the benefit of the mortgagor so that he might be at liberty to pay the principal with interest before the expiry of one year. Rose Ammal v. Rajarathnamammal (10). In fact, the present case falls within the class of cases in which the mortgage is payable before a certain day, and not within the class where a day is fixed for the payment of the debt. In this view, it is clear that this appeal must be allowed, the decree of the Court below set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored with costs both here and in the Court of appeal below.

Appeal allowed.

RAGHUNATH DAS AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Title—Decree for rent of coal land—Judgment-debtor declared insolvent—Official Assignee made party in execution proceedings—Lease-hold property sold in execution—Subsequent sale by Official Assignee—Superiority of title—Official Assignee bound by execution sale—Purchaser in execution to have better title—Decree for rent of coal lands, whether can give first charge on property in arrears.

The defendant granted a patta of coal lands to A., against whom he obtained a decree in the Sub-Judge's Court at Burdwan, for rent, in execution of which he attached the lease-hold interest of A. The sale of the property was fixed on September 10th, 1904, and on September 8, A. filed his petition of insolvency in the High Court and the vesting order was made on the same day. The defendant then applied to the Sub-Judge of Burdwan to substitute the Official Assignee in the place of the judgment-debtor in the execution proceedings, which was done and the sale was held on March 6, 1905, and the defendant became the purchaser and took possession on June 14, 1905. In the meanwhile on May 23, 1905, the Official Assignee sold the property with the permission of the High Court to one B from whom the plaintiff purchased and sued for recovery of possession:

Held, that, although the order for substituting the Official Assignee in place of the judgment-debtor in the execution proceedings, was incorrect,—A. B. Miller v. Budh Singh Dudhuria, 18 C. 43—yet he having been added and having taken no exception to the procedure, the sale must be regarded as having taken place in his presence; and he having taken no steps to have that sale set aside in the manner provided by law, the sale must be held to be good and effective as against him and also against the plaintiff who claims through him.

Obiter dictum.—The decree for rent, being in respect of coal lands and not agricultural lands, cannot give the decree-holder a first charge on the lease-hold property in arrears.

Appeal from the decree of the Additional Sub-Judge of Burdwan, dated September 8th, 1909.

Babus Mohendra Nath Roy, Bipin Bihari Ghose (Junior) and Satindra Nath Mukherji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs to establish their title to and recover possession of certain lease-hold properties along with the colliery, engines, machinery, tools, plant and whatever else there might be standing thereon. The contest is between the plaintiffs as purchasers from the Official Assignee of Bengal and the defendants as purchasers in execution of a decree.

The facts are shortly as follows:—On 1st December 1909, the defendants granted a patta of coal lands to Atul Nath Chatterjee and Rojindra Nath Chatterjee at an annual jama of Rs. 3,626-11-10 and a salami of Rs. 4,000. The lessees were two of four brothers, the others being Aghore Nath Chatterjee and Chandra Nath Chatterjee. The four brothers, who were members of a joint family, became heavily indebted to several creditors. On 6th December 1903, the present defendants filed a suit against their lessees for rent under the patta, and on 23rd June 1904, obtained a decree against them for Rs. 3,090 10-6 and costs Rs. 350-7. The other two brothers were also parties to that suit as pro forma defendants. On 13th July 1904, the defendants applied for execution of their decree by attachment of the immoveable properties belonging to the judgment-debtors. The lease-hold property was accordingly attached and 5th September 1904 was fixed for sale. On that day, the judgment-debtors Nos. 1 and 2 applied for time to enable them to raise money by sale of the attached property, and the sale was accordingly adjourned until 10th September. On 8th September, all four brothers filed their petition in the Court for the Relief of Insolvent-debtors at Calcutta and on the same day, the Court made the usual vesting order under section 7 of the Indian Insolvent Act. On 30th September 1904, the defendants applied to the Subordinate Judge of Burdwan to substitute the Official Assignee in the place of the judgment debtors in the execution proceedings under their decree. On 23rd November, notice was ordered to issue to the Official Assignee, to show cause why he should not be substituted in the place of the judgment-debtors and it was made returnable on 22nd December 1904. On 10th January 1905, the Subordinate Judge, finding that Mr. Miller had been duly served with the notice, ordered that he be substituted in the place of the judgment-debtors and 6th March 1905 was fixed for the sale of the attached property. On that day, the property was sold and purchased by the defendants, the decree-holders. On 18th April 1905, the sale was confirmed and on 14th June 1905 an order was made for delivery of possession to the defendants as purchasers and they accordingly took possession under it. Meanwhile, on 23rd May 1905, the Official Assignee applied to the Insolvency Court and obtained an order that he should be at liberty to sell either by public auction or private contract to the best purchaser the properties of the insolvents including the lease-hold premises in question. He did not, as a matter of fact, sell at that time; but on 24th March 1908, he sold the premises now in question to Harmusji Pistonji Banker, alias Bilimoria, a Parsee gentleman of Asansole. On 24th June 1908, three months later, Banker sold the property to the present plaintiffs. On 16th July 1908, this suit was instituted to recover possession of the property.

The learned Subordinate Judge has decreed the plaintiffs' suit and the defendants have appealed.

The first question is one of fact, whether the notice for substitution was duly served on the Official Assignee in the execution case. The Judge says that it is shown to have been served on a clerk of the Official Assignee, and, in the absence of evidence to show that this amounted to service on the Official Assignee, or that the clerk had authority to receive it, he finds that it was not properly served. This finding appears to us to be entirely against the evidence on the record. The clerk of the Official Assignee, Lakhinarain Dhar, states that he has been an assistant of the Official Assignee's office for 29 years. He admits that the notice was served in that office and that he signed acknowledging the receipt. He states that he received the notice on behalf of the Official Assignee, and made over the copy to Mr. Langer, the Head Assistant. The Small Cause Court bailiff (who has been bailiff for 30 years and who served the notice) says that he has known Lakhi Narain Babu as the head clerk or Bara Babu for 20 years and that he served notices for the Official Assignee upon him 20 or 30 times. He states that he always served notices for Mr. A. B. Miller on Lakhi Narain Dhar in this manner. There can be no question on this evidence that the notice was served in the Official Assignee's office in the usual way; and, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, we must presume that Lakhi Narain Dhar was a person authorized to receive such notices within the meaning of section 75 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882. It would have been simple for the opposite party to have called evidence from the Official Assignee's office to disprove this, had it been incorrect. We, therefore, hold that the notice for substitution was duly served on the Official Assignee.

The next question is, what was the effect of the sale in execution as against the Official Assignee. It was argued for the appellants (1) that the Official Assignee was bound by the execution proceedings and by the sale which took place as we have stated; (2) that the lease-hold interest did not vest in the Official Assignee because he did not take possession, and (3) that the decree being one for rent, the decree-holders were entitled to sell the lease-hold interest of the insolvents and to give a good title.

(1) With regard to the first question, it must be conceded that the order for substituting the Official Assignee in place of the judgment debtors in the execution proceedings was incorrect; [see the case of A. B. Miller v. Budh Singh Dudhuria (1)]; but the Official Assignee having been added and having taken no exception to the procedure, the sale must be regarded as having taken place in his presence and as binding upon him. The fact that a person, who was not the representative of the judgment-debtors, was brought upon the record as such representative would not affect the validity of the sale [see Malkarjun v. Narhari (2).] The Official Assignee having taken no steps to have that sale set aside in the manner provided by law, the sale must be taken to be good as against him.

(2) We cannot accept the second contention raised by the learned Pleader for the appellants that the property had not vested in the Official Assignee. It is true that in cases of lease-hold property, the Official Assignee has the right to elect whether or not he will accept the property under the vesting order. If he does so, there is no question that his acceptance relates back to the date of the vesting order [see Abdul Razak v. J. G. Kernan (3)]. That was the converse case and the question there was whether the Official Assignee could be made liable for the rent of the lease-hold property. It was held that, inasmuch as he had taken possession, he must be regarded as having elected to take over the property. Here, he paid no rent nor did he take actual possession; but the property did vest in him by the vesting order, and that he regarded it as having vested in him, is made plain by the application which he made to the Insolvency Court on 23rd May 1905 for leave to sell the property. He could not sell it unless it were vested in him. That being so, we must hold that the sale was effective as against the Official Assignee and also against the plaintiffs who claim through him. The plaintiffs are in fact in a dilemma. If the property had not then vested in the Official Assignee, it was sold away before the Official Assignee acquired any title to it if it, had vested in him, and we think that it had, it was sold in his presence and the sale was binding on him.

It is not necessary, under these circumstances, to discuss the third point raised by the learned Pleader for the appellants, that the decree being a decree for rent, it gave the defendants a first charge on the property. But we may say that we cannot understand how that could be the case with regard to a decree of this kind which was for rent of coal lands and not agricultural lands.

The appeal must be allowed and the plaintiffs' suit dismissed with costs in both Courts.

Appeal allowed.

Babu Dhirendra Lal Kastagir, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

CARNDUFF, J.—The short point raised by this appeal is as to whether the provisions of section 317 of the Code of Civil Procedure 1882, which correspond with those of section 66 of the Code of 1908, and bar a suit against a certified purchaser buying benami at a sale in execution of a decree, apply to the case of a purchaser at a sale in enforcement and execution of a certificate issued under the Public Demands Recovery Act, 1895, (Bengal Act I of 1895), by virtue of sub-section (2) of section 19 of the said Act.

The application to such certificates of section 244 of the old Code, in Chapter XIX of which both that section and section 317 find place, has been the subject of a number of conflicting decisions. Thus, in Umelali Bhuya v. Rajlakshmi Debya (1), Brett and Woodroffe, JJ., held that section 244 was applicable; whereas in Raghubans Sahai v. Ful Kumari (2), Harington and Mookerjee, JJ., ruled that it was inapplicable. But as regards section 317 there is,, so far as I know, only one reported case, namely, that of Ambica Prosad v. Gopal Baksh Das (3), in which Banerjee and Rampini, JJ., expressed an opinion against the applicability of the provision. That opinion, however, was really an obiter dictum, the case having been decided on other grounds; and the learned Judges were then construing sub-section (2) of section 21 of the Public Demands Recovery Act of 1895, as it was enacted in the first instance when it ran as follows:—

"The procedure prescribed in Chapter XIX (with the exception of section 310A) shall, so far as it is applicable, be the procedure followed in execution proceedings to enforce such certificate and realise the amount recoverable thereunder."

Section 19, sub-section (2), which has, by section 12 of the Bengal Public Demands Recovery (Amendment) Act 1897, (Bengal Act I of 1897), been made to take the place of the earlier provision, is, however, very differently expressed in these terms:—

"Such certificate may be enforced and executed in the manner provided by Chapter XIX of the Code of Civil Procedure for the enforcement and execution of decrees for money; and all the provisions of that Chapter, except section 310A thereof, shall apply so far as they are applicable."

Now, the words of the present provision seem to me to be perfectly clear, and I would construe them exactly as they were construed by Woodroffe, J., in Hari Charan Singh v. Chandra Kumar Dey (4). They begin by declaring that certificates are to be enforced and executed as if they were decrees for money under the Civil Procedure Code: and then they go on expressly to render applicable, so far as may be, all the sections—223 to 343—to be found in Chapter XIX of that Code, with one carefully specified exception. What we are now asked by the learned Vakil for the respondent to do is to qualify the latter part of the enactment by inserting the words "for the enforcement and execution of a decree" after the words "that Chapter," or by adding after the word "applicable" the words "for the enforcement and execution of a decree" I think that it is not open to us

(1) 1 C. L. J. 538; 10 C. W. N. 130; 33 C. 84.
(2) 1 C. L. J. 542; 32 C. 1130.
(3) 1 C. L. J. 550.
(4) 34 C. 787 at p. 803; 11 C. W. N. 745; 5 C. L. J. 696.

to do anything of the kind. It seems to me, indeed, that the only argument in favour of the respondent's view is that mentioned by the lower Appellate Court, namely, that, if sub-section (2) of the new section 19 be sufficient to draw all the provisions of Chapter XIX of the old Code, then the new section 20, which explicitly applies sections 311 and 313 of that Chapter, becomes superfluous. But that is an argument which, standing alone, seems to me to carry but litle weight; it is useful only as an additional argument where there are already others to be supported. For it is well known that the Legislature, sometimes, it may be, per incuriam, and sometimes, doubtless, pro majori cautela, not infrequently commits itself to redundant provisions; and, if the construction, which I have indicated, makes section 20 of the amended Act superfluous, my reply is that the construction for which the learned Vakil for the respondent contends, reduces the latter part of sub-section (2) of section 19 to a similar superfluity. In other words, if the latter part of that sub-section is to be read as limited to such provisions only as bear upon enforcement and execution, then it carries the earlier part not a step farther.

In my view, the only limitation upon the application of any of the provisions (other than those of section 310A) contained in Chapter XIX of the old Code is that imposed by the words "so far as they are applicable," and I can find nothing in section 317 of that Code in any sense inapplicable to a purchase at a sale in execution of a certificate. On the contrary, its provisions are salutary and appropriate, and there is no difficulty whatever in applying them, mutatis mutandi, to purchasers at such sales.

The result is that the respondent's suit was, in my opinion, rightly dismissed by the original Court. This appeal must, therefore, be allowed, the decree of the lower Appellate Court discharged, and that of the Court of first instance restored with costs throughout.

CHAPMAN, J.—I agree.

Mr. Haribans Sahai, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for recovery of possession over certain house property situated in the city of Jhansi. The lower Appellate Court has dismissed a considerable portion of the plaintiffs' suit, and I am only concerned with that portion of the claim which has been decreed. The finding in respect of this is that it belonged to one Namdar Khan, who died somewhere about the year 1894 A. D. He left surviving him his widow, Raj Bibi, and two nephews (sons of his own brother Jawahir Khan) named, Ali Khan and Ghasi Khan. The latter has since died, leaving a son named Rahim Khan, a widow Musammat Muradi and a daughter Musammat Mahtabi. On the 22nd of February 1903, Musammat Raj Bibi executed a deed by which she purported to sell the property, with which I am now concerned, to Chand Khan and Moti Khan. In the present suit, the plaintiffs are Ali Khan and the heirs of Ghasi Khan, that is to say, his son, widow and daughter already named. The defendants are Musammat Raj Bibi, Chand Khan and Moti Khan, that is to say, the vendor and the vendees, under the sale-deed dated the 22nd of February 1903.

The lower Appellate Court has found that the property in dispute devolved on the death of Namdar Khan in accordance with the ordinary rules of Muhammadan Law, so that Raj Bibi was entitled to the same to the extent of $\frac{1}{4}$th share only. It has accordingly decreed the claim of the plaintiffs to the extent of a $\frac{3}{4}$th share in the property conveyed by Musammat Raj Bibi under the deed of the 22nd of February 1903. It may be noted that Musammat Raj Bibi did not defend the suit at all, and that Moti Khan in effect admitted the plaintiffs' claim. Chand Khan has contested the suit throughout and has now brought it before this Court in second appeal.

The first point taken is substantially a matter of pleadings. The plaintiffs undoutedly came into Court with the allegation that their family, although converts to Islam, continued to be bound as amongst themselves by the Hindu Law, and in fact always constituted a joint Hindu family. There was also a special plea that the plaintiff Ali Khan had been adopted by his uncle, Namdar Khan. These points have been decided against the plaintiff by both the Courts below and are no longer in dispute. It is suggested, however, that on the pleadings as they stood, the Courts below were not entitled to carry their own findings to their correct legal conclusion but were bound to dismiss the plaintiffs' suit altogether without considering how the inheritance to Namdar Khan's estate would in fact devolve under the Muhammadan Law, when that was held to be the law applicable to the parties concerned. I am unable to accept this contention. No doubt the plaintiffs in their anxiety to invalidate altogether the transfer made by Musammat Raj Bibi came into Court with statements going beyond what they were able to prove. But the alternative plea that in any case the plaintiffs had rights as sharers, or rather as residuary heirs under the Muhammadan Law, underlay the whole case for the plaintiffs, and particularly the 7th paragraph of the plaint to which the learned District Judge has referred. On the issues as framed, I do not think that the defendants were in any way prejudiced by defective pleadings, and I am of opinion that the Courts below, having found that the estate of Namdar Khan devolved in accordance with the Muhammadan Law of inheritance, were right in giving the plaintiffs the benefit of that finding in so far as it operated in their favour.

The more important plea raised on behalf of the appellant, Chand Khan, is as regards the question of limitation. I take it from the learned District Judge that actual possession over the house property now in dispute upon the death of Namdar Khan remained with his widow, Musammat Raj Bibi. This in fact seems to be admitted in the plaint itself, where it is stated that the plaintiff Ali Khan and his brother, Ghasi Khan, were absent from Jhansi at the time of Namdar Khan's death, and were in fact earning a livelihood elsewhere. The plaintiffs' case is that they only came to know recently, after their return to Jhansi, that the property now in dispute, which seems in fact to have formed part of the old house property of the family, had been made the subject of alienation by Musammat Raj Bibi under the sale-deed of the 22nd of February 1903. The question, however, as to when the plaintiffs actually came to know of this alienation does not arise. The Courts below have in effect held that, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, it must be presumed that the possession of Musammat Raj Bibi was on behalf of herself and of her co-sharers, the remaining heirs of Namdar Khan, up to the time when that lady asserted an adverse title to the property now in dispute by dealing with it in the sale-deed of the 22nd of February 1903. In my opinion, this view is correct and is borne out by the rulings relied on by the District Judge. It does not violate the general principle laid down by this Court in Jafar Husain v. Mashuq Ali (1) and other cases, because it rests upon the presumption that the possession obtained by Musammat Raj Bibi in 1894 on the death of Namdar Khan was not adverse to the plaintiffs but was permissive and representative, so as to constitute in law the joint possession of herself and of the other lawful heirs of Namdar Khan. I think that under the circumstances of the present case, this presumption has been rightly drawn, and that it is sufficient for the plaintiffs to have brought the present suit within 12 years of the date on which an adverse title is first shown to have been definitely set up by Musammat Raj Bibi. I accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

Easement—Right of support—Temporary structure, whether entitled to right of support—Injunction to restrain interference with right of support—Actual damage, proof of—Whether necessary.

To entitle a person to the right of support of a building, all that has to be proved is that the person claiming the right has acquired it for more than the period prescribed in section 15 of the Easements Act. It is immaterial whether the structure for which the right is claimed is temporary or permanent.

Maberly v. Dowson, 5 L. J. (o. s.) K. B. 261, referred to and explained.

In order to entitle a person to obtain an injunction restraining his neighbour from interfering with his right of support, it is not necessary to show actual damage.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of Trichinopoly, in A. S No 256 of 1909, presented against the decree of the District Munsif of Trichinopoly, in O. S. No. 238 of 1908.

Mr. V. C. Seshachariar, for the Appellant.

Mr. T. R. Venkatarama Sastri, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiff and defendant purchased adjacent houses. The wall between the two houses belongs to the defendant. The plaintiff has an upstair shed in his house which is supported on one side by the defendant's parapet wall C. D. The suit is, inter alia, to restrain the defendant from interfering with his right of support. Both the lower Courts have found that the plaintiff has been in enjoyment of the right of support for more than the period prescribed in section 15 of the Easements Act. The plaintiff has been given a decree restraining the defendant from interfering with the plaintiff's right of support.

Two points have been argued in this second appeal. The first is that the shed is only a temporary one and not permanently attached to plaintiff's house and that no right of support can be claimed for such a structure. But this contention was not raised in the lower Court. The point of contest there was as to how long the shed had been in existence and not the nature of the shed. It was not contended there that the shed should not be regarded as a permanent one from its very nature. Maberly v. Dowson (1), relied on for the appellant, is really of no use to him. In that case, which related to the right to light and air, it was found that the structure in question was only of a temporary nature. But here, as already pointed out, no such contention was raised. As a matter of fact, the shed seems to be of a premanent character with walls on three sides. It is, however, unnecessary to decide that point as it was not properly raised in the lower Courts.

The next contention is that as the defendant has not deprived the plaintiff of his support and as the plaintiff has sustained no damage by any act done by the defendant, the plaintiff has no cause of action and the decision in Backhouse v. Bonami (2) is relied on. That case related to interference with the natural right of support but not to disturbance of a right to support as an easement. The distinction between the two classes of cases is pointed out in Backhouse v. Bonomi (2) by Lord Wensleydale at 513; see also Goddard on Easements, page 401, 4th Edition. Moreover, it was held, in Corporation of Birmingham v. Allen (3), that actual damage is not necessary to entitle a person having the right to support to an injunction and the rule requiring damage was applicable only to an action for damages. The reason for holding that actual damage is necessary to sustain a suit for damages, where a natural right of support from the soil of an adjoining owner has been infringed, does not seem to be applicable where the disturbance is of a right by easement to superficial support.

The next question raised is whether the plaintiff is entited to an injunction requiring the defendant to re-build the cornice pulled down by him in F. A. marked in the plan. The cornice was admittedly on the defendant's side and an appurtenance to his wall. The District Munsif disallowed the injunction on the ground that plaintiff failed to prove that any damage was caused to him. The District Judge has not really reversed that finding. He merely says that "it is defendant's wall that is likely to suffer but if it does, it will cause much harm to plaintiff's house and little to defendants.' It is admitted that there is no evidence on record that the wall is likely to suffer by the removal of the cornice. We set aside the District Judge's decree in so far as it modifes that of the Munsif and restore the Munsif's decree. The parties will bear their respective costs in this and in the lower Appellate Court.

Decree modifisd.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 20—Non-joinder of parties in appeal—Discretion of Court to make parties.

In a mortgage suit, the sole question was whether the contesting defendant had priority over the plaintiff. The defendant appealed and impleaded the plaintiff only as respondent to the appeal. The Court dismissed the appeal on the ground of non-joinder of other defendants as respondents to the appeal:

Held, that the lower Appellate Court ought to have made them respondents to the appeal under Order XLI, rule 20 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Gorakhpur, dated 23rd March 1911.

Mr. Parmeshwor Dyal (with him Mr. Sarat Chandra, for Dr. Satish Chandra Banerjee and Mr. Haribans Sahai), for the Appellant.

Mr. Ramakant Malviya (with him Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit upon a mortgage which was decreed by the first Court. Jangli Sahu, one of the defendants, appealed but did not make Har Sewak Man Tewari, the mortgagor, and Jagai Tewari, a subsequent mortgagee, respondents to the appeal. His case was that he was a purchaser of the property in lieu of the mortgages which had priority over the plaintiffs' mortgage, and that, therefore, the plaintiffs were not entitled to bring the property to sale unless they had redeemed the prior mortgages. At the hearing of the appeal, a preliminary objection was taken to the effect that non-joinder of the two aforesaid persons was fatal to the appeal. The lower Appellate Court gave effect to the objection and dismissed the appeal refusing to make those persons parties to the appeal. It says:—"I see no reason to allow parties to be added now." In second appeal to this Court it is contended that under the provisions of Order XLI, rule 20, the Court had discretion to make those persons respondents to the appeal and that it ought to have exercised the discretion vested in it, and made them respondents to the appeal. It is further contended that they were not absolutely necessary parties to the appeal. It is doubtful whether they are necessary respondents to the appeal or not. In these circumstances, in our opinion, the Court below ought to have made them parties and decided the appeal thereafter. We, therefore, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and send down the case to that Court with directions that Har Sewak Man Tewari and Jagai Tewari should be made respondents to the appeal and the case be decided according to law. The appellant will have his costs of this appeal including fees on the higher scale.

Case returned for re-decision.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. II, r. 2—Relinquishment of a portion of claim, effect of.

By virtue of an oral agreement, the plaintiff became entitled, in the event of a certain litigation proving successful, to recover a certain sum of money and a quarter share of a certain house. The plaintiff filed a suit in the Small Cause Court for the recovery of the money due to him under the agreement, but omitted to bring a suit with respect to the share of the house to which he was also entitled. After getting a decree in the Small Cause Court, he instituted a suit for recovery of his share in the house:

Held, that the plaintiff's suit for recovery of the share in the house was barred under Order II, rule 2.

Appeal against an order of the Additional Judge, Lucknow, dated 20th October 1910, reversing that of the Munsif, Lucknow, dated 4th August 1910.

Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra and Mr. Manmohan Nath Chak, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This case was up before Mr Evans, Judicial Commissioner, in October last. He remitted an issue on a question of fact for determination by the Court below. The matter in dispute in this appeal is whether or not a suit which was brought by the plaintiff-respondent in the Court of first instance was barred by the provisions of Order II, rule 2 of the the Code of Civil Procedure. It appears that under an oral agreement executed between the plaintiff Niamat Ali and a man named Ilahi Baksh, who is now represented by the defendant-appellant, Sharfuddin who is his transferee, it was agreed that in the event of certain litigation proving successful, the plaintiff Niamat Ali was to be entitled to recover from Ilahi Bakhsh a certain sum of money and also a quarter share of a certain house. The litigation having proved successful, Niamat Ali proceeded to enforce the agreement. He instituted against Ilahi Bakhsh a suit in the Small Cause Court for recovery of the money which was due to him under the terms of the agreement he relied upon. No suit was brought with respect to the share of the house to which the plaintiff said he was entitled under the agreement. Consequently, when this present suit was brought against Ilahi Bakhsh's transferee for recovery of possession of a one-fourth share of the house, a plea was taken that the suit could not be maintained inasmuch as the claim in respect of the house had been omitted in the former suit. The reply to this plea, which was given by the plaintiff, was that at the date on which he filed his suit in the Small Cause Court for the recovery of the money due to him from Ilahi Bakhsh, his cause of action which enables him to sue in respect of this house had not then accrued. He stated that under the terms of the agreement his cause of action to bring a suit for possession of a share of the house could not and did not arise until six months had expired from the date of the decree in the case which Ilahi Bakhsh had brought against a trespasser for recovery of the property. If the plaintiff had succeeded in making good this point, his answer to the plea raised under Order II, rule 2, would have been a good one. In order to settle this matter, namely, as to whether it was a condition of the agreement between Niamat Ali and Ilahi Bakhsh that possession of a share of the house should not be given until six months after the date of the decree, Mr. Evans remanded an issue to the Court below directing the Court to decide whether or not, as a matter of fact, there was a condition in the agreement between Niamat Ali and Ilahi Bakhsh that possession cannot be demanded of the one fourth share of the house until six months had expired after the date on which the decree for possession was obtained against the trespasser. The Additional Judge of Lucknow, having received the evidence tendered by the parties on this issue has come to the finding that the agreement of the 20th May 1907 did not include any such condition. This finding is, therefore, against the case set up by Niamat Ali and if it is to be accepted, it must settle this appeal. Objections have been filed on Niamat Ali's behalf to the finding of the Court below but as that finding is one upon a question of fact, it cannot be challenged in second appeal even upon objections raised to the finding in remand. The result, therefore, is that it is not proved that Niamat Ali had no cause of action to sue for a one fourth share at the time he sued Ilahi Bakhsh for the money in the Small Cause Court. Therefore, the plea under Order II, rule 2 must be taken to be a valid one and it follows, therefore, that the suit could not be maintained. The appeal is accepted, the decree of the Court below is set aside and it is ordered that Niamat Ali's claim do stand dismissed with costs. The respondent will pay the appellant's costs in all three Courts.

Appeal accepted.

First appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Shahjahanpur, dated 31st of March 1910.

Mr. J. N. Chaudhri (with him Mr. G. L. Agarwala), for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Mr. Moti Lal Nehru (with him Messrs. Ibn Ahmed, Ghulam Mujtaba and Muhammad Ishaq), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought to recover possession of certain zemindari property. The property originally belonged to one Chandan Singh, who died on the 22nd of February 1866. He left him surviving a widow, named, Musammat Jasodha Kunwar, and three sons of a daughter, named, Gulab Kunwar. There was also a lady named Mohun Kunwar. Plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 are her sons. The third plaintiff is a transferee from these sons, evidently a person who has taken a transfer and is financing the litigation. Mohun Kunwar, it is alleged by the plaintiffs, was also a daughter of Chandan Singh but this is challenged by the appellants who say she was illegitimate. Gulab Kunwar pre-deceased Jasodha Kunwar, and Jasodha remained in possession of the property as the widow of Chandan Singh up to her death which took place on the 16th of February 1872. After the death of Jasodha, the property apparently was taken possession of by the collateral heirs of Chandan Singh. A suit was instituted by Jawahir and others, the sons of Gulab Kunwar, to recover possession of the property, and after some litigation a decree for possession was obtained. Mohun Kunwar, who, of course, would have been entitled to the property in priority to the sons of Gulab Kunwar, assuming her to be the legitimate daughter of Chandan Singh, apparently lay by and took no part in the litigation. She apparently was not recognised by the sons, nor did she put forward any claim on her own behalf. After the property had been recovered, however, some claim must have been put forward by or on behalf of Musammat Mohun Kunwar, because in the year 1876 we find that a submission to arbitration was entered into between Musammat Mohun Kunwar on the one part and the sons of Gulab Kunwar on the other. This submission to arbitration recited that there were disputes between Musammat Mohun Kunwar and the sons of Gulab Kunwar in regard to the property of Chandan Singh in respect of which a decree had lately been obtained and the parties submitted their differences to arbitration with a view to have their disputes settled. The nature of the dispute does not appear, and we think that if there was any question as to the legitimacy of Musammat Mohun Kunwar, it is probable the matter would be set forth vaguely as a dispute and would not be directly referred to. An award was made giving to Musammat Mohun Kunwar four villages, in value about one-seventh of the property. The rest of the property was given to the sons of Gulab Kunwar and one Bal Makund, who had been a co-plaintiff with them in their successful suit to recover possession of the property. This award was made a rule of Court. Ever since, until this suit was instituted, possession has gone in occordance with this award. It cannot be urged we think that Musammat Mohun Kunwar was tricked or induced to sign the submission to arbitration and an award knowing nothing about it. She was probably a pardanashin lady and illiterate, but we find that her husband was her general attorney and he singed her name on the award as such. A son of Mohun Kunwar, who was evidently of full age, identified her at the registration of the power-of-attorney to the father. As a matter of fact, Musammat Mohun Kunwar lived until the 17th of October 1908. The award has been acted upon ever since. On the death of Musammat Jasodha and after the property had been recovered by the sons of Gulab, if there had been no question as to the title of Musammat Mohun Kunwar, she would have been entitled to immediate possession of the entire property during her life, and on her death, her sons, as the daughter's sons of Chandan Singh, would also have been entitled to share in the estate with their cousins. Therefore, not only was it the interest of Mohun Kunwar that she should get the proprety if she was entitled to it in the year 1876 but it was also the interest of her husband and her sons. She, no doubt, would be the legal owner but for all practical purposes, they would share at least equally with her the benefit and profits of the estate. From the year 1876 up to the time of the institution of the present suit, the award has never been challenged, either by Musammat Mohun Kunwar herself or by any one of her four sons. There are two sets of defendants to the present suit:—First, the transferees from the sons of Gulab Kunwar of the property which they acquired under the award, and secondly, transferee from Mohan Kunwar herself of the property which was allotted to her. The Court belowhas decreed the plaintiffs' claim in respect of all the property which was alienated by the sons of Gulab Kunwar. It also has decreed the claim for such of the property as was alienated by Musammat Mohun Kunwar in the alienation of which her sons did not join or in respect of which legal necessity for alienation was not proved.

The defendants have appealed against the decrees for possession in this and some of the connected appeals. The plaintiff has also preferred an appeal in respect of so much of the claim as was dismissed.

In our opinion, the whole case depends upon whether the submission to arbitration and the award can be regarded as a family settlement which ought to be given effect to. It is, of course, impossible now for the transferees of the sons of Gulab Kunwar to prove that Mohun Kunwar was illegitimate. They are strangers to the family and it is no longer the interest of the family to help them. In our opinion, the transaction was a family arranagement and ought to be regarded as such. We have already mentioned the circumstances under which the submission to arbitration was entered into. We have pointed out that it has been acted upon for very many years and we think that it would be very wrong to disturb the possession of those persons who have acquired the property on the strength of the submission and award. There cannot be the least doubt that the award was acted upon and that Musammat Mohun Kunwar and her sons took possession of the property that was allotted to her while the sons of Gulab Kunwar were allowed to take possession and deal with the property which was allotted to them.

It is contended on behalf of the plaintiffs that this plea of family arrangement is not open to the defendants and reliance is placed upon paragraph 9 of the written statement. In the written statement of those defendants who claimed through the sons of Gulab Kunwar, it is alleged that Musammat Mohun Kunwar was illegitimate. Paragraph 9 goes on to say that the arbitration and award were fictitious and colourable. It is contended by the plaintiffs that, so far from relying upon the award as a family settlement, this set of defendants at least were alleging the whole transaction to be fictitious. In our opinion, there is no substance in this contention. It never was or could be the case of any of the defendants that the submission to arbitration and award were fictitious in the sense that they were never acted upon. It was the common case of both sides that the award was acted upon for very many years, and there is not the least doubt that numerous transfers of the property have taken place on the strength of it, some of the transfers being made by Mohun Kunwar and her sons and some by the sons of Gulab Kunwar. The real meaning, we think, of paragraph 9 of the written statement was that the award was really a colourable method adopted by the parties of giving Musammat Mohun Kunwar a small share in the property in consideration of her relinquishing all claim to the remainder. They also referred to section 115 of the Evidence Act as being a bar to the plaintiffs' claim, that is to say, they raised a plea of estoppel. This, we think, shows that the real meaning of paragraph 9 was the meaning we have attributed to it. As a matter of fact, the set of defendants, who represented the transferees from Musammat Mohun Kunwar herself and her sons, did rely on the submission to arbitration and award as a family settlement and the Court framed an issue on the point. It is true that this set of defendants raised the plea for another purpose, namely, as being a ground for their claiming the property as being the absolute property of Musammat Mohun Kunwar and not property to which she was merely entitled for a daughter's estate. We do not think that it can be urged that any one is now being taken by surprise or that the full facts are not before the Court. Having regard to the circumstances of the present case and the fact that the submission to arbitration, the award and subsequent alienations were never challenged up to the institution of the present suit, we are entitled to assume that in the year 1876 there was a genuine and real dispute between the parties, whether that dispute had reference to the legitimacy of Musammat Mohun Kunwar or to some other matter. The submission to arbitration referred these matters to the settlement of arbitrators and an award was made by consent of parties and that award was made a rule of Court. We think that this can clearly be regarded as a family settlement and that it fulfils the test approved of and laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Khunni Lal v. Gobind Krishna Narain (1). In the present case, just as in the case referred to by their Lordships of the Privy Council, the true character of the whole transaction was a settlement between several persons of their disputes, whatever those disputes may have been. This being so, the transaction was binding not only upon the actual parties to it but the family.

(1) 33 A. 356 at p. 367; 10 Ind. Cas. 477; 15 C.W.N. 545; 8 A. L. J. 552; 13 C. L. J. 575; 13 Bom. L. R. 427; 10 M. L. T. 25; (1911) 2 M. W. N. 432; 21 M. L. J. 645.

We accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below and dismiss the plaintiffs' claim as against Madan Lal, the appellant in this case, with costs in both Courts including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of Tanjore, in A. S. No. 565 of 1907, presented against the decree of the District Munsif of Tirutaraipundi, in O. S. No. 75 of 1905.

JUDGMENT.—The facts out of which this second appeal arises may be stated as follows:—

There were four divided brothers in a Hindu family. The plaintiffs are two of these. Another was Akshayalinga, who was apparently adopted by one Subba Mudaliar in 1873, but in the course of the suit, it was found that the adoption was invalid because both the father and mother of Akshayalinga were dead at the time of his apparent adoption. The fourth brother was Visvalinga who died in 1892. The dispute is in regard to his property. The plaintiffs claimed it as his reversionary heirs, and their suit was to recover it from the defendant, who is the son of Akshayalinga, and who is said to have trespassed upon it in 1901. The defendant originally claimed the property as the self-acquisition of Akshayalinga, purchased benami in the name of Visvalinga, but both the Courts below found against that plea. In the alternative, defendant resisted the plaintiffs' suit on the ground that, as the adoption of Akshayalinga was invalid, he (defendant) had not lost his rights in his natural family, and was, therefore, entitled to one-third of the property and plaintiff could not recover even the remaining two-thirds in this suit as it is framed as a suit in ejectment against a trespasser, and cannot be converted into a suit for partition. The District Judge accepted this alternative defence and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit.

The plaintiffs appeal. They contend that the adoption of Akshayalinga having been made so long ago as 1873, and having been treated as a valid adoption by Akshayalinga himself (Exhibit J in 1878) and by Subba Mudaliar (see his Will Exhibit II in 1898) and generally by the family, the defendant cannot now deny the validity of the adoption. It is not, however, shown how any estoppel arises against the defendant's plea. The four brothers were divided before Akshayalinga's apparent adoption, and it is not shown that, in consequence of the adoption, the plaintiffs' position has been in any way changed to their disadvantage, so as to render it inequitable that the defendant should be restored to his place in his natural family. This appears to be the test which should be applied in accordance with the principle underlying the decisions in Gopalayyan v. Raghupatiayyan (1), and Parvatibayamma v. Ramakrishna Rau (2). It is hardly necessary to quote authority for the proposition that an invalid adoption does not per se destroy the adoptee's rights in his natural family; Bawani Sankara Pandit v. Ambabay Ammal (3), approved in Laksmappa v. Ramaya (4).

But it is contended for the plaintiffs that the apparent adoption having taken place so long ago as 1873 and having been acquiesced in by all concerned for so long, it ought to be now presumed by the Court that the adoption was made in pursuance of an authority given by some persons competent to give away the son in adoption. No doubt, that presumption was raised in the case of Anandrav Sivaji v. Ganesh Eshvant Bokil (5) but no authority for the decision is quoted, and that case was essentially different from the present case for, there the adoptee desired to maintain the adoption, whereas, in the present case the adoptee's son disclaims it, the adoptee being dead. No doubt, if there was evidence that Akshayalinga's father gave him to Subba Mudalier and the latter accepted him with a view to adoption, the adoption, though made years afterwards, and after the death of the father, would be valid because there was the essential giving and taking of the child with a view to adoption [Venkata v. Subhadra (6)]. But there is no such evidence in the present case, nor are there any other circumstances by which the suggested presumption could be supported. There is abundant authority that no one but the parents of a child can give him away in adoption and, therefore, that an orphan (as Akshayalinga was at the time of adoption) cannot be given away in adoption either by himself or by any one else. Subbaluvammal v. Ammakutti Ammal (7), Balvantrav Bhaskar v. Bayarai (8), Bashetiappa bin Basalingappa v. Shivlingappa bin Ballappa (9)

We, therefore, hold that the adoption of Akshayalinga was invalid, and the defendant has not lost his rights in his natural family.

We think that the District Judge is right in holding that the present suit, which is one in ejectment, cannot be properly converted into a suit for partition so as to give plaintiffs a decree for $\frac{2}{3}$rds of the plaint property. There may be other property which would have to be brought into hotchpot if the plaintiffs should sue for partition.

Their right to obtain partition in a suit properly framed for the purpose is apparently not yet barred, and they must be left to that remedy.

We dismiss the second appeal with costs.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 158 OF 1910.

March 6, 1912.

Present:—Mr. Justice Harington and Mr. Justice Mookerjee.

Raja JANAKI BALLAV SEN—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

Maharaj Kumar GOPAL LAL ROY AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Landlord and tenant—Patni lease—Construction—Annual rent fixed at certain amount—Payment of Government dues to be made by tenant out of rent—Remission of portion of Government dues—Who is to get benefit.

Under a patni lease, the annual rent was fixed at Rs. 1,580-8-7, out of which Rs. 1,080-8-7 was to be paid into the Collectorate by the tenant on account of Government dues payable by the landlord and the balance Rs. 500 was to be paid to the landlord as malikana. The lease provided that if any new imposts be levied by the Government in the future over and above the amount stated in the kabulyat, the tenant would be liable for the same but it did not provide that the tenant would be entitled to the benefit of any remission. The lease also provided that save and except malikana, the landlord will have no right and interest whatever. Subsequently the Government demand was reduced by Rs. 48-7-3 a year:

Held, that the landlord was entitled to the benefit of this sum, that is, he may realise it from the tenant in addition to the malikana Rs. 500.

Jotindra Mohan Tagore v. Bibi Jarao Kumari, 10 C. W. N. 201; 3 C.L.J. 7; 1 M. L. T. 8; 33 C. 140; 33 I. A. 30 and Hemendra Nath Mukerjee v. Kumar Nath Roy, 9 C. W. N 96; 32 C. 169, distinguished.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge of Rungpur, dated October 7th, 1909, reversing that of the First Munsif of that place, dated June 24th, 1909.

FACTS.—This is a suit to recover a certain sum of money as rent alleged to be due to the plaintiff in respect of his share in a patni tenure. It is alleged in the plaint that the annual rent of the patni was fixed at Rs. 1,580 8-7, that out of the said rent, Rs. 1,080-8-7 was, according to the terms of the kabulyat, payable to the Collector on account of Government revenue, Road and Public Work cesses, and dak cess, and the balance Rs. 500 was payable to the zemindar as malikana, that owing to a reduction having been subsequently made in the Road and Public Works cesses and abolition of the dak cess, the defendant has to pay to the Collector Rs. 1,032-1-4 instead of Rs. 1,080-8-7 and that the plaintiff and the pro forma defendants are, therefore, entitled to receive the amount remitted in addition to the malikana.

The defence mainly was to the effect that upon the terms of the kabulyat, the defendant ought to get the benefit of the remission.

The necessary portion of the kabulyat was as follows:—

"Out of the entire sangastha jama of Rs. 2,064, you kept fixed the jama of a total of Rs. 1,580 8-7 made up of the Sudder revenue of Rs. 943-1-4, the Road cess and the Public Works cess amounting to Rs. 128, and dak fund Rs. 9-7-3, and your malikana profit amounting to Rs. 500; and excluding collection charges gave up a sum of Rs. 200 as profit to me. Thereupon, I agreed to pay as consideration-money a sum of Rs. 2,000. You, therefore, * * granted to me a patta by making a permanent patni settlement at a yearly rent of Rs. 1,580-8-7 * * together with the Road cess, dak cess and Sudder revenue amounting to Rs. 1,080-8-7. * * I shall on depositing in the Collectorate the Sudder revenue etc., and, making over the dakhilas thereof to you, and the profit payable to you, shall take the dakhila thereof. * * From and out of the said fixed jama of Rs. 1,580-8-7, of the patni mahal, I shall pay Rs. 943-1-4 as Sudder revenue, Rs. 128 as the Road cess and the Public Works cess, and Rs. 9-7-3 as dak fund, which have remained fixed, and shall separately deposit in the Collectorate any new impost that may be levied by the Government in the future over and above the jama stated in this kabulyat. * * Save the malikana, you will not be able to interfere with the patni mahal in any other way or to demand any sum in excess to the fixed jama, nor shall I be able to make any objection asking for remission of the jama on any account. * * Save and except the malikana, you will have no right and interest whatever. * *"

The question was, whether the difference Rs. 48-7-3 was payable to the plaintiff and the pro forma defendants as a part of the rent.

The first Court held upon a construction of the kabulyat that what was agreed to be paid to the Collector was a part of the patni rent, and intended by the parties to be regarded as such, and as the defendant has to pay to the Collector Rs. 48-7-3 less than what was formerly payable, that sum being a part of the patni rent, was payable now to the plaintiff and the pro forma defendants. That Court gave a full decree to the plaintiff.

The defendant appealed, and the lower Appellate Court held that the sums payable to Government are not part of the rent—Jotindra Mohan Tagore v. Bibi Jarao Kumari (1), that the rights of the zemindar are limited to the Rs. 500 payable as malikana, that the intention of the parties was that the amount payable as malikana should be a constant quantity, for twice over it is stated in the kabulyat that besides the right to the malikana of Rs. 500, the landlord shall retain no right of any kind on the property leased. That Court directed that the amount to which the plaintiff was entitled should be calculated on the malikana of Rs. 500.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Babus Boidya Nath Dutt and Hem Chandra Mitra, for the Appellant.

Babus Dwarka Nath Chakravarti and Ramani Mohan Chatterji, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The sole point in controversy in this appeal, which arises out of a suit for rent, is, whether the landlord or the tenant is entitled to the benefit of an annual deduction in the Government demands to the extent of Rs. 48-7-3. The patni lease, on the basis whereof the claim by the landlord, the plaintiff-appellant, is founded, was executed on the 8th June 1896. Under that lease, the annual rent for the patni was fixed at Rs. 1,580-8-7. This amount is described in more than one place in the instrument as "the fixed jama." After reciting that the annual rent was fixed at this sum, the document proceeds to describe the mode of payment; Rs. 1,080-8-7 was to be paid into the Collectorate on account of the Government demands and the balance Rs. 500 was to be paid to the landlord as malikana. The Government demands were on account of Revenue, Road cess and dak cess, and the payment thereof was undertaken by the tenant. In 1906, the Government demand in respect of cesses appears to have been reduced by Rs. 487-3 a year. The contention of the landlord is that he is entitled to the benefit of this sum; in other words, he seeks to realise it from the tenant in addition to the annual payment of Rs. 500. The contention of the tenant defendant is that he is liable to pay nothing beyond Rs. 500 a year to his landlord, and that if the Government demand has been remitted in whole or in part, he alone is entitled to the benefit thereof. Upon this sole question in controversy, the Courts below have adopted divergent views. The Court of first instance upheld the contention of the landlord, while the District Judge has taken a contrary view on the authority of the decision of the Judicial Committee in Jotindra Mohan Tagore v. Bibi Jarao Kumari (1). The answer to the question raised, must, in our opinion, depend upon the construction of the contract between the parties.

It is manifest that the rent reserved under the lease is not Rs. 500 but Rs. 1,580-8-7, which was payable by the tenant to the landlord for use and occupation of the land comprised in the tenancy. This is plain, not merely from the recitals in the document but also from the schedule where, although the malikana is made payable in four equal instalments, the sum payable for each instalment is added to the corresponding instalment of Government demand; and the rent payable for each instalment is shown as the aggregate of the two sums. We start then with the assumption that the rent payable was Rs. 1,580-8-7, and the whole of this sum, therefore, was the property of the plaintiff. The defendant, as his agent, undertook to pay out of this sum Rs. 1,080-8-7 to the Collector on account of demands primarily leviable by the State from the landlord. The tenant also undertook to produce receipts for the payments, which ordinarily would be issued in the name of the zemindar and to make them over to his landlord. The question, therefore, arises, if the tenant finds it unnecessary to pay a portion of this sum of Rs. 1,080-8-7 because such portion has been remitted by the State, who is the person entitled to the benefit of such remission? On behalf of the tenant, reliance has been placed mainly upon three clauses in the lease in support of the contention that the benefit of the remission accrues to him. The first of those provides that if any new imposts be levied by the Government in the future over and above the jama stated in the kabulyat, the tenant would be liable for the same. The second clause is to the effect that save as regards malikana the landlord will not be able to interfere with the patni mahal in any way or to demand any sum in excess of the fixed jama nor will the tenant be able to make any objection for remission of the jama on any account. The third clause is to the effect that save and except malikana the landlord will have no right and interest whatever. It is not disputed that if the first of these clauses had been bilateral and if it had expressly provided, as is provided very often in leases of this description, that the tenant would not only be liable for any new impost but also be entitled to the benefit of any remission, there would have been no room for controversy. But the learned Vakil for the respondent has contended that although the clause has not been framed in that way, the combined effect of the first and the third clauses is precisely the same. We are unable, after anxious consideration of the matter, to accept this argument as well founded. The effect of the second and third clauses is to make it impossible for the landlord to interfere with the tenant in any way, his claim is limited to the malikana. But it is significant that the malikana is not described as fixed whereas the sum of Rs. 1,580-8-7 is in more places than one described as the fixed jama. In our opinion, it is fairly clear, upon a consideration of all the clauses in the kabulyat, that the landlord is entitled to the benefit of the remission allowed by the State.

The case of Jotindra Mohan Tagore v. Bibi Jarao Kumari (1), upon which reliance has been placed by the learned Judge, is obviously distinguishable. There the sum payable to the superior landlord was, as appeared from the terms of the lease, not regarded as a portion of the rent. It was, consequently, held that it was not recoverable as if it was rent. Nor is the case of Hemendra Nath Mukerjee v. Kumar Nath Roy (2) of any assistance to the respondent, because the terms of the instrument were materially different from those of the instrument before us. But it is needless to review the authorities, commencing with Basanta Kumari v. Ashutosh Chuckerbutty (3), which will be found analysed in Banku Behary Sikdar v. Gopal Chandra Neogy (4). As pointed out in that case, the question whether a particular sum is lawfully payable or deliverable in money or kind by a tenant to his landlord on account of the use or occupation of the land held by the tenant, must depend upon the true construction of the contract in each case. In the case before us, there is no room for controversy that the sum claimed was rent; and as there was no express provision in the instrument that the tenant would have the benefit of the remission of any portion of the Government demands, the landlord is entitled to recover it.

We may add that a preliminary objection was taken that the appeal is incompetent because the sum claimed is not in the nature of rent, and reference was made to Banku Behari Sikdar v. Gopal Chandra Neogy (4). In the view we take, it is obvious that the preliminary objection fails. The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the Court below set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored with costs both here and in the Court of appeal below. The cross-objection necessrily fails and is dismissed.

Appeal allowed.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 1226 OF 1911.

May 30, 1912.

Present:—Mr. Justice Chamier.

Thakur CHAUHARJA SINGH—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

SARABJIT—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Landlord and tenant—Ejectment—Tenancy denied—Jurisdiction of Civil or Revenue Court.

CHAUHRAJA SINGH v. SARABJIT.

Plaintiff sued for ejectment of defendant in a Revenue Court alleging that he was a tenant from year to year. The defendant replied that he had bought the property from one H. whose house stood on the plot.

The Assistant Collector, not being sure that the defendant had become plaintiff's tenant, dismissed the suit. The plaintiff then sued in a Civil Court for ejectment:

Held, that the suit was maintainable.

Narain Singh v. Govinda Ram, 8 A. L. J. 431; 33 A. 523; 9 Ind. Cas. 1022, distinguished.

Second appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Jaunpur, dated 19th July 1911.

Mr. Haribans Sahai, for the Appellant.

Mr. Satya Chandra Mukerji, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case, the Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiff had no right to sue as a thekadar. That decision was reversed by Mr. Justice Karamat Husain, who remanded the case to the lower Appellate Court for the determination of the remaining issues. The Subordinate Judge has now dismissed the suit on another ground, namely, that the suit is not maintainable in the Civil Court. The plaintiff again appeals to this Court. The Subordinate Judge finds support for his view of the case in the decision of Knox and Karamat Husain, JJ., in Narain Singh v. Gobind Ram (1). In that case the plaintiff went first to the Revenue Court saying that he was an occupancy-tenant and the defendant was his sub-tenant. The Revenue Court dismissed his application for the ejectment of the defendant. The plaintiff then came into the Civil Court alleging that the defendant had been his sub-tenant, but had become a trespasser, because he had pleaded in the Revenue Court that he was not the sub-tenant of the plaintiff, but was himself an occupancy tenant of the land and the Revenue Court had so held. This Court held that the plaintiff was not entitled to maintain the civil suit. I am not quite sure that that decision is in accordance with other decisions of this Court but it does not appear to me to cover the present case. Here the plaintiff sued in a Revenue Court to eject the defendant saying that he was a tenant from year to year. The defendant replied that he had bought the property from one Harbansa and that Harbansa's house formerly stood on the plot. The Assistant Collector, after referring to the wajib-ul-arz said that he thought that the case was not a clear one and that the question should be tried out by a competent Court with reference to the customs of the village, but then he went on to say: "Prima facie I hold that the defendant has the first claim to hold the land on payment of rent" and then he says that the plaintiff should first have the status of the defendant determined. He dismissed the suit. It seems to me that although he was inclined to hold that the defendant was entitled to become the tenant of the plaintiff, he was not sure that the defendant had become the tenant of the plaintiff and he dismissed the suit, because in his opinion the Revenue Court could not decide the real question in the case which could be solved only by inquiry into the customs of the village. There does not seem to me to be a definite finding that the defendant is a tenant of the plaintiff. The present case appears to me to be covered rather by the decisions in Zubeda Bibi v. Sheo Charan (2) and Hamid Ali Shah v. Wilayat Ali (3), than by the decision in Narain Singh v. Gobind Ram (1) and I hold, therefore, that the plaintiff is entitled to maintain the present suit. On the last occasion when this case was remanded, the Subordinate Judge was directed to determine the remaining issues. Had he done so, I might have disposed of the case now. He has determined only the question of jurisdiction. I set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and remand the case to that Court with directions to re-admit the appeal to its original number and dispose of it according to law. Costs here and in the lower Appellate Court will be the costs in the cause.

Case remanded.

LOWER BURMA CHIEF COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION NOS. 7-B, 13-B AND 16-B OF 1911.

March 31, 1911.

Present:—Mr. Justice Twomey.

SAN PAW AUNG AND OTHERS—PETITIONERS

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 25—Confession to Police Officers—Admission amounting to confession—Admissibility—Admissions made by a person before he was accused of an offence—Admissibility against co-accused.

A. was convicted on the evidence of two Excise Sub-Inspectors, who stated that he offered them Rs. 10 per ball of opium as a bribe to let him land unmolested a large quantity of illicit opium from the steamer Katoria. These Excise Officers had been also enrolled as Police Officers:

Held, that the alleged offer by the accused amounted to an admission that he had a large quantity of contraband opium in his possession and, being an admission of an offence under the Opium Act, amounted to a confession and was thus inadmissible under section 25 of the Evidence Act.

The test which has to be applied in deciding whether section 25, Evidence Act, applies is the position of the person at the time when it is proposed to prove the admission, not his position at the time when he is alleged to have made it.

A confession, therefore, made to a Police Officer by a person when he is not accused of any offence is inadmissible in evidence against him when he is accused of an offence.

A confession made by an accused person to a Police Officer might be admissible in favour of a co-accused but not against him.

Revision of the order of dismissal passed by the Sessions Judge, Arakan, in the appeal laid against the order of the First Class Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Akyab, dated the 19th day of November 1910, passed in Criminal Trial No. 57 of 1910, convicting the accused of an offence under section 9 (c), Opium Act and 114, Indian Penal Code.

Messrs. Patkar and Glanville, for the Petitioners.

JUDGMENT.—It is convenient to deal in one order with the three applications in Criminal Revision Cases Nos. 7-B, 13-B, and 16-B. of 1911. There is no reason to interfere in the case of the three sampan rowers. They must have known that the commodity that was lowered into their boat in the small hours of the morning from a porthole of the Katoria was contraband opium. The furtive circumstances and the smell that would be emitted from such a large quantity of opium (106½ balls) negative the suggestion that the sampan-wallahs thought that they were receiving a load of mangoes. It may be that some of the Excise Subordinates were concerned in the importation and that the sampan was really hired by one of them. But even if this fact were clearly established, it would not materially alter the case against the sampan-wallahs. They must have known in any case that the enterprise in hand was the importation of a large quantity of illicit opium whether with or without the connivance of the Excise Subordinates. Looking to the magnitude of the seizure, I do not think that the sentences on the sampan-men are excessive.

San Paw Aung has been convicted of abetting the illegal possession of the opium on board the Katoria in Akyab harbour. The principal evidence against him is that of the Excise Sub-Inspectors, Shwe Tun and Tha Do Paw, who were on duty on board the Katoria. Each of these witnesses say that San Paw Aung offered him Rs. 10 a ball as a bribe to let him land the opium unmolested. Shwe Tun says that "to catch him" he agreed. But Tha Do Pru says he refused the offer. Other witnesses were produced to prove by way of corroboration that San Paw Aung went on board the Katoria on the night in question. But it is on the evidence of Shwe Tun and Tha Do Pru that the conviction really rests.

I think this evidence is inadmissible under section 25, Evidence Act. Shwe Tun and Tha Do Pru as Excise Sub-Inspectors have been enrolled as Police Officers. What San Paw Aung is alleged to have stated to them amounts to an admission that he had a large quantity of contraband opium in his possession. This was an admission of an offence under the Opium Act, and was, therefore, a confession. Mr. Ruthledge argues in support of the convictions that section 25, Evidence Act, does not apply because San Paw Aung made the confession before he was accused of any offence. As pointed out in the Upper Burma case, Queen-Empress v. Nga Thet (1), the test which has to be applied is the position of the person at the time when it is proposed to prove the admission, not his position at the time when he is alleged to have made it. No authority has been cited in support of the construction suggested by Mr. Ruthledge and I must hold that it is erroneous.

There are substantial reasons for doubting the veracity of the two Sub-Inspectors. But in the circumstances it is not necessary to deal with these reasons. The confessions being set aside as inadmissible, there is no sufficient evidence that San Paw Aung was in any way privy to the importation or possession of the opium.

The rejection of San Paw Aung's confessions materially affects the case against the Serang Amir Ali also. He was charged with importing the opium, and the principal evidence against him was that of the two Sub-Inspectors who stated San Paw Aung before offering the bribes to them talked to the serang aside. Shwe Tun says that after San Paw Aung offered him the bribe, San Paw Aung went and talked for about ten minutes to the serang who had been waiting not far off. Then the serang lit a safety lamp and waved it as a signal to the shore. Ten or 15 minutes later, the Sampan came alongside and the opium was put into it, through the porthole. The evidence of Tha Do Pru is much to the same effect though there are some discrepancies. Mr. Foster, Sub-Inspector of Police, corroborates the Excise Officers as to the waving of the lamp by Amir Ali. It appears, however, that Ramsingh, the Excise peon, who says he saw the waving of the lamp, at first said the man who waved it was a lascar whose name he did not know but whom he could recognise. He admitted at the trial that he had known Amir Ali by name for seven or eight months. In estimating the value of this evidence as to the waving of the lamp, it must also be remembered that the two Excise Sub-Inspectors made no charge at all against either San Paw Aung or Amir Ali when they gave their first information on the morning of the seizure and that these two accused were not arrested until nine days later when the Katoria returned from Rangoon. I am unable to treat the telegram, Exhibit P. as implicating Amir Ali. It is not proved that it was sent by him and there is only a suspicion that Maung Sein master, to whom it is addressed, is San Paw Aung's father, Tha Zan. Even if it were proved to have been sent by Amir Ali to Tha Zan, it could have very little weight apart from San Paw Aung's confessions.

I think the alleged confessions are inadmissible not only against San Paw Aung but also against the co-accused Amir Ali. A confession made by an accused person to a Police officer might be admissible in favour of a co-accused but I think it is clear from the language of section 25 that it is not admissible as against a co-accused. If the alleged confessions are set aside, the case against Amir Ali falls to the ground. It is only the confessions which give colour and meaning to the alleged visit of San Paw Aung to the Katoria on the night in question, to his alleged conversations with the serang, and to the alleged waving of the lamp.

The applications of Wahid Ali, Gona Meah and Abdul Aziz are dismissed.

The convictions and sentences of Amir Ali and San Paw Aung are set aside. These two applicants are acquitted and their bail bonds will be cancelled.

GOVINDASAWMI alias KRISTNASAWMY—ACCUSED.

Sentence—Concurrent sentences—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 397—Different trials.

It is an error in law to direct that a sentence of imprisonment passed by a Judge on a person in a subsequent trial should run concurrently with the sentence of imprisonment which had been passed on him in a former trial.

Petition, under section 26 of the Letters Patent, praying that, in the circumstances stated there and in the certificate dated 2nd February 1912 filed therewith, the High Court will be pleased to consider the legality of the sentence passed by the Presiding Judge in respect of the second count in Case No.12 of the Fourth Criminal Sessions of the High Court of Madras for the year 1911, and to alter the sentence or to pass such other sentence as the High Court may deem right.

ORDER.—We are of opinion that the learned Judge erred in law in directing that the sentence of imprisonment, passed by him on Govindasawmy in respect of the second count in Case No. 12 of the Fourth Criminal Sessions of this Court for the year 1911, should run concurrently with the sentence of imprisonment which had been passed on the said Govindasawmi in respect of the second count in Case No. 16 of the Third Criminal Sessions of this Court for the year 1911.

We set aside the sentence and direction, and in lieu thereof, we sentence the said Govindasawmi to one day's rigorous imprisonment to commence at the expiration of the period of imprisonment to which he was sentenced in Case No. 16 of the Third Criminal Sessions for the year 1911

Sentence set aside.

Tout—Declaration without legal proof—Legal Practitioners Act (XVIII of 1879), s. 36.

Section 36 of the Legal Practitioners Act, requires proof by evidence of general repute or otherwise before a man can be declared a tout. Such evidence should be taken in the ordinary manner and brought on the record and where this is not done, the order of declaration cannot be maintained.

Petition for revision of the order of the District Magistrate, Ambala, dated the 23rd August 1910, declaring accused to be touts.

FACTS of the case are fully given in the order of the District Magistrate given below:—

ORDER.—"I have had the benefit of a consultation with the leading members of the local Bar, and from information given to me by them, I am credibly informed and have reason to believe that the following persons, namely, Shankar Singh, his son Dewat Singh, Nagina Singh and Hussain Bakhsh, come to the Courts not only in connection with their own cases, but in connection with other people's cases, and that they make a living in this way and have grown wealthy by these means, that they foster litigation, and that their conduct falls within the purview of section 36 of the Legal Practitioners Act, and in short that they are habitual touts.

"This information is also confirmed by information received from the Police Officials whose duties bring them constantly to the Court. And I accordingly order that the names of Shankar Singh, Dewat Singh, Nagina Singh and Hussain Bakhsh be entered (as regards to this Court and all Courts subordinate to it) in the list of touts and that they be precluded from the precincts of such Courts.

"No further action will, at present, be taken, in regard to the other persons referred to in my order of the 3rd August."

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Petitioners.

JUDGMENT.—The District Magistrate seems hardly to have appreciated the law as to touts or the nature of the information received by him. The law requires "proof," by evidence of general repute or otherwise, before a man can be dubbed a tout—Section 36 of the Act. Further, the S. V. O's note of 21st July 1910, which seems to have started the thing, says nothing about accused being touts but charges them with being false witnesses and getting together false witnesses and so forth. The consultation with the leading members of the Bar is not reproduced on the record and thus there is nothing whatever to go upon.

I set aside the order.

Revision allowed.

Dying declaration—Deposition of witnesses who heard it—Written statement by deceased—Incomplete record of deposition—Re-trail—Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 32, 33.

It is of the utmost importance that evidence as to a dying declaration should be as exact and full as possible. Where such a declaration was heard by witnesses who spoke to it but was apparently much fuller than what the record of their depositions showed,—the Sessions Judge not having recorded all they said on the point: Held, that there must be a re-trial.

When what is sought to be proved is the verbal statement of a dying person, the proper and legal mode of proving it is by eliciting from the person who heard the deceased make the statement, what the deceased said. If the statement was taken down in writing by the witness or by some one in presence of the witness, the witness would be entitled to refresh his memory by referring to it; otherwise the writing itself is not relevant unless it is in the nature of a deposition taken in the presence of the accused. Where the deceased dictated his statement and it was taken down and he signed the writing after being satisfied as to its accuracy, such writing may be regarded as a statement of the deceased in writing and would be admissible under section 32 of the Evidence Act. But even if what was stated was taken down by some one in writing and signed by the deceased, that would not debar a witness who heard the statement from proving it independently of the writing. And, ordinarily, it would be desirabe to have on record what the witness is able to reproduce from memory, in addition to the writing.

Appeal under section 417 of the Criminal Procedure Code against the judgment of acquittal passed on the accused, in the Sessions Case No. 11 of 1911, by the Sessions Judge of Cuddappah.

Mr. C. Sidney Smith, for the Appellant.

Messrs. L. A. Govindaraghava Iyer, T. Ananthachari and E. R. Osborne, for the Accused.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the six accused persons were tried by the Sessions Judge of Cuddappah with the aid of the assessors. The first accused was charged under sections 302 and 109 of the Indian Penal Code; and the remaining five accused were charged under section 302 with reference to the death of one Kristna Reddi. The assessors found all the accused not guilty of the offences charged against them, and the Sessions Judge agreeing with them has acquitted them. This appeal has been preferred by the Government against the order of acquittal. As against the 1st accused, there is parctically no evidence to connect him with the murder of Kristna Reddi.

We must, therefore, hold that the acquittal of the 1st accused is right, and the appeal against him will be dismissed.

As regards the case of the other accused, we have come to the conclusion that they must be re-tried. To begin with, the manner in which the learned Sessions Judge has recorded evidence in this case cannot be said to be satisfactory. Besides the evidence of Prosecution witness No. 1, the alleged eye-witness of the occurrence, and of Prosecution witness No. 2, who is said to have seen accused Nos. 2 to 6 run away immediately after the assault, the most important evidence against these accused consists of dying declarations of the deceased. It was sought to prove the dying declarations by the evidence of men who heard the deceased making the statements and were in a position to state what they heard and by proving the document in which the statement was taken down and signed by the deceased. Now Prosecution witness No. 5 is one of the witnesses who deposes to what the deceased stated. His deposition on this point is recorded thus:—

"I asked him (meaning the deceased) and he said that the five accused beat him." The witness could not have used the words 'the five accused', as what he heard the deceased utter; not only the deceased's assailants were not accused at the time of assault, but the persons under trial were six in number and this witness's evidence as recorded does not indicate which five of the six accused the deceased said had assaulted him. Similarly, the 2nd Prosecution witness's evidence as to the dying declaration made by the deceased is recorded in this way: "He said accused Nos. 2 to 6 beat him and wept." It is of the utmost importance that evidence as to the dying declaration should be as exact and full as possible. We should have on record everything which a witness heard the deceased say, as to the transaction which resulted in his death. The dying statement of the deceased as heard by the witnesses who speak to it was apparently, if one is to judge from Exhibit A, much fuller than what the record of their depositions would show and it seems that the Sessions Judge has not recorded all that they said on the point.

Further we would point out that, when what is sought to be proved is the verbal statement of a dying person, the proper and legal mode of proving it is by eliciting from the person who heard the deceased make the statement, what the deceased said. If the statement was taken down in writing by the witness or by some one in presence of the witness, the witness would be entitled to refresh his memory, if he so wanted, by referring to such writing, otherwise the writing itself is not relevant unless it is in the nature of a deposition taken in the presence of the accused.

Where the deceased dictated his statement and it was taken down and he then signed the writing after being satisfied as to its accuracy, such writing may be regarded as a statement of the deceased in writing, and would be admissible under section 32 of the Indian Evidence Act. Exhibit A in this case would stand on this footing. But even if what was stated was taken down by some one in writing and signed by the deceased, that would not debar a witness who heard the statement from proving it independently of the writing. And, ordinarily, it would be desirable to have on record what the witness is able to reproduce from memory what he heard the deceased stated in addition to the writing in which the statement was taken down.

Further, it appears that accused Nos. 2 to 6, who examined witnesses in support of their defence before the Committing Magistrate, did not examine any witnesses for the defence in the Sessions Court.

Mr. Osborne, the learned Counsel who appears for them in support of the order of acquittal, states that the learned Sessions Judge, at a very early stage of the case, either after the examination of the 1st or 2nd Prosecution witness, expressed a decided opinion that if that was all the important evidence in the case besides the dying declaration of the deceased, the case for the prosecution was not a strong one. Mr. Osborne says that he was led by that expression of opinion by the Sessions Judge to refrain from examining defence witnesses. We have no reason to doubt that that is probably what occurred in this connection. In these circumstances, we set aside the acquittal and order a re-trial of the case against accused Nos. 2 to 6.

Re-trial ordered.

The accused took off a girl's clothes, threw her on to the ground and then sat down beside her. He said nothing to her nor did he do anything more to her:

Held, that the accused committed an offence under section 354, Penal Code, and was not guilty of an attempt to commit rape.

Petition for revision, under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code, of the order of the Sessions Judge, Jhelam Division, dated 14th November 1911, upholding the order passed by the District Magistrate, Gujrat, dated 16th October 1911, convicting the petitioner.

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—The evidence of the girl upon whom the assault was committed is to this effect. The accused took off her clothes, threw her on to the ground and then sat down beside her She says: "He said nothing to me, sat down beside me. He did not do anything more to me." This being so, can it be said that the accused actually attempted rape? I think not. He undoubtedly committed an offence under section 354, Indian Penal Code, and may have intended to commit rape, but I do not think it can be said that he actually attempted to commit it, on the girl's evidence. I should have convicted and sentenced him to two years' rigorous imprisonment under section 354, if I had tried the case originally myself. He has, however, been whipped, and in consideration of that I shall remit one year out of the two.

I alter the conviction to one under section 354, Indian Penal Code, and sentence the accused to one year's rigorous imprisonment.

Sentence reduced to one year.

Private defence—Onus of proof—No allegation as defence.

It is for the person who relies on the right of private defence to prove that he is within the exception, though the right is not alleged as a defence.

Appeal against the order of the Court of Sessions of the Ramnad Division, in Case No. 35 of the Calendar for 1911.

Dr. S. Swaminathan, for the Appellants.

Mr. M. D. Devadoss, for the Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The appellants have been convicted of rioting by the Sessions Judge concurring generally with the assessors.

The case is a difficult one in some respects. There is no doubt that there was an affray between the Nadars and Thevars and that all the appellants were members of the assembly of Nadars, which formed one party to the affray, and there is no reason to doubt that the affray arose out of the interference by the Thevars with a number of Nadars engaged in demolishing a house, the title to which was in dispute between the two castes.

The Sessions Judge finds it impossible to accept as true either the account put before him of the occurrence, and it is clear that the prosecution witnesses cannot be telling the whole truth when they deny that their party inflicted injuries on the Nadars. If what appears to be the case for the Crown is the true case, that is to say, that the Police officers were not present when the affray commenced, then, the prosecution evidence is untrue also on the important questions of the origin of the riot. On this point, the observations of the Sessions Judge, in paragraph 13 of his judgment, seem to me to be entirely justified.

On the other hand, the story told by the accused is equally incredible as pointed out by the Sessions Judge, and is not supported in this case by any evidence of great value.

In these circumstances, the Sessions Judge has declined to accept the direct evidence as to details and has decided the case generally on the undoubted circumstances and it is difficult to say that he is wrong. I have been taken through all the evidence, and it is clearly open to all objections taken to it by him. He finds on the circumstantial evidence that,

(1) the Nadars, more than five in number, were engaged peaceably in demolishing a house, the title to which was in dispute, but possession of which was with their tenants, at that time they were not an unlawful assembly;

(2) they were interrupted by the Thevars, who endeavoured to prevent them from continuing the demolition of the house and who probably attacked them;

(3) they used force to the Thevars in order to enable themselves to continue their work in the house

Counsel for the appellants accepts the finding and argues on them that the Nadars should have been acquitted as having used force only in repelling an attack upon themselves, that is to say, they are protected by the Law of Private Defence.

The Sessions Judge, it is contended with some reason, states the law incorrectly when he says that no right of private defence exists. If Nadars were not an unlawful assembly when demolishing the house, they would be entitled to a right of private defence, if attacked. The Sessions Judge is not clear on the question when the Nadars became an unlawful assembly. On the statements that the house was in disrepair and required to be pulled down, statements which are uncontradicted by any prosecution evidence, I think it must be held that they were not an unlawful assembly before the Thevars came up.

Then rejecting the prosecution evidence that the Nadars then attacked the Thevars at the instigation of the Police, it may be right to hold that the Thevars were the aggressors in the sense that they first used the force. In that case, all that is clear is, that force was repelled by force on the part of the Nadars and injuries were suffered on both sides. Now the story of the Nadars is, that they did not use force at all, but the Thevars fought some of their own caste employed by them (the Nadars) but this is improbable, and I am not asked to accept it as true.

It is not then their case anywhere that they used force in their own defence, and there is no evidence to show that force was necessary to repel the attack. It is for the person who relies on the right of private defence to prove that he is within the exception, though the right was not alleged as a defence. I should still, if the circumstances made it clear that the Nadars did not use more force than was necessary to defend themselves, be prepared to acquit them on that ground but so far as I can see there are no circumstances in the case which should warrant me in taking this view of the appellant's conduct. I, therefore, confirm the conviction and sentences, and dismiss this appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

NGA BA GYAW—APPLICANT

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 322, 325—Grievous hurt—Intent to cause—Nature of injury and circumstances of case—Drunkenness—Question of intent or motive.

An intent to cause grievous hurt may be inferred from the circumstances of the case and the nature of the injury caused.

When a man hits another over the head with a stick hard enough to fracture his skull and endanger his life, he must, in the circumstances, have either intended to cause grievous hurt or known that he was likely to cause it.

Drunkenness may be taken into consideration when dealing with the intention or motive to commit an offence in a state of drunkenness.

Mr. S. Mukerjee, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application to revise the conviction and sentence of 6 months' rigorous imprisonment passed by the first Class Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Yamethin, on the petitioner, Ba Gyaw, under section 325, Indian Penal Code.

The petitioner appealed to the Sessions Judge, Meiktila, who dismissed the appeal.

On reading the grounds of application and examining the judgment, I admitted the application. When the case was called, I heard Mr. S. Mukerjee on behalf of the applicant.

The grounds of application are (1) that the lower Appellate Court did not apply its mind to the facts of the case, (2) that the evidence for the prosecution as regards the identification is untrustworthy and inadequate because the blow was struck through a half open door and, therefore, the blow might have been struck without the striker being seen; that it was dark and difficult to distinguish faces; (3) that Tun Tha was the man who struck the blow and not Ba Gyaw, and as Tun Tha ran away, and Ba Gyaw did not run away, the probability is that Tun Tha was the striker, and not Ba Gyaw; (4) that in any case the presumption could not be raised that the striker intended to cause hurt, and the lower Courts have disregarded section 322, Indian Penal Code. (5) Lastly, that though drunkenness is no excuse, yet it must be taken into consideration when the question of intention arises and is weighed by the Court, and that Ba Gyaw being drunk could not have intended to cause grievous hurt. The learned Counsel for the applicant quoted the following rulings and books of reference:—Ram Lal Singh v. Hari Charan Ahir (1) and Jamait Mullick v. Emperor (2) and also Sohoni on the Duties of an Appellate Court, section 424, Criminal Procedure Code. These rulings and Sohoni's Notes under section 424 deal with the question of the admission of the application for revision under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, by the Court. As I have already admitted the application after reading the somewhat laconic judgment of the Appellate Court, I need not consider these rulings any further, because I admitted the application and have considered the case on its merits.

The facts of the case are set out in the Sub-Divisional Magistrate's judgment. The accused is a well-known man, a man of some importance, as he is the son of the Township Officer. He is a man of 25 years of age and is, therefore, a man of some mark and locality. It is not likely, therefore, that he would be easily mistaken for someone else. Moreover, he had been drinking in the Chinaman's shop, and the grounds of application would tend to show that he had been drinking freely there. The Chinaman had already turned him out for brawling in his shop, and he would have had a good opportunity of seeing him. There was a light in the shop and the witnesses for the defence who were outside the shop admit this. The learned Counsel for the applicant wishes me to believe that the blow might have been struck from outside the shop through the half open door without the striker being clearly seen. Now on this point it seems to me to be quite clear that it is much easier to see through a half open door than to strike a really severe blow through it. The medical evidence shows that the complainant received a very heavy blow and the shop door must have been wide open to allow such a blow to come home. The Chinaman says that the accused, Ba Gyaw, had one foot inside the door when the blow was struck. He was not struck from behind, and had every opportunity to see his assailant. He said distinctly that Tun Tha, when trying to strike him, struck the number on the door way. If a man is close enough to strike such an effective blow as that which felled compainant, the man struck could see clearly who the striker was; the light inside the shop streaming through the door way would clearly show who the assailant was. So much for the possibility of mistake on the part of the witnesses for the prosecution.

(1) 37 C. 194; 5 Ind. Cas. 999; 11 C. L. J. 410; 11 Cr. L. J. 348.

As regards Tun Tha's absconding and Ba Gyaw braving it out, I attach little weight to this, because Ba Gyaw, being the son of a well-known local officer, would have been mad to have run away. He was evidently able to call a large number of witnesses to prove an alibi.

I will now turn to the evidence for the defence. It is impossible to read the evidence and the half-hearted way in which the alibi is set up, without distrusting the witnesses for the defence. I think the Magistrate is quite right in believing that Ba Gyaw was the man who struck the blow that felled the complainant and fractured his skull.

There can be no doubt from the medical evidence that grievous hurt was caused. The question is whether under section 322, Indian Penal Code, Ba Gyaw intended to cause or knew himself likely to cause grievous hurt when he struck the blow. It seems to me that there can be no doubt but that when a man hits another over the head with a stick hard enough to fracture his skull and endanger his life, that, in the circumstances of the present case, he must have either intended to cause grievous hurt or known that he was likely to cause it. All the circumstances point to the fact that Ba Gyaw was much enraged at being turned out of the shop and intended to revenge himself on the man who turned him out. It is idle to suppose that he did not intend to cause grievous hurt. He evidently did not strike in sport or fun, and I think that he must be presumed to have intended the consequences of his savage blow.

The last point is that he was drunk at the time and the learned Advocate quoted the leading case of J. M.—v. King-Emperor (3). As a matter of fact, the two cases are not on all fours. J. M., in the course of a drunken frolic, committed an act of technical robbery which one would ordinarily believe a man in his position never intended, nor did he know what he was doing. It is one thing to commit a robbery and quite another thing to knock an opponent down in a drunken brawl. The former is a more complex act and the motive for committing robbery may be absent as they were in J. M.—'s case (3), but a man may be what is termed "fighting drunk" and may be well held responsible if he chooses to brawl while he is drunk. I accordingly think the sentence under section 325, Indian Penal Code, viz., 6 months' rigorous imprisonment, is not a whit too severe. Indeed, but for the reasons given by the Magistrate for not inflicting a more severe sentence, I should have called upon the applicant to show cause against enhancement. I hesitate, however, to do this as the case has been up on appeal, and obviously this point must have occurred to the learned Sessions Judge when reading the proceedings, though he had not mentioned it in his somewhat laconic judgment.

The application is dismissed.

Application dismissed.

CRIMINAL REVISION CASE No. 623 OF 1911.
CASE REFERRED No. 126 OE 1911.

THE SESSIONS JUDGE OF TANJORE—

versus

THIAGARAJA THEVAN—ACCUSED.

Practice—Trial with assessors—One of them found disqualified to act after the trial was begun—De novo trial—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 268, 284, 285, 438, 439.

Where it is discovered, after the trial has begun in a case tried with the aid of assessors, that one of them is interested or otherwise unfit to sit as an assessor, the Sessions Judge should refer the case to the High Court to set aside the order by which the incompetent assessor was appointed and all the subsequent proceedings in the trial.

In such cases, the Sessions Judge ought to choose another assessor and proceed with the trial de novo.

Case referred for the orders of the High Court, under section 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code, by the Sessions Judge of Tanjore, in his letter, No. 8848 dated the 5th October 1911, referring for orders his proceedings, dated 5th October 1911 in Sessions Case No. 41 of 1911.

GROUNDS.—It was brought to the notice of the Sessions Court by one of the Pleaders for the accused, that the first assessor was not a disinterested person, being the son-in-law of the Village Munsif in connection with whose murder the accused was being arrested, when he is said to have made the attempt to murder a Police officer for which he has now been committed for trial.

The Sessions Judge heard arguments on both sides and passed the following order:—

"After the trial had begun, and while the first prosecution witness was still under examination (in chief), it was brought to the notice of the Court by one of the accused's Pleaders that the first assessor is not a disinterested person being the son-in-law of the same Village Munsif in connection with whose murder the accused was being arrested when he is said to have made the attempt to murder a Police officer for which he is now on his trial. The first assessor, on being questioned, admitted his relationship to the murdered Village Munsif. In the circumstances, it seems to me that the first assessor is so likely to be biassed against the accused as to be absolutely incapacitated from sitting as an assessor at this trial. I should certainly never have choosen him as an assessor had I known, when I did so, that he was a man who must be presumed to have a strong bias against the accused. The question now arises what is the proper procedure to be adopted. It would be manifestly improper to allow the trial to proceed with a person sitting as an assessor who is prejudiced against the accused. Section 285, Criminal Procedure Code, is inapplicable since the first assessor has not absented himself nor been prevented from attending the Court. There is no provision of the Code which would enable me to appoint a new and impartial assessor now in place of the first assessor The suggestion that I should allow the trial to proceed with both the present assessors but, with a predetermination to disregard the opinion of the first assessor altogether as unworthy of consideration, seems to me to be open to this objection, that it would really be tantamount to trying the case with one assessor only (the second,) and this would be illegal as contravening the provision of section 268, Criminal Procedure Code. The question as to what procedure should be adopted is not free from difficulty. The Code does not expressly provide for such a contingency as that which has arisen. But after careful consideration, it seems to me that the correct view of the matter is that in the light of the facts which have now been brought to my notice, my order under section 284, Criminal Procedure Code, appointing the first assessor to sit for the trial of this case, must be held to be an improper order and one that calls for revision by the High Court. The case will, therefore, be referred to the High Court for orders under section 433, Criminal Procedure Code, with a recommendation that the order appointing the first assessor for the trial of this case, and all the subsequent proceedings in the case may be set aside, and that the trial may be ordered to begin de novo before a properly constituted tribunal. The case will, in the meanwhile, stand adjourned to 10th November 1911."

The Public Prosecutor, in support of the reference.

ORDER.—We accept the opinion of the Sessions Judge that the assessor referred to by him is not a proper assessor to sit in this case. The Sessions Judge should dispense with his attendance, choose another assessor in his place, and try the case de novo.

versus

GOBIND SAHAI—COMPLAINANT

—RESPONDENT.

Transfer of case—Complainant related to a friend of the Magistrate—Increasing of bail during trial—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 526.

The fact that a Magistrate is a friend of a remote relative of the complainant is not per se a ground for transferring a case to another Court.

A Magistrate is justified in increasing the amount of bail if by further proceedings the case turns out to be more serious than he first imagined.

Petition, under section 526 of the Criminal Procedure Code, for transfer of the case from the Court of the Honorary Magistrate, 1st Class, Rawalpindi, to some other Court.

Mr. Nanak, Chand, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for transfer of a criminal case brought by one Gobind Sahai against Sita Ram under sections 466, 468, 420 and 409 of the Indian Penal Code, the case being tried by Lala Ram Chand, Honorary Magistrate, 1st class, Rawalpindi, and, briefly stated, the grounds for the application are:—

(1) that the Magistrate is a friend of R. S. Kirpa Ram, Treasurer of the District;

(2) that R. S. Kirpa Ram is related to the complainant;

(3) that by his dealing with the accused in the matter of trial, the Magistrate has shown bias against the accused, and

(4) that the Magistrate as well as the friends of the complainant have put difficulties in the way of the accused obtaining sureties to go bail for him.

I have heard the arguments, and, in my opinion, there is no sufficient reason to transfer.

With regard to the first ground stated above, the Magistrate frankly admits that he is a friend of Kirpa Ram in the ordinary way in which he is a friend to many other respectable gentlemen. He also admits that on one occasion Kirpa Ram and himself and a party of gentlemen of the city went to Kashmir together. But with reference to the assertion that he stayed with Kirpa Ram at the time of Dehli Durbar, the Magistrate says that they simply had tents somewhere near each other in a public "visitor's camp."

As regards the second ground, it is now stated that the relationship between Kirpa Ram and the complainant is this, that Kirpa Ram's sister is married to one Gopal Das whose sister is married to complainant. I do not think that this relationship is very close. It seems to me that this circumstance in itself is not sufficient reason for supposing that a respectable man like Kirpa Ram would consent to try to influence a respectable Magistrate like Lala Ram Chand to do injustice simply because of the connection aforesaid. It is also noticeable that before the District Magistrate the accused person and his Counsel were unable to say what the relationship between the complainant and Kirpa Ram was, and it may also be remarked that before me complainant's Counsel, Mr. Nand, Lal says that his instructions are that there is no connection whatever between the two men.

The Magistrate has completely refuted the 3rd ground stated above. It is quite natural for the Court in the first instance, at a time when, as very often happens in such cases, the dispute turns out to be one for a Civil Court, to admit to bail at a low figure, namely, Rs. 200; but after examining the complainant at length and coming to understand the case better, the Magistrate saw that the case was more serious than he at first imagined and so very properly raised the bail to Rs. 1,000.

Again, with regard to the allegation that the Magistrate tried to compel the accused to compromise with the complainant, there is absolutely nothing on the record to support it, and the Magistrate denies the allegation in toto.

Turning to the 4th ground, the story about Mangal Sain seems to me a mere cock-and-bull story, while as regards Devi Ditta Mal, that gentleman has actually given bail for the accused, and, therefore, there is no reason whatever to suppose that the charge brought against him has anything to do with the present case at all. In the petition it is plainly stated that the complainant brought a charge against Devi Ditta Mal and this is very good instance of the reckless and extravagant statement that is often made in petitions of this kind. When Mr. Nand Lal denied that the complainant had brought that charge and when it was pointed out to Mr. Nand Lal that the Magistrate also makes a similar denial, it had to be admitted that the charge against Devi Ditta Mal under section 504 of the Indian Penal Code was brought by one Niranjan Das. This Niranjan Das is said to be a servant of one Thakar Das, whose son is said to be betrothed to the complainant's daughter. In my opinion, the above statement shows that these grounds may be wholly rejected.

Looking at the case generally, I see no reason to suppose that Lala Ram Chand will do anything more or less than his duty. If he wrongly convicts the accused, the accused always has the Appellate Court open to him.

For these reasons, I reject the application.

Petition rejected.

CRIMINAL REVISION PETITION NO. 373 OF 1911.

In re VELLAI OCHA THEVAN—ACCUSED—PETITIONER.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 411—Theft of currency notes—Possession of accused after 18 months—No presumption of guilty knowledge.

Where 18 months after a theft of currency notes, a few of them were found in the possession of the accused, and no other suspicious circumstances were found against him:

Held, that there was no presumption of guilty knowledge on his part in the absence of an explanation and consequently the fact that he had given a false explanation of his possession was not sufficient to warrant his conviction for dishonest retention of stolen property.

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Dindigul, in Criminal Appeal No. 73 of 1911, preferred against the conviction and sentence passed by the Stationary Second Class Magistrate of Dindigul, in Calendar Case No. 234 of 1911.

Mr. C. Madhavan Nair, for the Petitioner.

Mr. D. Devadoss, for the Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

ORDER.—The evidence in this case is that 18 months after a theft of 29 currency notes, each of the value of Rs. 100, four of the stolen notes were found in the possession of the accused. He did not explain the possession but denied that he had ever had the notes with him.

The question is whether, under these circumstances, the Magistrates were right in convicting him of dishonest retention of stolen property.

There is no circumstance to suggest that he was the thief and in the case of currency notes, at any rate of those not of large value, it seems to me impossible to hold that possession, a year and a half after the theft, of a few of the stolen notes is by itself evidence pointing to guilty knowledge on the part of the possessor. I do not find in the jugdment of the Courts below anything to suggest that the accused is not a person who is likely to have had dealings to the amount of Rs. 400 in a single transaction, so as to render suspicious his possession of four notes of Rs. 100, which were all stolen on the same occasion, or any other suspicious circumstance against him.

I find then no circumstances stated in the judgment of either Court below which would justify a presumption of guilty knowledge in this case in the absence of an explanation, and consequently the fact that the accused has given a false explanation of his possession is not sufficient to warrant his conviction.

I must set aside the conviction. The sentence of imprisonment has already expired. The fine must be refunded, if paid.

Conviction set aside.

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 143—Persons passing by the village of their enemies—Attack by the villagers—Revision—Power to quash conviction of persons not applying for revision—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 439, 562.

Persons by simply passing close to the village of their enemies cannot be convicted under section 143, Indian Penal Code.

The High Court has power on revision to quash the conviction of the accused who have been dealt with by an Appellate Court under section 562, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, even if the convicts have not moved the High Court to exercise that power.

Petition, under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of the order of the Sessions Judge, Rawalpindi Division, dated the 9th September 1911, affirming that of the Additional District Magistrate, exercising enhanced powers under section 30, Criminal Procedure Code, Rawalpindi, dated the 26th August 1911, convicting the petitioners.

Mr. Vaughan, for the Petitioners.

JUDGMENT.—The two Revisions Nos. 1340 and 1398 may be dealt with by one order. They cover the cases of four Brahmans, aged 40 to 70 of the village Mohra Bhattan, who have been convicted under section 143, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to six months' imprisonment, their appeal being rejected by the learned Sessions Judge. Two other men, named Natha Singh and Diwan Chand, sons of accused Prem Singh aged 70, were also convicted and similarly sentenced by the Magistrate, but in their case the Sessions Court has applied the provisions of section 562 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and they are, therefore, not included in either of the petitions for revision. At the same time, their case stands on exactly the same footing and I propose to deal with them also on revision.

It appears to me quite impossible to accept the theory upon which all these petitioners have been convicted, under section 143, Indian Penal Code. There was, no doubt, bad feeling between the Brahmans concerned and the Muhammadan residents of the village Jamat and it is possible that some dispute about a woman may be at the bottom of the trouble. The theory that the present petitioner, Ishar Das, is intriguing with this woman is, however, very improbable. His age is given by the Magistrate at different places in the record at 40 or 45, but in the judgment he is described as a rather frail old man between 50 and 60. He is present before me and certainly looks well over 50 and so far as can be ascertained from him, he has had no previous direct connection with the village Jamat and has never lived there as stated by the Magistrate. I do not overlook the fact that in his evidence he alluded to an intrigue between him and Musammat Saido, but there is great doubt whether the evidence on the point is correct and at any rate the intrigue, if there ever was one, must have been a matter of a long time ago.

The broad facts of the case which there is no getting over are, that an attack was made on the petitioners on the 7th July as they were passing the village Jamat. Ishar Das and his elder brother Gharib Singh were singled out for attack. Gharib Singh was struck once on the head and killed on the spot and Ishar Das was very severely beaten on the head, back and arms, the ulna-bone of one arm being broken. There is no evidence whatever that anyone else was injured on either side and there can hardly have been a general fight, or if there was, the resistance offered by the petitioners to it was of the feeblest description. The Magistrate has in separate cases punished certain men of Jamat, and as regards the latter the proceedings are not now before me. It appears, indeed, that the principal offender, Ditta, has not even appealed to the Sessions Judge.

The lower Courts have found that the petitioners went out of their way to pass the village Jamat with demonstrations likely to cause a breach of the peace. It is nowhere definitely explained how section 143, Indian Penal Code, is applied, but apparently it is assumed that the intention of the petitioners was to commit an offence under section 504, Indian Penal Code. A conclusive reply to this assumed version of the facts is that if the petitioners were intending to bring on a fight, they would hardly, being in comparatively small numbers, have ventured to challenge the whole village Jamat. Moreover, it is quite clear that the petitioners themselves did not fight and nothing actually happened except that some men from Jamat came out and mercilessly attacked Gharib Singh and Ishar Das without meeting with any resistance from any of the other petitioners.

Under these circumstances, I cannot follow the lower Courts. It seems certain that the attack on Gharib Singh and Ishar Das was almost entirely unprovoked and that it was a sequel to previous fighting between the villages a few days before. Even if it is assumed that the petitioners went out of their way to pass Jamat in an aggressive manner, it is quite unreasonable to jump to the conclusion, without any evidence to support it, that their intention was to begin fighting. The lower Courts appear to me to have gone out of their way in holding that any of the petitioners was actively responsible for the sudden and violent attack made upon Gharib Singh and Ishar Das. The evidence as to insult offered by the petitioners is quite untrustworthy and should be disregarded seeing that none of the Jamat men were even injured in the smallest degree. The most that can be said is that the petitioners were incautious in passing close to the village of their enemies, but to treat this as a case of wanton trespass upon the Jamat lands is to take a very exaggerated view of the petitioners' conduct.

I cannot see that any of the petitioners are seriously to blame for what actually happened, least of all the old man Ishar Das who was himself so badly hurt, and I do not think that any offence has been proved against them. Both the petitions are allowed and I also take up on revision the case of Natha Singh and Diwan Chand who were similarly convicted without real cause. All six men, namely, Ishar Das, Prem Singh, Radha Kishan, Teja Mal, Natha Singh and Diwan Chand are acquitted. Ishar Das and Prem Singh are discharged from the bail to which they have been admitted by this Court and Natha Singh and Diwan Chand are released from the security demanded of them by the lower Appellate Court, under section 562 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Radha Kishan and Teja Mal who are still in jail will be now released.

Revision allowed.

MARRI POLIAH OF CHILAMANUR—COMPLAINANT.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 447—Entry in order to assert a right on land—Criminal trespass—Intention to intimidate, etc., must be found.

An entry on land in another man's possession, solely in order to assert a right in the land, does not constitute 'criminal trespass' within section 447, Indian Penal Code. The intention to intimidate, insult or annoy, or to commit an offence must be distinctly found.

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Joint Magistrate of Gudur, in Criminal Appeal No. 2 of 1911, presented against the judgment of the Second Class Magistrate of Venkatagiri, in C. C. No. 294 of 1910.

Mr. K. P. M. Menon, for the Accused.

ORDER.—The conviction under section 447, Indian Penal Code, cannot be sustained. None of the Magistrates find that the intention of the accused in entering upon the land in dispute was to intimidate, annoy or insult the Prosecution witness No. 1 or to commit any offence. The only inference to be drawn from the facts, as disclosed in the evidence, is that the accused entered the land in order to assert the right which they claimed in the land, but that is not sufficient to bring the conduct within the definition of criminal trespass as given in section 441, Indian Penal Code. I set aside the convictions of all the accused under section 447 and also the sentences against the accused Nos. 1 to 4. The fines, if paid, by the accused Nos. 1 to 4 will be refunded to them. The conviction of the fifth accused under section 323, Indian Penal Code, is supported by evidence and will stand. But as he has been sentenced by the Joint Magistrate under sections 323 and 447, Indian Penal Code, to a fine of Rs. 15, I reduce the fine against the fifth accused to Rs. 12.

EMPEROR—PROSECUTOR—RESPONDENT.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 302, 304—Death by strangulation—Sentence.

The accused had been appointed a rakha to watch certain crops of gram. The deceased came to the field and began to steal the stuff. Thereupon the accused and the deceased quarrelled and proceeded to fight. The accused got the deceased down and strangled him to death with his hands:

Held, that the accused was guilty of an offence punishable under the 2nd part of section 304, Indian Penal Code, and that sentence of four years' rigorous imprisonment was quite sufficient to meet the ends of justice in the case.

Appeal from the order of the Sessions Judge, Gujranwala Division, at Lahore, dated the 25th July 1911, convicting the appellant.

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Broadway, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The accused, Sundar Singh, was committed for trial to the Sessions Court under section 302, Indian Penal Code, for the murder of one Kalu, chuhra. The story is a very simple one. Sundar had been appointed as a rakha to watch certain crops of gram. When he saw Kalu come there and begin to steal the stuff, he remonstrated with him, and the two quarrelled and proceeded to fight. Sundar Singh, being the stronger of the two, got Kalu down and strangled him with his hands and then went off to the village and informed the Lambardar that he had had a fight with Kalu and had injured him and that Kalu was dead or about to die.

The above is briefly the story of the prosecution. There is no doubt that Kalu did die at the time. When his body was examined later on by the Assistant Surgeon, that officer's opinion was that the cause of death was strangulation. On the left side of the neck were found marks as of fingers and the tissues underneath the skin under those marks were found bruised, while the lungs and other organs were in a condition indicating suffocation. On the right side of the neck, there was a wound half an inch deep, and it seems that a great deal of blood poured out of that wound, but it is quite clear that that wound was not the cause of death. It does not appear to have injured any vital blood vessel, and there is not the slightest reason to suppose that such an injury could have caused the death of an able-bodied man.

The accused, no doubt, denies having strangled Kalu, and there is no direct evidence on this point. Two witnesses for the prosecution alone seem to have seen the fight between the two men and all they can say is that they saw Sundar Singh throw down Kalu and get on the top of him. Nevertheless, in my opinion, that evidence given by witnesses evidently inclined to favour the accused is quite sufficient, coupled with the medical evidence, to prove the theory of the prosecution.

It is part of the case for the prosecution that the wound on the right side of the neck was probably caused after death in order to divert attention from the strangulation and to support the accused's story that in the course of his fight with Kalu, he threw Kalu down and that Kalu in falling struck his neck upon a sickle lying on the ground, but there is no need to make suppositions of this kind. What is most likely correct is that Kalu had a sickle with him for the purpose of cutting the gram which he wished to steal, and that in the struggle, somehow or other, he got wounded with that sickle.

According to the prosecution, he was at once strangled, and the learned Counsel for the accused person argues that this cannot be so because in a dead body the blood ceases very quickly to be fluid, and, therefore, upon the above supposition it would be impossible that a large quantity of blood, as has been alleged, should have been effused all over the place. But a reference to the standard works on Medical Jurisprudence shows that even in ordinary cases of death blood does not coagulate until about 4 hours after death, and see Taylor's Medical Jurisprudence, Sixth Edition, Volume I, page 622, showing that in cases of suffocation, the blood remains fluid for a very much longer time. There seems, therefore, nothing in the above objection.

One slight discrepancy in the case for the prosecution should prehaps be noticed. In the first report, the Lambardar said that the accused had told him that he had beaten him with a dang, whereas in Court there is no mention by any body of the accused having a dang at all. The Lumbardar, however, sufficiently explains this by saying that it was one Mani who suggested the idea of dang to him and that accused never said that he had used such a weapon.

I am convinced, then, that the accused really did kill Kalu intentionally and that the conviction is correct: but it is doubtful whether seven years' rigorous imprisonment is not too severe a sentence. Sundar Singh was doing his duty in preventing Kalu from stealing gram and this circumstance, coupled with the fact that Kalu, who also seems to be a man of considerable physical strength, started a desperate struggle with him, affords some slight excuse for Sundar Singh's proceeding to extremities. I, therefore, accept the appeal, uphold the conviction, and reduce the sentence to four years' rigorous imprisonment.

Appeal accepted.

NAND KISHORE—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 179—"Consequence", meaning of—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 408—Criminal breach of trust committed at the branch office of a firm—Whether the Court at the Head office of the firm can try—Jurisdiction.

The word "consequence" in section 179 of the Criminal Procedure Code means a consequence which forms a part and parcel of the offence. It does not mean a consequence which is not such a direct result of the act of the offenders as to form no part of that offence.

Babu Lal v. Ghansham Das, 5 A. L. J. 333, A. W. N. (1908) 115; 7 Cr. L. J. 394, referred to.

If an offence under section 408 is committed in a branch of a firm, the Court at the Head office of the firm has no jurisdiction to try it.

Colville v. Krishto Kishore Bose, 26 C. 746; 3 C.W.N. 598; Queen Empress v. O'Brien, 19 A. 111, referred to.

Revision against an order of the Sessions Judge of Cawnpore.

Mr. Satya Chandra Mukerjee, for the Applicant.

Mr. R. Alston, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—In this case, Nand Kishore lodged a complaint against Ganeshi Lal. The substance of the complaint is as follows:—The head office of the complainant is at Cawnpore. A branch of the firm was opened at Gauriganj, District Sultanpur, in Sambat 1964. The accused was appointed a gumashta and his share was fixed at four annas in the rupee. He worked till Sambat 1963 and was asked to come to Cawnpore. The accused seemed to have been guilty of criminal breach of trust. The complainant directed him to close the shop at Gauriganj and not to re-open it until the complainant had gone there and had checked the account. The complainant went to his home at Bhiwani in the Hissar District. When he returned in 1907, it came to his knowledge that the accused had opened the shop and misappropriated the money realized by him which he had to send to Cawnpore. A sum of about Rs. 1,583-14 6, has been misappropriated by him. When the complainant was examined, he distinctly stated that the accused misappropriated the money belonging to the branch of the Firm at Gauriganj. The Magistrate to whom the complaint was made came to the conclusion that he had no jurisdiction inasmuch as the offence appeared to have been committed in Gauriganj. In revision, the learned Judge was of opinion that the Court at Cawnpore had jurisdiction. In his order, he says: "The facts alleged constitute an even stronger case for jurisdiction in the Cownpore Courts than did the facts in a previous case, Queen Empress v. O'Brien (1) or in Colville v Kristo Kishore Bose (2). Having regard to section 179 and to the above rulings in explanation thereof, I find that the Magistrate had jurisdiction to proceed with the case." An application in revision is made to this Court and it is urged on behalf of the applicant that the order of the Joint Magistrate is right. Section 179 of the Code of Criminal Procedure runs as follows:—"When a person is accused of the commission of any offence by reason of anything which has been done and of any consequence which has ensued, such offence may be inquired into or tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction any such thing has been done or any such consequence has ensued." The word "consequence" in this section, in my opinion, means a consequence

(1) 19 A. 111.
(2) 26 C. 746; 3 C. W. N. 598.

which forms a part and parcel of the offence. It does not mean a consequence which is not such a direct result of the act of the offender as to form no part of that offence. In Babu Lal v. Ghansham Dass(3), it is remarked: "It is contended that section 179 by reason of the words contained in it, 'and of any consequence which has ensued, 'gives the Magistrate at Aligarh in this case jurisdiction. But the only reasonable interpretation which can be put upon these words is that they are intended to embrace only such consequences as modify or complete the act alleged to be an offence." The above remarks support the view I take. The loss to the principal firm at Cawnpore is, therefore, not a consequence of the act of the accused committed at the branch of the firm within the meaning of section 179, Criminal Procedure Code. In the case of Colville v. Kristo Kishore Bose (2), I find the following passage: "He seems to have thrown out in the course of his judgment, that he has no jurisdiction to take cognizance of the complaint, because the offence, if any, was committed at Shalimar within the jurisdiction of the District Magistrate of Howrah. But it appears to us that the monies having been received from the complainant's firm at Calcutta and false accounts, as stated by the complainants, having been rendered in Calcutta, the Presidency Magistrate has jurisdiction to take cognizance of the complaint in question." The above facts are very different from the facts of the case before me and the case is no authority for the proposition that if an offence under section 403 is committed in a branch of a firm, the Courts at the head office of the firm will have jurisdiction. In the case of Queen-Empress v. O'Brien(1), the facts were also different, and the loss to a branch of the firm was not held to be a loss to the principal firm at another place. For the above reasons, I hold that the Courts at Cawnpore have no jurisdiction to proceed with the case, and set aside the order of the learned Sessions Judge. Let the record be returned.

Order set aside.

Where the information given to the Police was reported to be false and the Magistrate, in consequence, ordered the Police to remove the case from their file:

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 Criminal Procedure Code, praying the High Court to revise the proceedings of the District Magistrate of Guntur, dated 30th June 1911, dismissing the petition presented to him by petitioner against the proceedings of the 2nd Class Magistrate of Bapatla, dated 30th March 1911, in Miscellaneous Case No. 5 of 1910.

ORDER.—In this case, information was given to the Village Magistrate and to the Station House Officer, and the latter referred the case as false to the Stationary Sub-Magistrate, who issued an order to the Police to remove the case from the file as a false one. In these circumstances, the sanction of the Magistrate for proceedings under section 211, Indian Penal Code, is not required by section 195, Criminal Procedure Code. [Ramasami v. Queen-Empress (1)], and, consequently, the sanction which the Sub-Magistrate has accorded, and which the District Magistrate has confirmed, is a sanction not contemplated by the Code of Criminal Procedure. Arbitration—Whole muqaddama referred—Power to arbitrator to award money or impose other conditions when asked to divide property—Duty of Court in dealing with award when fairly made.

Where parties apply to the Court to refer their muqaddama to the arbitration of a particular person, the words used in the application should not be interpreted in a narrow sense but should be taken to mean that the parties ask for the settling of all their disputes through arbitration.

Where an arbitrator divides property in a particular manner or in dividing it lays down certain directions or awards certain amounts to one party, his act is well within his jurisdiction and the Court is not competent to interfere with the award on its merits.

Where parties agree to refer their dispute to the decision of an arbitrator, they ought not be allowed to resile from the position which they took up at the time of the reference and objections which are merely technical and not objections of substance should not be allowed to prevail so as to disturb an award, which has been fairly made and which, when the real nature of the dispute between the parties is looked to, might reasonably be considered as directed to a decision on the matters which were in dispute.

Appeals against an order of the Subordinate Judge, Tahsil Biswan, Sitapur, dated 28th October 1911.

The Hon'ble Rai Sri Ram and Babu Chhote Lal, for the Appellant.

Babu Basudeo Lal, Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra and Babu Chhail Behari Lal, for the Respondents Nos. 1 & 3.

JUDGMENT.—Both these appeals arise out of a suit which was instituted in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Tahsil Biswan in the District of Sitapur by one Lal Behari Lal, a minor, in which he sued for partition and claimed that he was entitled to a third share in certain joint family property described in lists which were attached to his plaint. The three defendants in the case were his brothers, Ram Dyal and Kunj Behari Lal, defendants Nos. 1 and 2 respectively, and Musammat Sant Koer, defendant No. 3, who is the widow of the plaintiff's deceased brother one Oudh Behari Lal. It appears that the plaintiff and his two brothers (defendants) are the sons of one Maharaj Ganga Din, who died in the year 1902. At the time of Ganga Din's decease, the other brother, Oudh Behari Lal, was still alive. He is proved to have died in March or April 1908. The case which the plaintiff Lal Behari Lal set up was that the family continued joint after the decease of his father Ganga Din and that the property was still joint at the time the suit was filed; and he alleged that as his brother Oudh Bihari Lal had died, he was entitled to a one-third share in the joint property. In paragraph 4 of his plaint, Lal Behari Lal referred to a certain circumstance which was pointed to as furnishing the occasion for this suit. He stated there that in certain mutation proceedings, which were taken after the death of Oudh Behari Lal, the first defendant Ram Dyal falsely stated that there had been a partition previous to Oudh Behari Lal's death in this way, namely, that Ram Dyal and Oudh Behari Lal had separated themselves from the plaintiff and his other brother, Kunj Behari Lal, Ram Dyal and Oudh Behari ramaining joint as amongst themselves. It was further stated that in these mutation proceedings, Kunj Behari at first objected to mutation being made with respect to Oudh Behari Lal's share in the name of the defendant Ram Dyal and that these objections were afterwards withdrawn on the understanding that the property was to be entered in the name of Oudh Behari's widow, Musammat Sant Kuar. In paragraph 6 of the plaint, it was represented that the plaintiff had an apprehension that his interest would suffer if he did not apply for partition of the property and in paragraph 7 he denied that any partition had ever taken place or that if any so-called partition had been made it was not in any way binding upon him. The principal defence was set up by the first defendant, Ram Dyal. According to him, a partition was effected between the brothers in the year 1906 in which certain property, mostly moveable, was divided between the parties while as regards the immoveable property it was agreed between the parties that the income should be divided without an actual division by metes and bounds of the estate. It was further alleged that after the death of Oudh Behari in April 1908, the parties decided to divide the property which had hitherto remained joint and that for that purpose an arbitrator, one Hardeo Baksh, had been called in who had divided off the shares in all the property with the exception of certain small items. It was further stated that in pursuance of the division made by Hardeo Baksh, an award was drawn up in the shape of a partition deed but that the parties in order to avoid expense had not had the document stamped so as to make it a binding document in law. Ram Dyal alleged that the suit was a collusive one which the plaintiff had been put up to bring in order to obtain a larger share of the family property than that to which he was properly entitled. Musammat Sant Koer, the widow of Oudh Behari Lal, made common cause with the defendant Ram Dyal with whom it appears she is still living. Kunj Behari supported the case of the plaintiff. In his written statement, he explained how he came to withdraw his objections in the mutation case which was filed after the death of Oudh Behari. He stated that when Oudh Behari died, his widow was pregnant and that it was agreed between him and Ram Dyal that in the event of the widow not giving birth to a son, Ram Dyal was to pay Rs. 20,000 to Kunj Behari in order to buy off his claim against any share possessed by Oudh Behari. It is shown from the evidence that a promissory-note for Rs. 20,000 was executed by Ram Dyal in favour of Kunj Behari on the 1st September 1908. Four issues were raised on these pleadings by the Subordinate Judge, the 3rd of which related to a question of Court-fee payable on the plaint. This issue was decided as a preliminary issue in favour of the plaintiff. The three issues which remained were as follows:—

(1) Was there any partition of the joint family property in 1906 and 1908 as alleged by Ram Dyal?

(2) If so was the plaintiff not bound by that partition?

(3). Is all the property in suit joint property?

If not, how much of it is?

These issues were framed on the 13th April 1911 and on the 18th of the same month, the plaintiff by a petition asked that another issue might be framed, namely, whether the alleged partition was or was not valid, whether it was fair or whether it was prejudicial to the interest of the plaintiff. The Subordinate Judge, however, declined to frame a new issue, saying in his order on the petition that the matter then raised was already included in one of the issues which had been already framed. After this, certain evidence was produced but before the evidence was completed on either side, a petition was filed before the Subordinate Judge on the 1st September 1911 by the parties in which they stated that they agreed to refer the case to arbitration. The Subordinate Judge sanctioned the reference and the case was made over to Hardeo Baksh the arbitrator who was nominated by the parties. In due time, the arbitrator filed his award and both sides took objection, to certain items of it which are now in dispute in this appeal. One of the items with which we are now concerned related to a certain piece of property which is described as a muafi of Mouzah Raipur.

According to the award, this muafi area in Raipur was held as shankalap land by the parties. The arbitrator stated that in the partition proceedings, which he had carried out in the years 1908-1909, this area had been allotted for the support of the parties' mother. The arbitrator decided that the income of this property was to be made over to the plaintiff for his education until he should come of age in the year 1327 Fasli and that after that date, the parties were to divide the property in equal shares. The other item about which there is a dispute is a sum of Rs. 5,000, which the arbitrator declared should be paid to the plaintiff Lal Behari by the defendant Ram Dyal. The objection taken in the Court below with respect to these items was that the award was invalid as being made beyond the authority of the arbitrator. The learned Subordinate Judge upheld these objections and corrected the award accordingly. Lal Behari, who is the appellant in First Civil Appeal No. 8 of 1912, now asks this Court to hold that the order of the Subordinate Judge was wrong. It is contended in his behalf that both these items of the award should be allowed to stand and that the arbitrator had authority to deal with them. The sole question, therefore, which has to be decided in this appeal is what was the scope of the reference made to the arbitrator Hardeo Baksh. This must be determined by the language of the agreement which the parties put into Court on the 1st September 1911 and in interpreting the language of this document, it is permissible to refer to the circumstances in which the agreement came to be filed. Broadly put, the argument for the appellant is that the matter before the arbitrator was in substance the claim of Lal Behari to a one-third share in the joint family property. On the other hand, for the respondents, it is contended that the only points in difference with which the arbitrator had to deal were those which were formulated in the three issues which the Court had still left undecided at the time the reference was made. To turn now to the language of the petition for leave to refer, we find that it was stated there that the parties had agreed that the case (muqaddama) should be made over for decision to the arbitrator or Hardeo Baksh. The petition also set out that three other matters were to be referred for the arbitrator's decision, namely, (1) the promissory-note dated the 1st September 1908 for Rs. 20,000, which Ram Dyal had executed in favour of Kunj Behari Lal, (2) the disposal of the property of the mother of the parties who died in 1909, and (3) the disposal of certain debts which were said to be due to the estate by one Basant Singh and which were said to have been recovered by the defendant Ram Dyal. It was mentioned that as regards these debts, the dispnte was in this way, namely, that Ram Dyal contended that he had paid these debts to Kunj Behari. Kunj Behari, on the other hand, denied that he ever received them. The arbitrator was given authority to take evidence or not as he thought fit and he was empowered to decide the case in any way he chose. The question of costs was to be reserved for the decision of the Court. In dealing with the question of interpretation of an agreement to refer, it may, I think, be laid down as a correct proposition that such agreements should be construed as far as possible in favour of the authority of the arbitrator. The petition for leave to refer is couched in very general language and I do not think it would be proper to construe it in the narrow sense suggested on behalf of the respondents, namely, that the arbitrator was called on to decide the formal issues upon which the Court had passed no judgment. It seems to me that the expression "muqaddama", which is used in the petition, indicates that the parties were desirous of having the whole dispute settled through the intervention of Hardeo Baksh, who on a previous occasion had already been called in to arrange the division of the family property. Substantially, the case between the parties was this,—namely, that Lal Behari was claiming a one-third share of the family property, while on the other hand, Ram Dyal was contending that Lal Behari had already received his share, namely one-fourth and was not entitled to the share he was claiming. The language used in the written statement of Ram Dyal, with reference to the partition proceedings which he stated had taken place in 1908-1909, goes to show that there was at least some doubt as to whether those proceedings were valid in law for, as has already been observed, he pointed out that in order to save expense the parties had not drawn up a stamped and formally executed deed of partition. Again, it seems to me important to notice that the arbitrator was also called upon to decide with reference to the promissory note for Rs. 20,000 which Ram Dyal executed in Kunj Behari's favour on the 1st September 1903. There seems to me no doubt that this document was executed in the manner and for the reason alleged by Kunj Behari in his written statement, that is to say, Ram Dyal had agreed to buy off any claim which Kunj Behari and his minor brother Lal Behari who was living with him, might have to the property left by Oudh Behari Lal at the time of his death. It is admitted that after Oudh Behari's death, the name of his widow was entered with respect to certain share in the property and this fact is not altogether consistent with the story which Ram Dyal put forward, namely, that he and Oudh Behari were living as members of a joint family after the alleged partition in 1906. Had that been the case, the property would have come to Ram Dyal by right of survivorship. Another fact is also to be taken into consideration, namely, that the more or less formal partition which Hardeo Baksh is said to have made in the year 1908-1909 was made after and not before the death of Oudh Behari Lal. As regards the item consisting of the effects left by the mother of the parties after her decease, that, of course, could not have been dealt with in the alleged partition of 1908-09 at a time when the mother was still alive; but as regards the other item, namely, the debts due by Basant Singh to the estate, it is at least curious that the arbitrator was called to decide upon a question of this kind which one would naturally expect to have been dealt with in the proceedings said to have been taken in 1908 09. There can be no doubt whatever that Hardeo Baksh did as alleged make a partition in 1908-09. Hardeo Baksh does not refer to any partition previous to this date although he admits that Ram Dyal and his brother Oudh Behari left the family house in or about 1906 and came to live in Kamalpur. Taking into account all these circumstances, it appears to me that what was in the mind of the parties when they applied for arbitration on the 1st September 1911 was that although an attempt had been made in 1908-09 to divide the family property, that attempt had not been successful and satisfactory; and it was for this reason that the parties were willing that the whole question should be dealt with again by Hardeo Baksh who had been called in to settle the dispute on a previous occasion. With regard to the promissory note for Rs. 20,000, it is quite clear that Ram Dyal never paid off this money to Kunj Behari and his brother before the present suit was instituted although the money was already due; and it may be taken, therefore, that it was felt even by the defendant Ram Dyal that the claims of Lal Behari and his brother Kunj Behari with respect to the share of Oudh Behari had not been disposed of. I have come, therefore, to the conclusion that the contention advanced on behalf of the appellant as to the construction which should be placed upon the agreement for reference is substantially correct, that is to say, the arbitrator was to decide what share of the joint family property was to be allotted to Lal Behari and whether any proceedings by way of partition which had previously taken place had given Lal Behari the full share to which he was entitled. Adopting this construction of the agreement for reference, I hold that the Subordinate Judge was in error in laying down that with regard to the two items in dispute in this appeal, the arbitrator had exceeded the authority which was given to him by the agreement to refer. With regard to the Raipur property, the Subordinate Judge remarked that the arbitrator had not been called upon to come to any decision as to provision being made for the education of Lal Behari. That, however, appears to me to be an erroneous view of the matter. The arbitrator found that this property situated in mouzah Raipur was still undivided and his award lays down how the property is to be dealt with. He decided that the income of it should be reserved for the use of Lal Behari up to the year 1327 Fasli and after that date, the parties should divide the property in equal shares. It does not appear to me to matter in the least that the arbitrator laid down that the income of the property should be applied in a particular manner. Substantially, his decision is that the property is to belong to Lal Behari until he comes of age and that afterwards it is to be divided. I regard this as purely and simply an order for the division in a particular manner of property which was admittedly undivided at the time the reference to arbitartion was made. As regards the other item that consists of a sum of Rs. 5,000, which the arbitrator has declared that Ram Dyal shall pay to Lal Behari in order to satisfy any claim he may have as to the property, which had once stood recorded in the name of his deceased brother, Oudh Behari Lal, it may be noted here that Lal Behari himself objected to the arbitrator's decision on this point on the ground that the award purported to interfere with Lal Behari's right to make claims to Oudh Bihari's share after the death of Oudh Bihari's widow. In this Court, however, Babu Sri Ram, who appears on behalf of the appellant, has given up the objection which was taken in the Court below and has stated that his client is willing to accept the sum of Rs. 5,000 in satisfaction of any claims he may have to the property which once stood in the name of Oudh Behari Lal. I do not think the respondents can successfully contend that the award of this item was altogether outside the authority conferred upon the arbitrator. I have already pointed out that the dispute as to the rukka of Rs. 20,000, which Ram Dyal has executed in favour of Kunj Bihari, was a matter which was expressly made over to the arbitrator for decision; and it appears to me that this item of Rs. 5,000, which Ram

Dyal has been directed to pay to Lal Behari, is closely connected with this matter of the debt of Rs. 20,000 due by Ram Dyal on the promissory-note in question. As I have already stated, this promissory-note was executed in order to buy off the claims of Kunj Behari and Lal Behari against the share in the possession of their deceased brother, Oudh Behari and I have come to the conclusion that the arbitrator was really given authority to decide how the claims of Kunj Behari and Lal Behari with respect to this property should be satisfied. It is obvious that they had not been satisfied at the date when the reference was made, for it was admitted that the debt due on the promissory-note had not been paid although over-due. In cases like the present where parties have agreed to refer their dispute to the decision of an arbitrator, they should not be allowed to resile from the position which they took up at the time of the reference and objections which are merely technical and not objections of substance should not be allowed to prevail so as to disturb an award which is fairly made and which, when the real nature of the dispute between the parties is looked to, may reasonably be considered as directed to a decision on the matters which are in dispute. I hold, therefore, that the lower Court was wrong in disturbing the award made by the arbitrator Hardeo Baksh and I allow the appeal of Kunj Behari and direct that the decree of the Court below, so far as Lal Behari's case is concerned, be set aside and that there be substituted in place of it a decree in accordance with the terms of the award. Lal Behari will get the costs of this appeal from the respondents.

The other appeal with which we are concerned is No. 9 of 1912, in which the appellant is Kunj Behari who was one of the defendants in the Court below. This appeal relates exclusively to a question of costs. The question arises in this way. In the Court below, Ram Dyal put forward what purported to be a partition deed executed in 1906. This document is marked Exhibit A1. At the time the document was filed, there was no stamp on it and Ram Dyal who presented it was made to pay Rs. 445 stamp duty and a penalty of Rs. 4,450. The Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that Kunj Behari Lal was liable to pay one half of this penalty in stamp duty which had been realized from the defendant Ram Dyal and he made an order accordingly which purports to be one under section 44 of the Stamp Act. The Subordinate Judge was of opinion that Kunj Behari Lal was equally liable with Ram Dyal for payment of the stamp on this document. It is contended on behalf of Kunj Behari Lal that the order of the Court below was wrong inasmuch as it has not been proved that Kunj Behari was a party to the deed in question; and it seems quite clear that if Kunj Behari was not one of the executants of the deed, he cannot be held liable for the default in payment of stamp duty. Kunj Behari denied on oath that he was a party to the deed and there is no evidence on the record to show that as a matter of fact Kunj Behari was one of the executants. The Subordinate Judge stated in his judgment that it was not necessary to prove formal execution of this deed as against Kunj Behari. This, in my opinion, is altogether erroneous. I am not at present concerned with any question as to whether or not the deed in question was liable to pay stamp duty but unless and until it is proved that Kunj Behari was liable for a share of the stamp duty, the order of the Court below cannot be supported It was suggested on behalf of the appellant that an issue should be remitted to the Court below in order to decide the question of fact as to whether or not Kunj Behari was a party to this deed. For the respondents it is argued that this course should not be followed but it appears to me that in the circumstances, no other course is open to me. It has already been pointed out that the case was broken off in the middle in order that a reference might be made to the arbitration of Hardeo Baksh. The witnesses, whom it was intended to produce in Court, were not all summoned and it may well be that either Ram Dyal would have been able to prove that Kunj Behari was one of the executants of the document in question or on the other hand that Kunj Behari might have been able to show that he was not a party to the deed and, therefore, not liable to pay any share of the stamp duty. Under Order XLI, rule 25, I direct that the following issue be remitted for trial to the Court below, namely—

"Was Kunj Behari a party to the deed of partition (Exhibit A1) said to have been executed in the year 1906? If so, was he liable to pay a share of the stamp duty? And if so, what share of the stamp duty and penalty levied from Ram Dyal is Kunj Bihari now liable to pay?"

The lower Court will receive any evidence which the parties may desire to produce on this issue and will return its finding to this Court within three months from the date of receipt of this order of remand, 15 days, to count from the date of the lower Court's finding, will be allowed to the parties to file objections, if any, in this Court. Costs will abide the result.

Case remanded.

PICHAMMAL—APPELLANT

versus

A. PONNAMBALA BHATTER AND OTHERS —RESPONDENTS.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 92, 115—Oral evidence varying terms of document—Estoppel.

Section 92 of the Indian Evidence Act should not be read subject to section 115 of the Act.

Where, in a suit for possession of property on the basis of a sale-deed, the defendant pleaded an oral agreement whereby plaintiff had agreed to return the sale-deed to defendant and to relinquish his claim to the property:

Held, (1) that evidence of the oral agreement was inadmissible under section 92 of the Evidence Act;

(2) that, as the oral evidence itself was inadmissible, there was no question of the plaintiff being estopped from prosecuting his suit by reason of such agreement.

Kurri Veerareddi v. Kurri Bapireddi, 29 M. 336; 1 M. L. T. 153; 16 M.L.J. 395 and Jagadbanhdu Saha v. Radha Krishna Pal, 36 C. 920; 4 Ind. Cas. 414, referred to.

Second appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Tuticorin, in A. S. No. 21 of 1909, presented against the decree of the District Munsif of Srivaikuntam, in O. S. No. 629 of 1907.

Mr. P. Kundu Panikar and Hon'ble T. V. Seshagiri Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. C. S. Venkatachariar, for the 1st Respondent.

FACTS.—Suit for recovery of suit property from defendants. The plaint alleged that 1st defendant executed a sale-deed for Rs. 800, out of which plaintiff had paid him Rs. 750, and was willing to pay the balance of Rs. 50, that as 1st defendant refused to give possession to plaintiff, plaintiff filed this suit. Second defendant was impleaded as he got a subsequent sale-deed from 1st defendant with knowledge of sale to plaintiff. Third defendant was impleaded as he was the tenant in posession.

First defendant pleaded that the consideration for the sale was not paid to him and that plaintiff agreed verbally to return to him the sale-deed, on the latter paying plaintiff the value of the stamp paper. The Munsif upheld defendant's plea and dismissed the suit. On appeal, the Subordinate Judge decreed plaintiff's claim, disbelieving the plea of failure of consideration and holding the oral agreement not provable under section 92 of the Indian Evidence Act.

The 2nd defendant appealed to the High Court, which passed the following JUDGMENT.—In our opinion, the Subordinate Judge has rightly held that the defendants were precluded, by section 92 of the Indian Evidence Act, from proving the oral agreement set up by the 1st defendant, whereby the plaintiff is said to have agreed in substance to return the sale-deed, Exhibit A, and to relinquish his rights thereunder. The learned Vakil for the appellant argues that, in spite of this provision of law, the plaintiff is estopped, under section 115 of the Indian Evidence Act, from prosecuting the present suit. But, in order to set up any plea of estoppel, the party raising it must first prove the declaration, act or omissionon which it is based, and, in the present case, section 92 stands in his way. We cannot accede to the suggestion that section 92 must be read subject to section 115.

We may also observe that, to allow appellant's contention would be to run counter to the spirit of the rulings in Kurri Veerareddi v. Kurri Bapireddi (1) and Jagadbandhu Saha v. Radha Krishna Pal (2). It is true that, at the time of the alleged oral agreement, the plaintiff's document had not been registered, but it had been executed, and plaintiff had thereby acquired a right to get it registered, whenever he chose. We do not think the cases quoted can be sufficiently distinguished on this ground

RACHIMUDDIN HOWLADAR AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 104A to 104F 104J, 104H, 113—Record of Rights, final publication of—No suit brought to alter rent entered in Record of Rights—Bar of claim in excess of rent entered therein.

The meaning of section 104J of the Bengal Tenancy Act is, that unless an entry in the record of rights, settling a rent in accordance with the provisions of sections 104A to 104F, has been altered by means of a suit brought as contemplated by section 104H, the entry shall prevail.

The defendant executed a kabulyat in favour of the plaintiff agreeing to occupy 96 bighas of land at a rental of Rs. 220 and to pay for any excess land which he may be found to occupy. Subsequently, settlement proceedings were under-taken and a Record of Rights was finally published according to which the defendant then held 117 bighas of land, but the rent fixed for that area was Rs. 220. The plaintiff brought this suit for arrears of rent at the rate of Rs. 268 per annum:

Held, (1)that section 113 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was not applicable and was, therefore, no bar to the plaintiff's claim;

(2) that section 104J rendered the entry in the Record of Rights conclusive in this case and barred the plaintiff's claim beyond Rs. 220 per annum.

Ambika Charan Chakravarti v. Joy Chandra Ghosh, 4 Ind. Cas. 470; 13 C. W. N. 210, relied upon.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge of Noakhali, dated January 31st, 1910, reversing that of the Munsif of Lakhmipur, dated April 28th, 1909.

Babus Akshoy Kumar Banerji and Romesh Chandra Sen, for the Appellant.

Babu Hari Bhushan Mukherji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for the recovery of arrears of rent, and, for present purposes, the facts may be thus briefly stated.

In February 1904, the defendant executed a kabulyat in favour of the plaintiff, agreeing to occupy 96 bighas of land at a rental of Rs. 220 per annum, and further stipulating that, should he be found at any time to be occupying more land than that specified, he would be liable to pay rent for the excess land at the same rate. The defendant now holds 117 bighas of land, and the suit was brought to recover from him rent for the years 1906 and 1907 at the rate of Rs. 268 per annum.

After the execution of the kabulyat, Settlement proceedings were undertaken, and fair and equitable rents were settled under sections 104 to 104F of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, as it now stands after amendment. A Record of Rights was finally published on the 5th April 1906, and, according to it, the defendant then held 117 bighas of land, and the rent fixed for that area was Rs. 220. The lower Appellate Court has come to the conclusion that, in these circumstances, section 113 of the Tenancy Act was a bar to the recovery by the plaintiff of anything beyond the rate of Rs. 220, and it rejected the plaintiff's claim for additional rent in respect of the alleged excess area.

We are unable to agree with the learned District Judge in thinking that section 113 of the Tenancy Act bars any application. But we are of opinion that the claim was not maintainable on another ground, namely, on the ground that section 104J of the Tenancy Act renders the entry in the Record of Rights conclusive in this case.

The section just referred to provides that, subject to the provisions of section 104H, all rents settled under sectione 104A to 104F, as entered in a Record of Rights finally published under section 103A, shall be deemed to have been correctly settled and to be fair and equitable rents. It seems to us that the meaning of this is that unless an entry in the Record of Rights, settiing a rent in accordance with the provisions of sections 104A to 104F, has been altered by means of a suit brought as contemplated by section 104H, the entry shall prevail. In this instance, a suit was brought under section 104H in respect of the description of the defendant in the Record of Rights, and the description was altered from that of an occupancy-ryot to that of an under-ryot; but no attempt was made, under the provisions of section 104 to 104F, to alter the entries as to the rental and the area. The latter entries are, therefore, in the view we take of the section, conclusive, and this we may remark, was the view taken by Stephen and Doss, JJ., in Ambika Charan Chakravarti v. Joy Chandra Ghosh (1). In the result, then the suit was rightly dismissed by the Court of appeal below, and this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

SECOND CIVIL APPEALS NOS. 1451 AND 1452 OF 1910.

RAVULA VENGALA REDDI, HAVING DIED, HIS HEIR AND WIDOW, RAVULA VENGAMMA—APPELLANT

versus

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL—RESPONDENT.

Madras Revenue Recovery Act (II of 1864), s. 59—Demand by Government—Madras Irrigation Cess Act (Mad. Act VII of 1865)—Tirvajasti levied under the Act, suit for refund of—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Sch. II, Art. 16.

A mere demand by Government purporting to be made under the Madras Revenue Recovery Act will not make section 59 of the Act applicable as amounting to a proceeding under the Act.

A suit for the refund of tirvajasti, levied under the provisions of the Irrigation Cess Act, is governed by Article 16 of Schedule II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), and not by section 59 of the Madras Revenue Recovery Act.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of Nellore, in A. S. Nos. 129 of 1909 and 114 of 1909, presented against the decrees of the District Munsif of Kavali, in O. S. Nos. 1129 of 1907 and 1130 of 1907 respectively.

FACTS.—Suit to establish plaintiff's right of irrigating the plaintiff's lands with the water of the stream that flowed through plaintiff's shrotriem, to recover Rs. 101-12-8 being the amount with interest of tirvajasti collected for such irrigation of the dry land, to obtain a permanent injunction restraining the defendant for ever from levying such cess for irrigation.

Defendant pleaded, inter alia, that the suit was barred by limitation.

The Munsif held that section 59 of the Madras Revenue Recovery Act did not apply to the case, but only Article 16 of Schedule II of the Limitation Act, 1877.

On appeal, the District Judge held contra and reversed the Munsif's finding.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Mr. B. Narasimha Row, for Mr. P. Nagabhushanam, for the Appellant.

Mr J. L. Rozario, Government Pleader, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case, judgment of the lower Appellate Court must be reversed on the question of limitation. The District Judge held that section 59 of the Revenue Recovery Act applied and not Article 16 of the second Schedule of the Limitation Act.

In Second Appeals Nos. 838 and 844 of 1910 and 240 to 244 of 1911, we went into the question fully and we came to the conclusion that where there is a mere demand by the Government purporting to be made under the Revenue Recovery Act, such a demand will not makes section 59 of that Act applicable as amounting to a proceeding under the Act. The judgment of the District Judge must, therefore, be reversed on this point and that of the District Munsif restored with costs in this and the lower Appellate Court.

Presumption—Marriage—Man and woman cohabiting continuously—Recognition of children as legitimate—Presumption of marriage not to be displaced by unsatisfactory evidence of marriage held many years ago, but only by conclusive evidence.

The law presumes in favour of marriage and against concubinage when a man and woman have cohabited continuously.

It can be repelled only by conclusive evidence, and can not be displaced merely because direct evidence of the marriage which took place many years ago is not satisfactory.

The mother of the plaintiff and the father of the defendants lived as husband and wife for a long series of years. The defendants treated the plaintiff as their legitimate brother. The plaintiff's mother described herself in a document executed by her as the wife of the defendants' father who was a witness to the document:

Held, that the presumption of law was that the plaintiff's mother and the defendants' father were married lawfully, and the presumption was not repelled though the evidence of marriage which took place long ago was not satisfactory.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal on behalf of the plaintiff in a suit for declaration of title to, for recovery of possession and for partition of, property claimed by him as the property of his father inherited equally by himself along with his brothers, the two defendants. The defendants denied that the plaintiff was the legitimate son of their father. The cardinal point in the case, therefore, was, whether or not the legitimacy of the plaintiff had been established. Upon this question, the Courts below have arrived at divergent decisions. The primary Court came to the conclusion that the legitimacy of the plaintiff was established while the learned District Judge was of opinion it had not been proved to his satisfaction.

On behalf of the plaintiff, it has been contended before us that the decision of the District Judge is open to attack inasmuch as he has not considered the question from the right point of view and has overlooked well-established principles of law applicable to cases of this description.

It may be conceded that at first sight the decision of the District Judge does appear to be unassailable in second appeal, as contended on behalf of the respondent. But upon a close examination, it appears that there is considerable force in the argument for the appellant. The Court of first instance in dealing with the question referred not merely to the direct evidence of marriage but also to circumstances from which the legitimacy of the plaintiff might be inferred. The Munsif referred to the fact that according to the evidence on the side of the defendants themselves, their father and the mother of the plaintiff lived as husband and wife for a long series of years. He also relied on the fact that the defendants had treated the plaintiff as their legitimate brother, that the first defendant in particular, on the occasion of the marriage of the plaintiff in an admittedly Bairagi family, had acted as bara-karta, and that the marriage feast had taken place in his house. The first Court also laid stress on the fact that so far back as the 20th February 1893, the mother of the plaintiff asserted in a mortgage deed executed by her that she was the wife of the father of the defendants and the alleged husband attested the deed and identified her before the Registering Officer. This, in the opinion of the Court, involved an admission by the father of the defendants that the mother of the plaintiff was his wife; at any rate, it implied an acquiescence in her assertion that she was his wife. In view of all these circumstances, the Court came to the conclusion that the plaintiff was legitimate. The learned District Judge has taken the contrary view. He has not attached any weight to the circumstance that the father of the defendants and the mother of the plaintiff lived as husband and wife for many years. But, as was pointed out by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Sastry v. Sembecutty (1), the law is jealous for the honour and reputation of the home and the family and it presumes in favour of marriage and against concubinage when a man and woman have cohabited continuously. This presumption is made both for their own sake and for the sake of their children. It was further pointed out by the House of Lords, in the case of Piers v. Piers (2), that this presumption of law was not lightly to be repelled. It was not to be broken in or shaken by mere balance of probability. The ovidence for the purpose of repelling it, must be strong, distinct, satisfactory and conclusive. In our opinion, the judgment of the District Judge is open to successful attack on the ground that he has rested his conclusion upon a mere balance of probabilities. It is proved conclusively that the mother of the plaintiff and the father of the defendants lived as husband and wife for many years. And the plaintiff himself has been always recognised as their legitimate child. The presumption of law is that the parties were lawfully married and that presumption can be repelled only by "conclusive evidence", to use the language of Lord Lyndhurst in Morris v. Davies (3). The presumption is not displaced merely because the direct evidence of marriage which took place many years ago is not satisfactory. [Imambandi v. Matasuddi (4), Mouji Lal v. Chandrabati Kumari (5)].

The result is that this appeal must be allowed, the decree of the District Judge set aside and the case remanded to him in order that he may consider the case from the point of view explained in this judgment. The costs of this appeal will abide the result.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 2071 OF 1910.

April 26, 1912.

VELUCHOORI PARASANNA AND OTHERS —APPELLANTS

versus

VELUCHURI SOMU NAIDU— RESPONDENT.

Joint tenants—Relinquishment by one tenant of his share to landlord—Whether extinguishes the tenancy.

Where one of two joint tenants relinquishes his share in the demised property to the landlord, the latter is entitled to possession of the share of the releasor, the relinquishment being operative at least as to a moiety of the lands.

Quære:—Whether the relinquishment of one puts an end to the tenancy of both tenants?

Sri Rajah Simhadri Appa Rao v. Prattipati Ramayya, 29 M. 29 and Mohima Chunder Sein v. Pitambar Shaha, 9 W. R. 147, referred to.

Second appeal against the decree of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Vizagapatam, in A. S. No. 202 of 1909, presented against the decree of the District Munsif of Yellamanchili, in O. S. No. 191 of 1908.

Mr. K. V. L. Narasimham, and V. Ramesam, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. Srinivasa Aiyangar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The 2nd defendant and one Achaya were joint tenants of the plaintiff of certain lands. Achaya executed a document by which he purported to relinquish the lands in question to the plaintiff. The plaintiff sued to recover possession of the lands. The Munsif held that the relinquishment did not bind the 2nd defendant and dismissed the suit.

The Subordinate Judge held that the relinquishment was effective as regards Achaya's interest and gave the plaintiff a decree for a moiety of the lands. The plaintiff has not appealed, and consequently we have not to consider the question, whether the effect of the relinquishment by Achaya puts an end to the tenancy of both joint tenants. See Sri Raja Simhadri Appa Rao v. Prattipati Ramayya (1). The appellant asks us to restore the decree of the Munsif and dismiss the suit altogether, and referred us to Mohima Chunder Sein v. Pitambar Shaha (2). We are not prepared to do this. It seems to us that, assuming the 2nd defendant can say that the relation of landlord and tenant continued between him and the plaintiff after the relinquishment by Achaya, the 2nd defendant's interest in the demised premises did not extend to more than a moiety. This second appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Partition—Occupancy-holding—Suit for partition of occupancy-holding, if maintainable—Landlord, whether bound.

Any property held for the time being jointly can be partitioned between joint holders. Therefore, a suit for the partition of an occupancy-holding is maintainable.

But the division, unless made with the landlord's permission, would not be binding on him.

Appeal from the decree of the Sub-Judge of Pabna and Bogra, dated May 4th, 1910, confirming that of the Munsif of Pabna, dated August 14th, 1909.

Babu Shib Chandra Palit, for the Appellant.

Babu Brojo Lal Chakravarti, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant in this second appeal is admittedly the sole proprietor of the land in suit. The respondent and his brother Abhoy jointly held the land under him as occupancy-ryots. Abhoy's half share was transferred to the appellant, who, according to the respondent, thereupon proceeded to interfere with the latter's peaceful enjoyment of the property. The respondent, therefore, brought this suit against his landlord for a partition of the occupancy-holding. Both the Courts below have concurred in decreeing the suit, and the landlord has presented this second appeal.

In support of the appeal, it has been contended, in the first place, that only permanent rights in property can be partitioned, and that, as an occupancy right is not a permanent right, there can be no suit for the partition of an occupancy-holding.

As regards this, we are unaware of any authority in support of the proposition. So far as we know, any property held for the time being jointly can be partitioned between joint holders. It seems quite clear, for instance, that one of two joint lessees under a lease for a term of years might sue for a partition of the lease-hold property during the continuance of the lease. If it were not so, the position might become, as seems to be the case here, absolutely intolerable. Before the transfer of half of the joint holding in suit, the respondent might certainly have sued his brother for a partition of the holding, and his right to obtain a partition now is distinctly saved by the provisions of section 22 of the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885. We are of opinion, therefore, that there is no bar whatever on this ground to the relief sought for by the respondent.

We may add, of course, that in the case of a partition of a holding, the division, unless made with the landlord's permission, would not be binding on him and his position would be unaffected.

The next contention is that, as it has recently been held in Agarjan Bibi v. Panaullah (1) that the right of occupancy is a purely personal right and cannot be transferred, a suit for the partition of such a right is not maintainable.

Now, the decision referred to raises a question of considerable difficulty, and it is understood that it is likely to form the subject of a reference to a Full Bench, if, indeed, the reference has not already been made. It is suggested that we should await the result of such a reference; but we think it hardly necessary to do so. What the respondent has sought in this case is simply a division of the land in suit in order that he may be able to enjoy his share of it peacefully and without disturbance. We cannot, as we have already indicated, conceive that there is any legal objection to his being so relieved.

Two other points have been taken by the learned Vakil for the appellant, namely, that the lower Appellate Court has omitted to deal with the question of limitation, which was decided by the Court of first instance, and has similarly ignored a question as to the determination of the occupancy-right claimed.

It appears, however, that these points were not pressed before the lower Appellate Court; for the learned Subordinate Judge begins his judgment by remarking that "the points urged and requiring decision are whether the plaintiff has got a right to claim partition and whether he can obtain it". If the learned Subordinate Judge was inaccurate in making this statement, we think he ought to have been corrected by an application for review. We must take it here and now that these were the only points urged before him.

The result is that this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 52, 109A—Decision fixing area of holding, whether decision settling rent—Appeal, bar of—Additional rent for additional area, when landlord is entitled to.

A decision fixing the area for which the tenant must pay rent, is not a decision settling a rent from which an appeal is barred by section 109A of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Mathura Mohun Lahiri v. Uma Sundari Debi, 25 C. 34; Raj Kumar Pratap Sahay v. Ram Lal Singh, 5 C. L.J. 538 and Pirthi Chand Lal Chawdhuri v. Sheikh Bhasarat Ali, 3 Ind. Cas. 449; 13 C. W. N. 1149; 10 C. L. J. 343; 37 C. 30, relied upon.

Rameswar Singh v. Bhooneswar Jha, 4 C. L. J. 138; 33 C. 837, not followed.

If the landlord originally intended to let and the tenant intended to take such and such a piece of land, be the number of bighas in it what they may, the fact that the area proves to be larger than what was originally stated would not entitle the landlord to additional rent. If, however, he intended to let and the tenant intended to take so many bighas, be the actual piece of land what it may, the landlord would be entitled to additional rent when the tenant was proved to hold more bighas than were originally let to him.

JUDGMENT.

COXE, J.—These appeals arise out of proceedings under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and the only points that arise for decision are, firstly, whether an appeal lies and secondly, whether under the circumstances of this case, the landlords-respondents are entitled to additional rent under section 52 of the Act.

The facts found appear to be as follows:—The land was measured by the landlords in 1301 but the measurement was very badly done with the somewhat unusual result that the area put down as in the occupation of each tenant was far below the real area of his holding. The rates of rent were the same then as now but, as the area was understated, the rent also was understated. Now that the land has been properly measured, the landlords claim that they are entitled to rent at the same rates on what has been found to be the real area. This view has been accepted by the Special Judge and the tenants appeal.

As to the preliminary objection that no appeal lies, I think that it is now sufficiently well settled that a decision fixing the area for which the tenant must pay rent is not a decision settling a rent from which an appeal is barred by section 109 A of the Act. This was clearly held in the case of Mathura Mohun Lahiri v. Umasundari Debi (1) under the Act before its amendment and this decision was followed after the amendment of the Act in Raj Kumar Pratap Sahay v. Ram Lal Singh (2). The opposite view was taken in Rameswar Singh v. Bhooneswar Jha (3), in which no reference was made to Mathura Mohan Lahiri v. Umasundari Debi (1). But in the Full Bench of Pirthi Chand Lal Chowdhuri v. Shiekh Basarat Ali (4), both that case and Raj Kumar Pratap Sahay v. Ram Lal Singh (2) were cited apparently with approval and I think, therefore, that the balance of authority must be regarded as in favour of the view taken in those cases and against that taken in Rameswar Singh v. Bhooneswar Jha (3).

(1) 25 C. 34.
(2) 5 C. L. J. 538.
(3) 4 C. L. J. 138, 33 C. 837.
(4) 3 Ind. Cas. 449, 13 C. W. N. 1149, 10 C. L. J. 343, 37 C. 30.

As to the second question, I think that the current of decisions is in favour of the view taken by the learned Special Judge. The question turns on the proper meaning to be attached to the words "the area for which rent has been previously paid" in section 52 of the Act. In Gouri Pattra v. Reily (5), it was held that in claiming additional rent under section 52, a landlord would have to show that the lands held by the tenants "were in excess of the lands originally let to them in consequence of some encroachment or some alluvial increment, or that the previous settlement was made on the basis of a measurement and the rates of rent as applied to the area then determined, while on a fresh measurement made by the same length of measure, it has been found that he is entitled to receive additional rent which by carelessness, or neglect or some other reason he had hitherto lost." In Rajendra Lal Goswami v. Chundra Bhuson Goswami (6), it was held that the landlord has to show what the area of the tenure was when first created and that the rent originally fixed was not intended to cover the excess area. The words "the area for which rent has been previously paid" was construed as meaning "the area with reference to which the rent previously paid had been assessed or adjusted." These two decisions were followed in Ratan Lall Biswas v. Jadu Halsana (7) and in Raj Kumar Pratap Sahay v. Ram Lall Singh (2) already cited where the learned Judges say: "If it is established that the original letting was not with reference to area at all, but was a letting at a consolidated rent for lands within specified boundaries, no additional rent can be claimed, unless it is shown that the tenant is in occupation of land situated outside the boundaries prescribed. If, however, it is proved that the original rent was settled with reference to the quantity of land let out, in order to entitle the landlord to claim additional rent, he must, in the first place, prove what the original area was.....If it is found that the tenant is in occupation of a larger area according to the same measurement, the tenant would be bound to pay additional rent in respect of the excess area in his possession."

(5) 20 C. 579.
(6) 6 C. W. N. 318.
(7) 10 C. W. N. 46.

It appears to me that the whole question is one of the intention of the parties applicable to the tenancy before the final measurement. If the landlord originally intended to let and the tenant intended to take such and such a piece of land or such and such holding, be the number of bighas in it what they may, the fact that the area proves to be larger than what was originally stated would not entitle the landlord to additional rent. If, however, he intended to let and the tenant intended to take so many bighas, be the actual piece of land what it may, the landlord would be entitled to additional rent when the tenant was proved to hold more bighas than were originally let to him. No doubt, when a piece of land with definite boundaries is leased, there is plenty of authority for holding that the description of the boundaries will prevail over the statement of the area, and the landlord would in all cases have the burden of proving that the settlement was with reference to area alone. But in the present case where the learned Special Judge holds as a fact, which we cannot question in second appeal, that the former rents were adjusted according to measurement, the landlord is, in my opinion, entitled to additional rent.

The cross-appeal relates to an allowance made by the Special Judge for the inaccuracy of the former measurement. I do not quite understand how this portion of the learned Special Judge's judgment is consistent with the rest, but it relates not to the area for which rent is to be paid, but to the rent that ought to be assessed upon it. From this part of the decision, therefore, I think that no appeal lies.

The appeals and the cross-appeals are dismissed. The cross-appeals being of little importance, the respondents will be entitled to their costs.

N. CHATTERJEA, J.—I agree.

Vendor and purchaser—Condition that if any one lays claim and dispossess purchaser, purchase-money would be refunded—Attachment of property by third party in execution of decree against vendor—Claim by purchaser--Dismissal of claim—Suit for purchase-money—Cause of action.

In a sale-deed there was a condition that if in future any one would lay claim to the property and dispossess the purchaser, then the vendor would refund the purchase-money with interest. A third party attached the property in execution of a money-decree obtained against the vendor. Thereupon, the purchaser laid a claim which was dismissed. He did not bring a suit to establish his title but brought this suit against the vendor to recover the purchase-money under the proviso in the sale-deed.

Held, that the condition provided for in the deed did not arise and the suit should be dismissed.

Babu Akhil Bandhu Guha for Babu Krishna Kamal Mitra, for the Petitioners.

Babu Probodh Kumar Das, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This was a Rule calling on the opposite party to show cause why the judgment and decree of the Small Cause Court of Rangpore should not be set aside.

The plaintiff in that Court purchased a certain property from the defendant for a sum of Rs. 400. He purchased it on conditions, one of which was that if the vendor could not let the purchaser into possession of the property sold, or if in future any one would lay claim to the property and dispossess the purchaser of it, then the vendor would refund the purchase-money with interest. Whether the purchaser did or did not get into possession of the property is not certain as far as the findings in this case go. But what did happen is that a third party attached the property in execution of a money-decree obtained against the vendor. Thereupon the purchaser laid a claim which was eventually dismissed. He did not avail himself of his remedy under the law to bring a suit to establish his title to the property in question; but brought this suit in order to recover Rs. 400 under the proviso in his agreement. The lower Court, in the first place, expressed a doubt as to whether there was any consideration for the original sale. In the second place, it has been held that the condition provided for in the purchase-deed did not arise. In this, it seems to us, he was correct. The property was attached, but it does not follow that the purchaser was thereby dispossessed.

The result is that the judgment of the lower Court appears to us to be correct and this Rule is discharged with costs. We assess the hearing fee at two gold mohurs.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 85, 91—Attachment of mortgaged property by holder of a money-decree—Suit on mortgage—Decree—Attaching creditor not made party, effect of.

Where mortgaged property was attached by a person holding only a money-decree, and after attachment the mortgagee brought a suit on his mortgage and obtained a decree for sale, without impleading the attaching creditor as a party:

Held, that the order for sale obtained by the mortgagee was not binding on the attaching creditor, who was entitled to bring the property to sale under his attachment.

Second appeal against the decree of the Suborinate Judge of Ellore, in A. S. No. 384 of 1909, presented against the decree of the Principal District Munsif of Tanuku, in O. S. No. 259 of 1908.

Mr. P. Narayanamurti, for the Appellants.

Mr. P. Nagabhushanam, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case, the plaintiff is a person holding a mortgage from the 3rd defendant over some property belonging to him; the 1st and 2nd defendants obtained a money-decree against the 3rd defendant and attached the mortgaged property. After the attachment, the plaintiff instituted a suit for sale on his mortgage, but impleaded only the 3rd defendant as a party and obtained a decree for sale. The defendants Nos. 1 and 2 then made an application to bring the property to sale in pursuance of their attachment. The plaintiff then put in a claim petition stating that the 3rd defendant had no longer any saleable interest in the property as he had brought it to sale in pursuance of his mortgage decree. The claim was disallowed and he instituted the present suit for a declaration that the 1st and 2nd defendants are no longer entitled to bring the property to sale. An attaching creditor is one of the class of persons that are entitled to redeem a mortgage under section 91 of the Transfer of Property Act. A private alienation by the mortgagor after attachment would admittedly be invalid as against an attaching creditor's claims to bring the property to sale in pursuance of his attachment. Section 85 of the Transfer of Property Act requires all parties interested in the property to be made parties to a suit for sale. Section 91 recognises an attaching creditor as one who, by virtue of his interest in the property, is entitled to redeem the mortgage. There can be no doubt that the plaintiff ought to have made the attaching creditors, defendants Nos. 1 and 2, parties to his suit for sale, and, as he failed to do so, the sale is not binding on them, and they are entitled to bring the properties to sale under their attachment. The decision in Ghulam Husain v. Dina Nath (1) is in accordance with this view. The fact that there was an order for sale in that case made no difference in the rights of the attaching creditor. A mere order for sale does not increase the interest in the property which the attaching creditor has by virtue of his attachment.

The second appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Mainpuri, dated the 13th of July 1911.

Mr. Hamilton, for the Appellant.

Mr. J. N. Mukerji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in this case sued upon a registered mortgage-deed for Rs. 25, dated the 25th of July 1876, by which Bhoop Singh purported to hypothecate four plots of land, the areas of which are specified, situated in mauza Nagla Salendi. It has been found by the lower Appellate Court, and I am bound by that finding, that the name of mauza Nagala Salendi was inserted in the mortgage-deed by mistake and that the parties intended to mortgage four plots of land of corresponding areas and bearing the fields numbers specified, but situated in mauza Arazi Zabti. The heirs of Bhoop Singh sold their proprietary rights in mauza Arazi Zabti, or at any rate a share in the proprietary rights including the said rights in the plots to which this mortgage relates, to the defendant-appellant, Mr. H. B. Kinlock, under a registered deed of sale, dated the 16th of February 1910. The plaintiff came into Court without producing the original mortgage-deed, and the explanation offered in paragraph 4 of the plaint is not in itself an explanation sufficient, if believed, to entitle the plaintiff to produce secondary evidence. What the plaintiff said was that the mortgage contract was entered into by his uncle Khaman

Singh as the plaintiff's guardian, during the minority of the latter, and, therefore, the plaintiff says he has not got the mortgage-deed. This is mere trifling of the Court. The plaintiff does not say whether Khaman Singh is alive or dead, and whether he has made any attempt to obtain this title-deed from Khaman Singh or his heirs. At a time when the Courts were being flooded with more or less doubtful claims, on the basis of nasty old deeds hunted up by reason of section 31 of Act IX of 1903, I think it a little surprising that a claim like the present should have been permitted, apparently as a matter of course, to be brought upon a copy obtained from the Registration Department, without the plaintiff being required to offer, much less to prove, any adequate explanation of his inability to produce the original. In any case, I hold that Mr. Kinlock is not bound by this mortgage-deed. The land in question was conveyed to him by his vendors under a registered deed as free from all charges. The deed in suit did not contain a description of the property actually mortgaged sufficient to indentify the same. On the contrary, it contained a misleading description which did actually mislead Mr. Kinlock. There is authority for the proposition that the registration of such a document is a nullity, vide, Baij Nath Tewari v. Sheo Sahoy Bhagut (1) and Narasamma v. Subbarayudu (2), while the later Calcutta case of Joginee Mohun Chatterjee v. Bhoot Nath Ghosal (3) would be authority for the proposition that in any case the deed thus registered could not take effect as a mortgage-bond. It has been pressed upon me in argument that this mortgage-deed for Rs. 25 was not, under the law in force at the time, one the registration of which was compulsory. If it could be treated as an unregistered document, the question would arise whether it can take effect against Mr. Kinlock's deed of sale. I have no desire, however, to decide this question upon any technicality. The result of the decree of the lower Appellate Court is simply to make Mr. Kinlock the victim of a fraud perpetrated by the heirs of Bhoop Singh, and facilitated by the blunder committed when the property mortgaged was wrongly described in the deed in suit. If any person is to suffer under such circumstances, it is not the innocent purchaser. The plaintiff, even if innocent of fraud, is responsible for the blunder which made the fraud possible. I accept this appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the Court of first instance dismissing the suit. The defendant-appellant will get his costs throughout.

Appeal accepted.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 85—Mutual open and current account.

There was a contract between plaintiffs and defendants that the former should purchase grain for the latter and store it in their godown, that the defendants should pay interest on the outlay, make a deposit to cover losses and that the defendants should be entitled to any profits that were made upon the re-sale of the grain by the plaintiffs:

Held, that the transaction was a mutual open and current account and the limitation began to run at the close of the year in which the last item was entered in the account.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit to recover money. The plaintiffs allege that there was a contract between themselves and the defendants that the plaintiffs should purchase grain for the defendants and store it in their godown, that the defendants should pay interest on the outlay, make a deposit to cover losses and that the defendants should be entitled to any profits that were made upon the re-sale of the grain by the plaintiffs. The transactions between the parties commenced in the year 1902 and the last transaction was a sale on the 4th of February 1906, when there was a balance against the defendants. The suit was instituted on the 8th of February 1909. The only question argued in the appeal is whether or not the suit is barred by limitation.

The defendants contend that Article 61 applies and the suit was barred after three years from the time that the plaintiffs made the last purchase on their behalf. The plaintiffs, on the other hand, contend that Article 120 applies and that they have six years from the settlement of the accounts.

Having regard to the findings of the lower Appellate Court as to the terms of the contract between the parties, we are clearly of opinion that Article 61 does not apply. It is quite clear that the plaintiffs could not have sued the defendants until after they had re sold the grain. It seems to us that Article 85 is the Article applicable to the present case. There was an account between the parties extending over a number of years. The plaintiffs were always liable to account to the defendants for any profits that were made in the purchase and re-sale of grain and they were also liable to account for the deposit. On the other hand, the defendants were liable to the plaintiffs to pay interest on any moneys advanced by the plaintiffs and to make good any loss which might take place which was not covered by the deposit. There was, therefore, a mutual, open and current account and there was reciprocal demand between the parties. According to Article 85 of the Limitation Act, limitation begins at the close of the year in which the last item admitted or proved is entered in the account. The last item was on the 4th of February 1906; therefore, whatever year was taken the suit was well within time. Of course, if Article 85 does not apply and no other Article is applicable to the case, then the plaintiffs are entitled to fall back upon Article 120 in which case they would have six years The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

In a pre-emption suit, A. got a decree and was ordered by the Court of first instance to pay Rs. 6,800. He deposited this sum but subsequently attached Rs. 314 on account of his costs in the suit which had been awarded by the first Court. On appeal to the High Court, he was ordered to pay Rs. 10,000 and hence he deposited another sum of Rs. 3,200:

Held, that this was a proper deposit in spite of the fact that he had taken out Rs. 314 towards costs.

Execution first appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Cawnpore, dated 18th September 1911.

Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Dr. Sunder Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The pre-emptor succeeded in his suit for pre-emption. The first Court ordered him to deposit Rs. 6,800. He carried out the order of the Court. Subsequently, in execution of his own decree for costs he attached and got a sum of Rs. 314-8 out of the sum deposited by him. There was an appeal in the pre emption suit to this Court, and this Court modified the decree of the first Court by ordering the pre emptor to pay a sum of Rs. 10,000 instead of Rs. 6,800. He deposited, in compliance with the order of this Court, an extra sum of Rs. 3,200. This deposit was made in time. The judgment-debtor took objection to this deposit on the ground that it was not a compliance with the order of the High Court inasmuch as the decree-holder has taken out the sum of Rs. 314-8 out of the sum previously deposited by him. The Court below disallowed the objection. Hence this appeal. There is a series of decisions of this Court. See Ishri v. Gopal Saran (1), Balmukand v. Pancham (2), Permanand Raot v. Gobardhan Sahai (3) and Bechai Singh v. Shaminath (4). In all these cases, it has been ruled that such a deposit as was made by the pre-emptor in this case was a complete compliance with the order of the Court. Mr. Justice Tyrrell in Parmanand Raot v. Gobardhan Sahai (3), no doubt, took a different view. But we are bound to follow the other rulings of this Court with which we ourselves agree. Landlord and tenant—Trees planted in zemindar's *land with permission—Non-payment of rent—No denial of title—*Zemindar's title not extinguished.

Defendants planted trees in the plaintiff's land with his permission. They, however, paid no rent or customary dues to the plaintiff for a very long time. Non-payment was not coupled with denial of title of the plaintiff:

Held, that non payment of rent was not sufficient to extinguish the plaintiff's right as zemindar.

Second appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Ghazipur, dated 3rd July 1911.

Mr. Muhammad Ishaq Khan, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Nawab Abdul Majid, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was brought by two plaintiffs, Kedar Pandey and Shimbu Pandey, for a declaration that the trees standing on plots Nos. 446 and 573 were in the possession of the defendant subject to the proprietary rights of the plaintiffs, that the defendant was liable to deliver to the plaintiffs half of the produce as zemindari due and that the defendant had no proprietary right in the trees, that he had only the right of a person who had planted them, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to receive half of the fruit and timber from the defendant. Trees standing on a third plot were also included in the claim but so far as those trees are concerned, the claim was withdrawn in the Court of first instance.

It appears that the parties or their predecessors-in-title were co-sharers in the village in which the trees exist. A partition took place between them in the year 1857 under which two mahals were formed, one of 14 annas and the other of 2 annas. The plaintiffs are proprietors of the 14 annas mahal and the defendant owns a share in the 2-annas mahal. The two plots in question appertain to the plaintiffs' 14-annas mahal.

It has been found by the Court below that the trees were planted by the defendant's father 24 or 25 years ago. The defendant contends that he is the owner of the trees, that he never delivered any share of the produce of the trees to the plaintiffs and that the claim of the plaintiffs was time-barred. The lower Appellate Court holds that it must be presumed that the trees were planted by the defendant or his predecessor with the permission of the zemindar of the 14-annas mahal, and that they were planted subject to the customary right of the zemindars to receive one-half of the produce. This right is recognized in the wajib-ul arz of the village. The Court was further of opinion that mere non-payment of rent or non-delivery of dues for a number of years unless coupled with a denial of the plaintiffs' right could not extinguish such right, and that the claim was not time-barred. It accordingly made a decree declaring that the plaintiffs are the zemindars of the trees and entitled to receive from the defendants a half share of the produce.

The defendant has preferred this appeal and the first contention urged on his behalf by his learned Counsel is that the matter is res judicata in consequence of a decision of the Revenue Court passed on the 27th of March 1907. As to this it appears that a suit was brought by the plaintiffs against the defendant in the Revenue Court to recover the plaintiffs' share of the produce of the trees for certain years. In that case the Revenue Court held that the plaintiffs were not entitled to the amount claimed inasmuch as the defendant also was a zemindar and not a tenant. In that suit, there was no question of proprietary title to the land and no decision was given by the Revenue Court in respect of such title. Therefore, the decision relied on cannot operate as res judicata.

In view of the finding of the Court below that the trees in question were planted after the partition of 1857, it must be presumed that they were so planted by the defendant not as proprietor (because the defendant was not a proprietor in the 14 annas mahal) but as a person who did so with the leave and license of the zemindar. Therefore, under the terms of the wajib ul-arz, the defendant is liable to deliver to the plaintiffs the customary dues of the zemindars, namely, one-half of the produce. The Court below has rightly held that mere non-payment or non-delivery of such dues is not sufficient to extinguish the title of the zemindar. It has been found that this non-payment was not coupled with a denial of right and that the plaintiffs' right was not denied until the institution of the suit in which the decision of the Revenue Court referred to above was passed. The decree of the Court below is, therefore, right.

Lastly, it is contended on behalf of the appellant that Shimbhu Pandey, one of the plaintiffs to the suit, had died before the decision of the appeal by the lower Appellate Court, and that that Court ought to have declared the appeal before it to have abated so far as Shimbhu Pandey was concerned. It does not appear that it was ever brought to the notice of the Court below that Shimbhu Pandey was dead. The representatives of Shimbhu Pandey have not been made parties to this appeal under Chapter II, rule 3 of the rules of this Court, in fact Shimbhu Pandey himself who was at the time dead was described in the memorandum of appeal as a respondent. In the absence of the legal representatives of Shimbhu Pandey, it cannot be held in this appeal that he died before the decision of the appeal. It may be that he died between the date of the hearing of the appeal and that of the delivery of judgment. In that case, under Order XXII, rule 6, there would be no abatement of the appeal. It is too late, therefore, for the appellant to contend that the appeal in the Court below abated.

The result is that I dismiss the appeal with costs.

At a perfect partition, a mahal was formed in the name of a benamidar. No objection as to the title of the benamidar was taken at the time of partition by the real owner who also happened to be a co-sharer in the village:

Held, that a subsequent suit by the real owner, after the completion of the partition, for a declaration of his title was not barred by section 233 (k) of the U. P. Land Revenue Act, 1901.

Second appeal from the decision of the Additional Judge, Gorakhpur, dated 5th August 1911.

Mr. Kalindi Proshad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Parmeshwor Dyal for Mr. Iswar Saran (with him Mr. Vishnu Ram Mehta for Hon'ble Dr. Sunder Lal), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-appellant brought the suit out of which this appeal has arisen for a declaration of his title to a one-anna share of zemindari which under partition has now been declared to be a sixteen-anna mahal and a house. This property stood recorded in the names of Musammat Marjodi and Sri Govind Singh and the mahal was formed in the name of Sri Govind Singh. The plaintiff is one of the two grandsons of Raghubans Singh, who was one of the sons of Asman Singh. It is common ground that after the death of Asman Singh a partition took place, between his sons, of the four-annas share which belonged to him. The plaintiff states that he and his brother Ram Jewan Singh were joint with their father, that Ram Jewan Singh predeceased his father so that the whole property which belonged to the father passed to the plaintiff alone by right of survivorship, that he caused the name of Musammat Marjodi, the widow of Ram Jewan Singh, to be entered in the revenue papers, for her consolation that she had a daughter Musammat Sukhraji whose son was Sri Govind Singh, that Sri Govind Singh's name was entered nominally in respect of the property in question, that the plaintiff was in fact in possession and that he was solely in possession. He states that Musammat Marjodi died some three years before the institution of the suit, that Sri Govind Singh was a born leper and was, therefore, not entitled to inherit, that she had no title in respect of the property and that he had no power to mortgage it to the second defendant as he did and that the mortgage is ineffectual as against the plaintiff. The plaintiff thus bases his claim on two grounds, first, that he was originally the owner of the property and, secondly, that even if Marjodi became the owner, upon her death, it could not pass to her daughter's son by reason of his being a born leper and that he is entitled to the property. In the alternative, the plaintiff claims a decree for possession. The Court of first instance decreed the claim finding on the merits that Ram Jewan Singh predeceased his father, that the property belonged to the plaintiff and that Marjodi's name was entered merely for consolation. Upon appeal, the learned Judge did not consider the case on its merits. He was of opinion that as a partition took place in 1894, under which the property in dispute was formed into a mahal in the name of Sri Govind Singh, the present suit was not maintainable. He does not state under what ground the suit is not maintainable but he apparently refers to the provisions of section 233, clause (k). In my judgment, having regard to the circumstances of this case, that clause has no application. The suit is not one with respect to the partition or union of mahals. The plaintiff has not questioned the correctness or validity of the partition. What he asserts is that he is the person who is the owner of the mahal which was formed under the partition and that the person in whose name the mahal was formed, viz., Sri Govind Singh, was only benamidar for him. If the defendant's case is true that Ram Jewan survived his father and was separate from his brother, Musammat Marjodi, his widow, was the person entitled to his estate during her life-time. She died only three years ago. Therefore at the time of partition, she was the person entitled to the mahal which was formed by partition. Sri Govind Singh's name was clearly entered as a nominal transaction and as benamidar either for Musammat Marjodi or for the plaintiff. It is true that the plaintiff raised no objection at the time of partition but he alleges, as I have already said, that the person in whose name the mahal was formed was only a benamidar. The suit in no way affects the partition. It only raises the question whether the property which was partitioned (and according to the plaintiff was rightly partitioned) belongs to him or belongs to the defendants. The case, in my opinion, is not one to which section 111 of the Land Revenue Act could have applied and it is not barred under the provisions of section 233, clause (k) of Act III of 1901. The case, in my opinion, ought to have been tried on the merits. I accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below and remand the case to that Court under Order XLI, rule 23 of the Code of Civil Procedure, with directions to re-admit it under its original number in the register and to dispose of it on the merits. Costs here and hitherto will follow the event.

JUDGMENT.—The question raised for decision in this second appeal is, whether the plaintiff, who is the illegitimate son of one Ragavulu, born of a woman who had been previously married to another person when young and had been subsequently been in the keeping of Ragavulu after her husband's death, is entitled to inherit Ragavulu's property. The case of Annayyan v. Chinnan (1) is a direct authority against the contention of the appellant that he is entitled to inherit. It was laid down in that case that, in order that an illegitimate son may be entitled to inherit to his father, he must have been born of a woman who was never married to any one before she came under the keeping of the person whose son the claimant is. It is contended that Colebrook's Translation of the Text of Dayabhaga that the illegitimate son must be the son of an unmarried woman is not quite accurate, that the Sanskrit expression really means the son of a woman not married to the person whose son the claimant is and not "not married at all to any one", and a translation of Medathithi's Commentary on the Text of Manu laying down the rule and Gopal Chandra Sircar's Translation of the Dayabhaga Text are cited to us, the translation being "son of a woman not married to the person." No text-writer or commentator has been cited who says definitely that the fact of the previous marriage of a woman to some one else is no bar to her illegitimate son succeeding. One would have expected such a statement to be made at least by the later commentators if it was in accordance with the view entertained by them. We agree with the opinion expressed in Annayyan v. Chinnan (1) that in the absence of such a pronouncement by any authoritative Hindu writer, it is not desirable to extend the right of inheritance of illegitimate children born of a woman who had been already married to a person.

We dismiss the second appeal with costs.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought for the recovery of possession of certain lands claimed by the plaintiffs as appertaining to a mahal purchased by them at sale under the Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act of 1859. The plaintiffs having made this purchase proceeded to issue notices for the annulment of encumbrances under section 37 of the said Act, and they were unsuccessful in obtaining possession of the land and had to institute the present suit. They rested their case mainly on the thakbust map of 1865. The defendants set up the title of the owners of certain other shares in the mahal and relied on their part on certiain chittas prepared by the Government in 1843-44 when the purgana was measured.

The Court of first instance gave preference to the chittas and dismissed the suit on the strength of the evidence afforded by them. The lower Appellate Court, on the other hand, has taken a contrary view, holding that the evidence of the thakbust map is superior to that of the chittas, and it has decreed the suit.

On second appeal before us, three point have been taken by the learned Vakil for the defendant.

The first contention is that the Subordinate Judge is wrong in law in saying that the thakbust map is very good evidence to show the state of things at the time of the Permanent Settlement. It is argued that the thakbust map is evidence of the state of things in 1865, when it was prepared, and that it is not sufficient by itself to prove the state of things at the time of the Permanent Settlement. In support of this contention, reliance is placed cheifly upon Mohesh Chunder Sen v. Juggut Chunder Sen (1), but, as was pointed out by this Court in Syam Lal Sahu v. Luchman Chowdhury (2), what was held in the former was that the thakbust map by itself was not in that case sufficient evidence of title, and Norris and Beverley, JJ., who decided the later appeal, declared that they were prepared to say that in no case is the evidence of survey maps sufficient evidence of title. We are, indeed, unable to find any authority for the broad proposition stated by the learned Vakil. In Abdul Hamid Mian v. Kiran Chandra Roy (3), it was held that it was open to a Court to find on the strength of entries in a thakbust map, that the same state of things existed at the time of the Permanent Settlement, and the late Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Geidt came to the conclusion that it could not be said that a District Judge in drawing such a conclusion had committed any error of law. Again, in the recent case of Moizuddi Biswas v. Ishan Chandra Das Sarkar (4), in which most of the authorities are referred to, it was distinctly held that an entry in a thakbust map could not be said to be insufficient to entitle a Court of fact to hold that the disputed lands were really included in the estate at the time of the Permanent Settlement. We may also point out that in Syama Sunderi Dassya v. Jogobundhu Sootar (5), it was observed by Petheram, C. J., and Tottenham, J., that a thakbust map is not only evidence, but is very good evidence, as to what the boundary of a particular property was at the time of the Permanent Settlement. The finding of the learned Subordinate Judge, therefore, based upon the entries in the thakbust map, cannot be questioned before us as being based on no evidence.

The second contention raised is that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in saying that the chitta did not raise any presumption of correctness. The chittas in question were prepared by the Government as zemindar; but in this case a part of the parganna measured had escheated to the Government on account of the rebellion of the former owner, and it is suggested that the Government must, in these circumstances, be held to have measured it in its sovereign capacity. We are unable to draw any distinction between the position of the Government as owner of land which has been escheated, and its position as owner of land acquired in any other way; and it is well settled that a chitta prepared by the Government, when interested as a proprietor of the estate concerned, cannot be said to be a public document. That being so, it is impossible to say that the learned Judge was wrong in holding that no special presumption attached to these chittas.

The third contention is that there has been no finding by either of the Courts below on an important issue, namely, the 12th issue, as to whether any tanks, buildings and so forth had been made on the disputed land.

The first Court found it unnecessary to come to any decision on this issue, and the lower Appellate Court clearly omitted to do so. It is conceded by the learned Vakil for the respondent that the contention that the case must be remanded for a finding on that issue cannot be denied.

The result, therefore, is that the case will be remanded to the lower Appellate Court for a finding on the 12th issue and the disposal of the case on that finding. So far as the findings impeached before us are concerned, they are held to be conclusive.

We make no order as to costs of this appeal.

The word "price" in section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act is not restricted to money or current coin, but it includes whatever the vendor accepts as tantamount to such price.

If two persons mutually exchange two things and mutually fix the values of the exchanged things in current coin and exchange them as of equal value, they must be held to have effected sales and paid prices and not merely to have effected an exchange or barter.

A conveyance of land in consideration of moneys already due to the vendee by the vendor is either a "sale" under section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act or an "exchange" under section 118 of the said Act.

Where a usufructuary mortgagee gave up his right to possession in part of the land mortgaged and the mortgage-money due to him, and in consideration therefor, purchased orally the equity of redemption in another part of the land from the mortgagor:

Held, (1) that the transaction amounted to a 'sale' under section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act, and was invalid for want of registration;

(2) that the mortgagee continued to remain in possession only as mortgagee after the said oral sale, and that the mortgagor was entitled to redeem the property within the statutory period;

(3) that the mortgagee could not assert a title by adverse possession as from the date of the oral sale;

(4) that Article 144 of Schedule II of the Limitation Act could not be invoked by the mortgagee if the mortgagor was not barred by Article 148 from redeeming and recovering possession of the mortgaged property;

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, J.—I think the transaction alleged in this case to have taken place in 1892 may properly be held to be an exchange of property within the meaning of section 118 of the Transfer of Property Act if it is not a sale. By it, the mortgagee gave up his right to possession in part of the land mortgaged and the mortgage-money due to him and received the equity of redemption in another part of the land. Even if this transaction was made by way of a compromise of disputes, it is not suggested that it amounted merely to an acknowledgment or adjustment of existing rights and the operations amounted, I think, to transfers of ownership in immoveable property. The arrangement was, therefore, invalid for want of a registered instrument and could not affect the title.

It is, however, contended that it may be proved as showing the intention of the parties to discharge this mortgage, at that time, and so, as showing change in the nature of the mortgagee's possession, after the date of the arrangement, so as to make it adverse to the mortgagor. The intention to discharge the mortgage involves the intention to make certain transfers and it is impossible to say that if those transfers failed, both parties nevertheless intended to discharge the mortgage. The mortgagor, therefore, had sixty years for his suit under Article 148 of the second Schedule of the Limitation Act, and he has come within that time.

The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

SADASIVA Iyer, J.—I entirely agree in the conclusion of my learned brother and in the reasons given by him for the said conclusion. But out of respect for the strenuous arguments advanced with great acuteness by the appellant's learned Vakil, I have thought it not improper to pronounce a judgment in my own words.

(2) The facts and pleadings necessary to understand the contentions on both sides are shortly as follows:—Plaintiff sues for redemption of the plaint A Schedule lands alone, though both A and B Schedule lands were usufructuarily mortgagad in 1885 by a registered instrument for Rs. 380½. The plaintiff's allegation is that the B. Schedule lands were redeemed in 1893 by a payment of Rs. 200 and hence only A Schedule land remained to be redeemed on payment of the balance of Rs. 180½. The contesting defendants (who represent the original mortgagee) pleaded (a) that the A Schedule properties were "orally sold" to the mortgagee in consideration of Rs. 1,600 due to the mortgagee under the mortgage document of 1885 and some other documents (the written statement itself using the word "sold"), (b) that thus the mortgage document of 1885 was discharged and the mortgagee became full owner of the A Schedule properties by the oral sale, while the mortgagor got back the B Schedule property free of the mortgage charge and, (c) that as the mortgagee and his assignees have been enjoying the A Schedule lands as owners by adverse possession from 1892, for more than 12 years before suit, they have got a good title by prescription under Article 144 of the second Schedule of Limitation Act.

(3) The lower Appellate Court held that the mortgage contract created by registered document of 1885 could not be rescinded by the alleged oral agreement or sale of 1892, and that under section 92 of the Indian Evidence Act, oral evidence was inadmissible to prove any such agreement. On this ground, the lower Appellate Court confirmed the Munsif's decree, allowing in plaintiff's favour the redemption of the A Schedule lands. The defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 are the special appellants before us.

(4) The contentions of the appellants' learned Vakil were as follows:— (a) The oral sale of 1893 in respect of the A Schedule lands set up by the appellants does not come under the definition of "sale" or "exchange" in the Transfer of Property Act, it is a peculiar "transfer" of property not covered by the Transfer of Property Act, section 54, and such a transfer could be effected by oral agreement and does not require a registered instrument to effect it, though the consideration for such a transfer and the value of the transferred property (roughly) have been Rs. 1,600. (b) Even if the oral sale of 1892 is invalid to transfer the title to the A Schedule properties to the mortgagee, it operated as a discharge of the mortgage-debt of 1885 charged on both A and B Schedule properties. Hence the mortgagee's possession of the A Schedule properties ceased from 1892 to be the possession of a mortgagee and became the possession of a trespasser, more than 12 years' possession before suit as trespasser has conferred full title as owner on the mortgagee, and his assignees. (c) Oral evidence can be given, notwithstanding section 92 of the Evidedce Act, to prove that the allegation of the mortgagor to pay money under the mortgage has been discharged; such oral evidence need not be restricted to the evidence of the payment of money or its equivalent in moveables or choses in action or other personal property. Oral evidence can be given of an invalid sale, (invalid for want of a registered written instrument evidencing it), and such invalid sale could validly operate as a discharge of the mortgage deed, though ineffectual to transfer title.

(5) As regard contention (a): I think it very improbable that the Legislature, when enacting by the Transfer of Property Act that a registered instrument is indispensable in the case of a transfer of land by sale (section 54), transfer of land by exchange (118), transfer of land by gift (123), transfer of interests in land by way of lease (section 107), and transfer of interests in land by way of mortgage (section 59), where the interests transferred in any of these modes is a substantial interest, could have intended to exclude any transfers by act of parties of an interest in immoveable property of over Rs. 100 in value from the necessity of being evidenced by a registered instrument, or could have intended to allow such transfer to be effected by oral agreement or by other than a registered instrument. I have very little doubt that all such transfers inter vivos were intended to be included in the one or other of the transactions coming under the heads of "sale" (Chapter III), "mortgage" (Chapter IV) "lease" (Chapter V) "exchange" (Chapter VI), and "gifts" (Chapter VII). Any "transfers" made in the way of creation of trusts were provided for in the Trusts Act, section 5, which says "no trust in relation to immoveable property is valid unless declared by a non-testamentary instrument in writing registered". Section 9 of Act IV of 1882 allowing "transfer of property" without writing except where a writing is expressly required by law does not weaken to any appreciable degree the patent conclusion derivable from a study of the Transfer of Property Act as a whole that the Legislature was very anxious that all important transfers of landed property and even transfers of choses in action (section 130) and transfers of intangible rights (section 54) should be evidenced by registered instruments so as to prevent litigants from letting in oral evidence as to alleged transfers about the truth or falsehood of which oral evidence, it is almost impossible for Courts to come to a satisfactory conclusion in most cases.

(b) So far as transfers of land by conveyance (that is, excluding transfers by mortgages and leases) are concerned, I think that if they are not settlements or declarations of trusts, they were intended by the Legislature to come within one of the headings "sale", "exchange" or "gift" in the Transfer of Property Act. "Sale" is defined in section 54 as a transfer of ownership in exchange for a price paid or promised or partly paid and partly promised etc.

The appellants' Vakil ingeniously argued that "price" means tangible money in current coin, it may be currency notes and does not mean any other valuable consideration. Thus, according to this contention, if I sell my land to another in satisfaction of Rs. 300 which I owe to him on a pro-note, the transaction is not a "sale" within the definition of the Transfer of Property Act, because I did not receive nor was I promised in future any current coin as "price". Of course, in ordinary parlance, it is undoubtedly a "sale" and in this very case the appellants in their statements talked of the oral sale of 1893, in consideration of moneys not paid or promised at time of sale, but of moneys due on prior debts. However, I find in Bouvier's Law Dictionary that the word "price" signifies that "it consists in money to be paid down or at a future time; for, if it be anything else, it will no longer be a price, nor the contract a sale but exchange or barter" and Shepherd, J., in his commentary on the Transfer of Property Act, says "price" includes money. The startling result of this technical view is that many so-called sales of land, where the consideration is the satisfaction of old debts due to the vendee as creditor, are not 'sales' at all under the Transfer of Property Act. Pushing the matter further, suppose the purchaser hands over Government promissory-notes or a cheque on a Government Bank or on the bank in which both parties have invested their money or currency notes instead of money, can it be said he does not pay "price" for his purchase? I do not think that such was the intention of the Legislature by the mere use of the word "price", if the price is fixed in the conveyance in current coin. I think that the words "price paid" will cover cases where the vendor's claim for the receipt of the price is satisfied by giving him what he accepts as tantamount to such payment. For instance if he says in effect: "Here I owe you three hundred rupees under pro-note and you now owe me three hundred rupees as the price of the land I sell: why should we go through the farce of your paying me Rs. 300 in current coin for the purchase-money and my handing it back to you to re-pay your promisory-note debt?" We shall take it that both processes have taken place. I think that in such a case, we must take it that the price was paid and the transaction is a sale though no coins were actually paid by the purchaser. If two persons mutually exchange two things (neither of which is money only) it may be an exchange or barter and not a sale. But if they mutually fix the values of the exchanged things in current coin and exchange them as of equal value, I think they might be held to effect "sales" and to pay prices and not merely to effect an exchange or barter.

(6) Even if I am wrong in holding that a conveyance of land in consideration of the moneys already due to the vendee by the vendor does come under the definition of "sale" in section 54 of Act IV of 1882, I think such transactions ought to be brought under the definition of exchange under section 118 of Act IV of 1882 which makes all the provisions as to the mode of effecting transfer of land by sale, applicable to transfers of land by exchange also. 'Exchange", according to the definition in section 118, is a mutual transfer of ownership of things neither of which is money only. It seems to me that if a conveyance of land for a debt due by the vendor to the vendee is not a sale, it is clearly an exchange as the debtor vendor transfers his ownership in land (which is not "money" and a fortiori not money only) while the vendee transfers the ownership in his chose in action (the debt due by the vendor) to the debtor vendor so as to merge and extinguish the debt, the debtor and creditor becoming the same individual by the transfer of the debt to the debtor himself. Here also the chose in action so transferred in its turn is not money only. It is argued that the vendee creditor does not transfer his rights as creditor to the vendor debtor, but only treats the debt as discharged. This seems to be merely a play upon words, for the debt is relinquished in favour of the debtor, and the substance of the transaction is a transfer of the debt to the debtor. In fact, where a testator relinquishes by his Will a debt in favour of the debtor, it is appropriately styled a gift by way of legacy of the debt to the debtor and where a mortgagee relinquishes his mortgage debt he frequently does it by executing a reconveyance of the mortgage interests created under the mortgage deed to the mortgagor.

If such transfers of land do not come under either the head of "sale" or "exchange", the extraordinary result would be that a conveyance of land worth even a lakh of rupees can be legally effected by oral agreement if the purchaser hands the money a few days before the oral conveyance and relinquishes his debt a few days afterwards as consideration for the oral conveyance. I refuse to believe that such a result could have ever been dreamt by the Legislature. I have no doubt that all conveyances of ownership right in lands were intended to be brought under "sales" or "gifts" or "exchanges" and that a conveyance for a lakh of rupees due on a pro-note to the vendee was not intended to be excluded from the necessity of being evidenced by a registered instrument.

(7) Reliance is placed by the appellant's learned Vakil on a case decided by this High Court but not reported in any authorized reports. It is found in Thiruvengidachariar v. Ranganatha (1), where it was held that when two brothers orally gave their lands to their sister in satisfaction of some claim of hers against them, the transaction was not a gift nor an exchange nor a sale under the Transfer of Property Act. With the greatest respect, I am clear in my mind that it was either a sale or a mutual "exchange" of two things neither of which was money only and I am, therefore, not prepared to follow this case. I know that where a compromise is not intended to create or effect merely a transfer of title but is only an acknowledgment of existing rights in lands, it is not a sale or exchange [see Krishna Tanhaji v. Aba Shetti Patil (2)] and need not comply with the provisions of section 54 of Act IV of 1882 in order to be treated as valid. But neither the present case nor that in Thiruvengidachariar v. Ranganatha (1) is such a case of compromise. I, therefore, overrule the appellants' contention that a registered writing was not necessary to validate the alleged sale of 1892. I might here be permitted to express the wish that the British Indian Legislature would pass an enactment making a registered writing indispensable for the validity of all settlements, partition, agreements and Wills and authorities to adopt throughout British India, making very few exceptions in special cases (such as Soldiers' and Sailors' Will). So that the flood of intricate and uncertain litigations on such questions might be brought within bounds, and the perjury in connection with Wills executed out of the Presidency towns and with partitions and adoptions might be put down to some extent.

(8) The next contention of the appellants' Vakil based on the Limitation Act is not sustainable, as, if the original mortgagee continued to hold possession as mortgagee, owing to the alleged sale of 1893 being invalid and ineffective to convey to him, the ownership in the equity of redemption in the A Schedule properties, he cannot, by merely asserting possession as owner under the invalid sale convert his possession as mortgagee into possession as owner, even granting that the mortgagor knew and acquiesced in his assertion. The cases in Byari v. Puttanna (3), Ramunni v. Kerala Verma Vilia Raja (4), Bhagvant Govind v. Kondi Valad Mahadu (5), Khairaj Mal v. Daim (6), clearly lay down that Article 144 cannot be invoked in favour of the mortgagee if the mortgagor is not barred by Article 148 from redeeming and recovering possession of the mortgaged property.

(9) The last contention about the inadmissibility of oral evidence to prove the alleged discharge of mortgage of 1885 might be disposed of shortly. A mortgage might, even if created by a registered instrument, be proved to have been extinguished by letting in admissible evidence (including oral evidence) of payment of the mortgage amount or by letting in admissible evidence of any other transaction which operates as a mode of payment [see Chamiru Shaha v. Soni Koer (7).] It has been similarly held, in Kattika Bapanamma v. Kattika Kristnamma (8), that while a subsequent oral agreement to modify the terms of a registered maintenance deed cannot be proved, the fact that in particular years the obligee was in possession of certain lands of the obligor and paid herself the maintenance amount out of the profits of the lands can be proved; [see also Karampalli Unni v. Thekku Vittil (9); Goseti Subba Row v. Varigonda Narasimham (10).] Here the defendants do not seek to prove that by the payment of any money or by the receipt by the mortgagee of profits of other lands of the mortgagor, the claim of the mortgagee was paid up and thus the mortgage was extinguished, but they wished to prove an invalid oral conveyance (of which evidence is legally inadmissible) of the equity of redemption in a portion of the mortgaged property as having had the effect of the payment of the mortgage money. Oral evidence to prove a conveyance as equivalent to payment of money has not been allowed in any of the cases cited and could not be allowed. Receipt of mesne profits by possession of lands and receipt of moneys can be proved by oral evidence, but not an oral sale of lands worth more than Rs. 100, nor can such oral sale be taken as equivalent to the payment of the value of the lands invalidly sold.

(10) In the result, the second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff-respondent against the defendants-appellants for possession by pre-emption of the land in dispute which had been sold by one Musammat Bhagwan Devi to the defendants for Rs. 7,000 by a registered deed, dated the 28th May 1908. The Subordinate Judge passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff conditional on his paying the full amount of the purchase-money, Rs 7,000, to the defendants-vendees within a certain time. On appeal, the Divisional Judge held that the price of the land had not been paid and fixed in good faith, and he remanded the case for further inquiry and report on the question of the market-value of the land sold. On receipt of a return to the order of remand, the learned Judge held that the market-value of the land was Rs. 5,300; and he accordingly varied the decree of the Subordinate Judge by reducing the amount payable by the plaintiff to the vendees to that figure.

The vendees have preferred a further appeal to this Court and the case has been fully argued on both sides. The learned Pleader for the plaintiff-respondent has urged as a preliminary objection that since the vendees have drawn out Rs. 5,300 which had been deposited in Court by his client in pursuance of the decree passed by the Divisional Judge, they are precluded from proceeding with their appeal; and in support of this contention he has cited an unpublished decision of this Court Feroze ud-din v. Ghulam Rasul (1). As pointed out in the judgment of this Court in Sundar Dass v. Dhanpat Rai (2), the case cited is clearly distinguishable upon its peculiar facts from the case like the present, and we need say here no more than that we accept as a general proposition the law as propounded in the published case just mentioned. The preliminary objection is, therefore, overruled.

The questions for decision in this appeal are,—

(1) Whether the appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge lay to the Divisional Court or to this Court;

(2) whether the price entered in the sale-deed, namely, Rs. 7,000, was paid and fixed in good faith, and

(3) whether, if the price was not paid and fixed in good faith, the market-value of the land sold is Rs. 5,300, as held by the Divisional Judge or Rs. 7,000, as found by the Court of first instance.

As regards the first question, it has been contended by the appellants' Pleader that as the Subordinate Judge had passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff-respondent for possession of the land in dispute on payment of Rs. 7,000, the value of the subject-matter of the suit must be held for purposes of jurisdiction to have been Rs. 7,000, and, therefore, the appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge lay to this Court and not to the Divisional Court. In support of this contention, he has cited the Full Bench ruling of this Court, Muhammad Afzal Khan v. Nand Lal (3). The case cited does not, however, deal with the point now before us or lay down the proposition of law contended for by the appellants' Pleader. It was a pre-emption suit instituted in the Court of a Munsif of the first class for recovery of possession of agricultural land. Its value for purposes of jurisdiction, as laid down by the rules in force under the Suits Valuation Act, was Rs. 644. The Munsif, whose jurisdiction was limited to Rs. 1,000, passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff on payment of Rs. 4,098. With reference to an objection that the Munsif had no jurisdiction to pass a decree for possession of land conditional on payment of the said amount, it was held by a Full Bench of this Court that as the sum fixed by the Court to be payable as the actual value of the land in suit was in excess of the pecuniary limits of the Munsif's jurisdiction, he was not competent to pass a decree in the case but should have returned the plaint for presentation to a Court having jurisdiction to pass such a decree. The Full Bench did not consider and decide the question now before us, namely, whether in a pre-emption suit relating to land of which the value for purposes of jurisdiction is, under the Suits Valuation Act, less than Rs. 5,000, but in which a decree has been passed by the Court of first instance on payment of more than Rs. 5,000, the appeal from that decree lies to the Divisional Court or to this Court. The sole question before the Full Bench, which it was called upon to decide and which it did actually decide, was whether in a pre-emption suit relating to land of which the value was less than Rs. 1,000, the Court of first instance, which was that of Munsif of the first class with pecuniary jurisdiction up to Rs. 1,000, had power to pass a decree for possession of that land on payment of more than Rs. 1,000, and that question was answered by the Full Bench in the negative.

With reference to certain observations made by the learned Chief Judge in the course of his judgment in the above mentioned case at pages 92 and 93 of the report, the appellants' Pleader has argued that the value of the present suit which, according to the rules framed under the Suits Valuation Act, was Rs. 1,132-6, was merely a tentative value; that as soon as the Subordinate Judge found that the actual value of the land in dispute was Rs. 7,000, and granted the plaintiff-respondent a decree for possession thereof on payment of Rs. 7,000, the real value of the suit became Rs. 7,000 and that that amount must be considered as the value of the subject-matter of the suit for purposes of jurisdiction and of appeal subsequent to the passing of the decree by the Subordinate Judge. In this connection, he has also relied on the decision of this Court in Maman Mal v. Abdul Aziz (4). In the passage cited to us from his judgment, the learned Chief Judge did not, in our opinion, intend to deal with the question of appeal under section 39 of the Punjab Courts Act or to lay down that the value of the pre-emption suit, which was being dealt with by the Full Bench, as fixed by the rules in force under the Suits Valuation Act, was, for the purposes of that section, a fluctuating one, and that it was increased to Rs. 5,000, as soon as the Munsif held that the amount payable by the pre-emptor to the vendee was Rs. 5,000 which represented the actual market-value of the land All that was actually held was that the value of the suit might well in such cases differ from the actual value of the land in dispute and that the Munsif had no jurisdiction to pass a decree in favour of the pre-emptor on payment of Rs. 5,000 on the general principle of law that a Court cannot pass a decree for payment of a sum beyond the pecuniary limits of its jurisdiction. As observed by another member of the Full Bench, if the actual value of the land, of which possession is claimed by the pre-emptor, "is found by the Court to exceed the value as fixed in the first instance for jurisdictional purposes by the rules, the Court's jurisdiction to grant a decree will depend on whether the amount so found does nor does not exceed the limit of the Court's pecuniary jurisdiction." We consider that the decision of the Full Bench in the case cited must be held to be limited to the actual point before it; and any observations made by any of the learned Judges who were members of it, which were not essential to the determination of the question referred, must be treated as obiter dicta.

(1) C. A. No. 695 of 1905.

Maman Mal v. Abdul Aziz (4), relied on by the appellants' Pleader, is not in point. That was a suit for dissolution and winding-up of a partnership, rendition of accounts by the defendants and a decree for such sums as the plaintiff might be found entitled to against the proper parties. The plaintiffs valued their suit approximately at Rs. 2,000 but added the usual clause that they would pay the additional court-fee if more was found due. The District Judge passed a decree in favour of the plaintiffs for Rs. 6,410. The defendants appealed to the Divisional Judge who modified the decree. On further appeal to this Court, it was contended that the Divisional Judge had no jurisdiction to hear the appeal; and it was held by this Court that the contention was correct, inasmuch as the value of the suit, which means the value of the subject-matter of the suit, was in that case more than Rs. 5,000 and, therefore, the appeal lay to this Court and not to the Divisional Court. In the course of his judgment, Chatterji J., said:—"Now the plaintiff valued his plaint at Rs. 2,000 but stated that he would make up court-fees for any higher sum found to be due by the Court. The Court found Rs. 6,410-14-1½ due from the defendants, but ordered Court-fees to be levied on Rs. 5,332-13-1½ only. Does not this finding affect the valuation originally fixed by the plaintiff for his suit which he expressly stated was a tentative one? This appears to be the view taken by the Bombay High Court in Ibrahimji Issaji v. Bejanji Jamsedji (5) * * * Section 8 of the Suits Valuation Act makes the jurisdictional value and the value for Court-fee the same in this class of cases, and section 11 of the Court Fees Act allows the stamp to be made up afterwards. The two sections read together allow the plaintiff to put a tentative valuation on his claim and file the required amount of Court-fees when a higher sum is found due. Thus the payment of Court-fees on Rs. 2,000 is no final test of the value of the suit, as section 8 of the Suits Valuation Act, standing by itself, would possibly lead one to conclude." Again, at page 221, the learned Judge observed: "It is to be borne in mind that the value in suits of the present description is allowed by law to be a fluctuating one, a definite sum being stated in the plaint as a starting point for inquiry, and is finally fixed when the Court passes its decree."

(5) 20 B. 265.

It will appear from the above passages that the case cited, which was one for dissolution of partnership and rendition of accounts, and which, as regards valuation for purposes of jurisdiction and Court-fee, belongs to a class of suits covered by section 8 of the Suits Valuation Act and section 11 of the Court Fees Act, has no bearing on the present case so far as its jurisdictional value is concerned. In a pre-emption suit relating to revenue paying agricultural land in this Province, the value of the subject-matter of the suit for purposes of jurisdiction is fixed by the rules framed under section 3 of the Suits Valuation Act at thirty times the land revenue, and it is fixed once and for all. The valuation of the suit is also definitely fixed for purposes of Court-fees by section 7, paragraphs V and VI, of Act VII of 1870 at five times the revenue. The plaintiff in such a suit is, therefore, precluded by law from putting a tentative value on his suit either for purposes of Court-fees or for purposes of jurisdiction, the valuation of the suit for these purposes being beyond his power. On the other hand, in a suit for accounts the plaintiff is expressly allowed by law to fix the amount at which he values the relief sought, and that amount in the first instance determines the value of the suit for purposes of Court-fees and also for purposes of jurisdiction (section 7 paragraph IV of Act VII of 1870 and section 8 of Act VII of 1887), such valuation being liable to be altered on the Court holding that a larger amount than that claimed by the plaintiff is really due to him. The first valuation of the suit, which depends upon the approximate amount which the plaintiff originally claims, is not a fixed one; it is fixed, both for purposes of jurisdiction and for purposes of Court-fees, so far as the first Court is concerned, only when that Court holds a certain definite sum to be due to the plaintiff; and as that sum finally determines the value of the suit in the first Court, it also determines it for the purposes of the appeal from the decree of that Court In a pre-emption suit such as the present, these considerations have no application at all. The value of the suit, both for purposes of jurisdiction and of Court-fees, is fixed once and for all by the rules framed under the Suits Valuation Act and by the Court Fees Act, and although, according to the Full Bench decision, Muhammad Afzal Khan v. Nand Lal (3), the decree which has been passed in this case by the Sub-Judge could not have been passed except by a Court having jurisdiction to pass a decree for more than Rs. 5,000, the value of the suit for purposes of jurisdiction, so far as section 39 of the Punjab Courts Act is concerned, notwithstanding the decree so passed, remained throughout thirty times the land revenue, which is Rs. 1,132-0-6, and, the value for purposes of Court-fees also remained five times the revenue. We hold, therefore, that even after the Sub-Judge passed his decree, the value of the suit before us was less than Rs. 5,000 and it follows that under section 39 (c) of the Punjab Courts Act, the appeal from that decree lay to the Divisional Court and not to this Court.

[Their Lordships, after discussing the evidence on the second question, concluded as follows:]

As a result of the above findings, we agree with the Sub-Judge in holding that the price entered in the sale-deed, Rs. 7,000 was paid and fixed in good faith; and it, therefore, becomes unnecessary to consider and decide the question of the market-value of the land. We accept this appeal and modify the decree of the lower Appellate Court so far as to increase the amount payable by the plaintiff-respondent, Thakar Singh, to the defendants-appellants from Rs. 5,300 to Rs. 7,000. The plaintiff-respondent has already paid into Court the sum of Rs. 5,300 and we direct him to pay into Court the balance, Rs. 1,700 on or before the 1st July 1912, failing which his suit shall stand dismissed with costs throughout. If the said amount is duly deposited on or before the said date, the parties shall bear their own costs throughout this litigation.

Decree modified.

HARA SUNDARI DEBYA—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Hindu Law—Female heir—Suit for rent accrued due after death of full owner—Decree against female heir—Sale of property—Purchaser, what passes to—Suit for contribution against female heir—Decree and sale—Title of purchaser, absolute or not.

Where a suit for rent in respect of a tenure against a Hindu female heir is brought in respect of arrears, which have accrued due after the death of the last full owner and while she was in enjoyment of the tenure, the liability for rent should be regarded as her personal liability, and ought not to be held to attach to the reversion, unless and until the landlord proceed to bring the tenure itself to sale under the special provisions of the Rent Law.

Braja Lal Sen v. Jiban Krishna Roy, 26 C. 285 and the same case on appeal, Jiban Krishna Roy v. Brojo Lal Sen, 30 C. 550; 5 Bom. L. R. 428; 30 I. A. 81, followed.

Although the original liability is one for arrears of rent, to liquidate which the entire tenure might have been sold, yet a decree for contribution against a Hindu female heir arising directly therefrom cannot be held to have had the same effect and the sale under it passes the limited interest of the female and not the tenure.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge of Mymensingh, dated August 13th, 1909, affirming that of the Sub-Judge of that place, dated November 30th, 1908.

Babus Dwarka Nath Chakravarti, and Tarak Chandra Chakravarti, for the Appellant.

Babus Mohendra Nath Roy and Manmotha Nath Roy, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The respondent in this second appeal sued as being the reversionary heir of her father after the death in 1898 of her widowed mother, Jagodeshwari Debya, for a declaration of her title to, and the recovery of possession of, a share in shikmi taluq. It appears that in 1873 a decree for rent of the taluq was obtained against Jagodeshwari and her co-sharers. The latter satisfied the claim, brought a suit for contribution against Jagodeshwari and were given a decree, in execution of which a share of the taluq was sold and purchased on the 20th May 1876 by the appellant, a Mahomedan. Both the Courts below have decreed the plaintiff-respondent's suit, and this appeal is preferred by the defendant.

The first of the only two points raised on the appellant's behalf is as to the refusal of the Court of first instance to grant the appellant an adjournment and direct the issue of a commission for the examination of two ladies to prove that the respondent's father had adopted a son and that she had consequently been excluded from the inheritance.

As to this the facts are these:—The issues were first framed on the 17th August 1907, but on the 10th June 1908, an additional issue expressly raising the question of the alleged adoption was added. Witnesses were from time to time summoned, and the case was heard from the 20th to 26th November. Among the appellant's witnesses were two members of the family, called to testify to the adoption, but one of these (Arodhan) would not do more than swear that there had been some talk of an adoption, while the other (Shyam Sundar) failed to appear and no steps were taken to enforce his attendance. But on the 26th November, one Kally Kumar Chuckrabutty, a Pleader connected with the family, who had already been examined by the respondent as a witness in the case, was once more and at the last moment put into the witness-box by the appellant to declare that he had heard his mother and the respondent's sister Rashmoni say that a boy had been adopted; and no sooner was this hearsay statement extracted from him than the appellant applied for an adjournment and the issue of a commission for the examination of the two ladies. In these circumstances, the refusal to accede to the prayer, might, we think, be supported on the merits if this were a regular appeal; it is certainly not arbitrary and incapable of justification; and we are of opinion that it is not open to us, on second appeal, to interfere with the discretion exercised in the matter by the lower Courts.

The second point relates to the finding that, in the suit for contribution brought against her, Jagodeshwari did not represent her late husband's estate, and consequently the reversioners were not bound by the sale in execution of the decree in that suit. The argument, with which we are pressed, that as the original liability was one for the arrears of rent, to liquidate which the entire tenure might have been sold, the decree for contribution arising directly therefrom should be held to have had the same effect, the sale under it passing not the widow's interest merely, but the taluq. The point is not free from difficulty; but on the whole, we are disposed to think that the view taken by the Courts below is correct and should be affirmed. The authorities on the subject were discussed by this Court in Braja Lal Sen v. Jiban Krishna Roy (1) and on appeal to the Privy Council their Lordships of the Judicial Committee—see Jiban Krishna Roy v. Broio Lall Sen (2)—expressed concurrence with the view that, when a suit for rent against a Hindu daughter was brought in respect of arrears which had accrued due after her father's death and while she was in enjoyment of the property, the liability for rent should be regarded as her personal liability, and ought not to be held to attach to the reversion unless and until the landlord proceeded to bring the tenure itself to sale under the special provisions of the Rent law. It comes to this, indeed, that it does not follow that, because a liability could be made a charge on the estate, it ipso facto ceases to be a personal liability; and thus in Baijun Doobey v. Brij Bhookan Lall (3) it was held by the Privy Council, that the liability of a Hindu widow to pay maintenance to her mother-in-law, though charged on the estate, was personal to her, so that a sale in execution of a decree therefor against her passed only her interest. Here, moreover, there are further difficulties in the appellant's way; for neither the decree in the rent suit nor the decree in the action for contribution is in, and we are, therefore, in the dark, both as to whether the whole tenure could have been sold in satisfaction of the former, and as to the capacity in which the latter was obtained against Jagodeshwari. All that we have to guide us in the matter is the respondent's sale certificate, and that refers to "the property of the judgment-debtor, Jagodeshwari Debya, widow of Brojo Mohan Mahalnebo," a description which indicates the lady's interest as widow rather than the estate itself. And we cannot help observing in conclusion that the point now taken is really a new one, the nearest approach to it in the Court below being apparently the argument that the circumstances of Jagodeshwari Debya were such that the sale in execution of the decree for contribution against her must be regarded as caused by legal necesssity and, therefore, binding on the reversioners.

For all these reasons, we hold that the contentions raised fail, and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Specific performance, suit for—Claim to recover money on fulfilment of a stipulated condition—Suit of a Small Cause nature—Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), s. 15, Sch. II, cl. 15.

A suit to recover a sum of money on the fulfilment of a condition on which it was stipulated to be paid is not a suit for the specific performance of a contract so as to except it from the jurisdiction of a Small Cause Court.

Veerasalingam v. Sathapally Sathirasu, 19 M. L. J. 220; 5 M. L. T. 293; 1 Ind. Cas. 552, distinguished.

Appeal, under section 15 of the Letters Patent, against the judgment and order of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Munro, dated 12th April 1911 in C. R. P. No. 517 of 1910 (S. C. S. No. 25 of 1910 on the file of the District Court of Nellore).

Mr. V. N. Kuppa Row, for the Appellant.

Dr. S. Swaminathan, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—We do not think that this suit was a suit for specific performance of a contract. The plaintiff alleged that the defendants had undertaken to pay him Rs. 300, if he should succeed in effecting certain compromises, and that the compromises had been effected by him, and he prayed for the money. We are unable to see any ground on which this can be held to be a suit for specific performance of a contract.

It is not on all fours with the case in Veerasalingam v. Sathapally Sathirasu (1), so it is not necessary for us to consider whether we could or would not follow the decision in that case.

We allow the appeal and set aside the order of the District Judge, but, as there is now no Small Cause Court in the Nellore District competent to entertain the suit, we must order the plaint to be returned to be presented to the Court of the District Munsif having jurisdiction.

We make no order as to costs.

Appeal allowed.

Divorce Act (IV of 1869), s. 7—Desertion need not always be against the actively expressed wish of the party—Living in separate house on account of husband's adultery.

Desertion implies an abandonment against the wish of the person charging it. Such an abandonment need not be one against the actively expressed wish of the party and notwithstanding the resistance and opposition of such party.

Where owing to her husband's adultery, a wife went to live at her mother's house and agreed to receive a certain sum monthly as maintenance and where subsequently the husband got his wife to execute a deed relinquishing all her claims against him:

Held, (1) that the husband had a clear intention to abandon the wife;

(2) that such abandonment was against her wish, although she kept away from him and did not seek a return to co-habitation as long as he continued his liaison with his mistress and had her living in the house with him.

Reference made by the Divisional Judge of Tenasserim, under section 17 of the Indian Divorce Act, IV of 1869, for confirmation of the decree for dissolution of marriage on 3rd April 1911.

Messrs. Lentaigne, McDonnel and Clifton, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—The suit was brought by the wife for dissolution of her marriage on the ground of her husband's adultery coupled with desertion, without reasonable excuse for two years and upwards. The husband admitted adultery and the only matter in dispute was the alleged desertion without reasonable excuse.

Desertion in the Indian Divorce Act implies an abandonment against the wish of the person charging it. Under section 7 of the Act, the Courts have to act and give relief on principles and rules as nearly as may be conformable to the principles and rules on which the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes in England acts and gives relief.

In some cases that Court has construed abandonment against the wish of the person charging it as meaning contrary to the actively expressed wish of such party and notwithstanding the resistance and opposition of such person; see Fowle v. Fowle (1). The present case, however, does not appear to me to be one in which such rule should be applied, especially as it is not a universal rule. See Graves v. Graves (2) and Pizzala v. Pizzala (3).

The parties were married in 1898. They had co-habited previously and the plaintiff had had two children by the defendant. They lived together at Tavoy until August 1904, when the plaintiff says she was persuaded by the defendant to go to Moulmein. While there, she heard that the defendant was carrying on an illicit intercourse with a woman. She returned to Tavoy with her children towards the end of the year. In January 1905, she says he turned her out of the house, having, while she was there, gone habitually to the place where the woman with whom the defendant admits having committed adultery lived. A witness, who was an interpreter and quasi intermediary between them, says that the plaintiff was at this time willing to live apart and she accepted a sum of Rs. 300 to repair her mother's house in Tavoy and went and lived there at first. The defendant brought his mistress to live with him in his house and they have lived together continuously. According to the arrangement then made between them, the defendant was to pay her an allowance of Rs. 27, a month. This he did until some time in 1907 when his payments to her fell into arrears. She took steps to see him again, and the outcome of their interviews was that he paid her Rs. 170 and each signed a document in the following terms:—

"I hereby renounce all rights over Ma Yin Za (Mrs. Nash) as my wife, or any property now in her possession or which may hereafter be possessed by her.

(Sd.) C. NASH."

"I hereby renounce all claims to support from Mr. C. Nash, as my husband and to any property now in his possession or which may hereafter be possessed by him.

(Sd.) MA YIN ZA (In Burmese)."

(3) (1896) 12 T. L. R. 451.

She does not know English, but she admits that the document was explained to her in Burmese. She says, however, she was so distressed as to be almost mad at the time and did not understand it. The witness Gallope's memory as to what happened in connection with the document is not clear, but it is clear that she wanted her allowance to continue although she understood that the document she was signing was a letter of divorce. The document was composed and written by the defendant himself and his signature to it was evidently wrung from her. It is scarcely necessary to say that the parties could not dissolve their marriage or their relationship by such a document even if the plaintiff had fully understood the document and had consented to its terms. The conduct of the defendant in asking his wife to sign such a document was shameful and degrading to his nationality. There can be no doubt that he intended to abandon her, and the only question, is whether his subsequent abandonment of her was against her wish.

Gallope said that at a meeting of the parties at his house she said that as scandal was being talked in the town, it would be better for them either to re-unite or have a divorce and separate. Even if she did say this, it must be taken in connection with what had happened before and the circumstances at the time. She undoubtedly resented his adultery from the first, and was justified in keeping away from him and not seeking a return to co-habitation as long as he kept his liaison with his mistress and had her living in the house with him. He showed no sign of parting with the mistress, and it would not be reasonable to expect of any woman to express a wish to return to co-habitation with a husband who had so distinctly shown his intention to adhere to his adulterous life. Her want of desire to return to co-habitation was entirely brought about by her husband's gross conduct towards her. Under the circumstances, his adultery and entire abandonment of her since the date of the document entitled her, in my opinion, to a decree for divorce, and I would confirm the decree.

The case will go back to the Divisional Court for determination of the amount of alimony which should be awarded to the plaintiff.

The defendant will pay the plaintiff's costs of the proceeding in this Court, five gold mohurs allowed as Advocate's fee.

grandfather in the plaintiff's name in 1881 under Exhibit C, there being no evidence to show that the funds came from elsewhere, it must be held that the purchase was with the grandfather's funds and for the benefit of his grandson, the plaintiff, in whose name the deed stood. The plaintiff, therefore, was at that time entitled to two-thirds of the house, and the grandfather to one-third, and on the death of the grandfather, Krishnasami, who was his son, became entitled to one-half of that one-third, the other one-half going to the plaintiff. This would be the share accruing to Krishnasami whether he took by inheritance or by virtue of survivorship, assuming that the right of survivorship existed in all respects among the co-parceners at the time of the alienation except with regard to the house, part of which was alienated [See the remarks of Sir Bhashyam Aiyangar, J., at page 717 of the case of Aiyyagari Venkatramayya v. Aiyyagiri Ramayya (2).]

The result is that in modification of the decree of the Courts below, the plaintiff must have a declaration of his right to five-sixths of the house. He will give and receive proportionate costs in both the Courts below. He will have his costs in this Court.

Appeal against the judgment and decree of the Divisional Court of Toungoo, in Civil Appeal No. 90 of 1909, dated 23rd February 1910, confirming the judgment and decree of the Sub-Divisional Court of Nyaunglebin.

Mr. Agabeg, for the Appellants.

Mr. Bagram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff (1st respondent), C. W. Napean, is the youngest son of John Napean, who died in 1883. The 1st defendant, Ma Hmwe Gaing, was the widow of John Napean. She died after the commencement of the suit and her legal representatives have been brought on to the record. A few months before his death in 1883, J. Napean made a Will of which the part concerned in this suit is as follows:—

"This is the last Will of me, John Napean of Shwegyin, and I bequeath my property as follows:—The free-hold landed estate consisting of 4563 acres more or less in the Nyaunglebin and Yea Hla circles in this district I wish to remain as far as possible one property but it is to be divided into four equal shares, one share I bequeath to my wife, one share to my son, George E. Napean, one share to my daughter, Lucy Moss, one share to my son, Charles W. Napean and if the latter outlives his mother, her share will descend to him and so long as my son Charles W. Napean manages the estate, he is to receive 20 per cent. of the profits for so doing."

Probate of this Will was duly taken out by the widow and executrix, Ma Hmwe Gaing.

On 3rd July 1908, a deed of settlement was executed by the appellant (2nd defendant), Maung Pu, as attorney for the widow, Ma Hmwe Gaing, conveying to Maung Pu, as trustee for the settlor, the quarter share of the land which was bequeathed to her by the Will.

The plaintiff, C. W. Napean, brought this suit for a declaration that the document of 3rd July 1908 is not binding on him. It is alleged in the plaint, inter alia, that the widow got only a life-interest in her share under the Will and that in the event of the plaintiff outliving her, he is entitled to inherit her share. Ma Hmwe Gaing having died, the contingency provided for in the Will has actually come to pass.

The lower Courts have held that Maung Pu exceeded his authority in executing the deed of settlement. Maung Pu and his wife (an adopted daughter of Ma Hmwe Gaing) appealed to this Court on various grounds. At the first hearing of the appeal, it was agreed by the learned Counsel on both sides that it would be convenient for all parties to have the question of the construction of the Will settled by the Court before going on with the appeal. For, if the interest of the late Ma Hmwe Gaing were found to have been only a life-interest, the deed of settlement would be entirely ineffectual and the present appeal must fail. If, on the other, hand, it were found that Ma Hmwe Gaing had an absolute interest in her quarter share the grounds stated in the memo. of appeal could be further considered. The hearing was, therefore, adjourned and on a later date, notice having been given to all parties, the learned Counsel were heard on the question of construction. This question has now to be decided.

The words of the Will "One share I bequeath to my wife" taken by themselves give her an absolute interest. It is clearly laid down in section 82, Indian Succession Act, that where property is bequeathed to any person, he is entitled to the whole interest of the testator therein unless it appears from the Will that only a restricted interest was intended for him. To reduce the gift to a life-estate, there must be clear words cutting down the first estate. It is contended for the respondents that the words "if the latter (C. W. Napean) outlives his mother, her share will descend to him" do operate to reduce the widow's interest to a life-estate in the event of her son C. W. Napean surviving her. This certainly is the plain meaning of the words. But it is argued for the appellants that the divesting clause should be regarded as operative only if Ma Hmwe Gaing pre-deceased the testator. There is a long series of English decisions which support the view that "if there is an immediate gift to A. and a gift over in case of death, or any similar expression implying the death to be a contingent event, the gift over will take effect only in the event of A.'s death before the testator". See Law of Wills, Theobald, 5th Edition, p. 575. The reason is explained in the extract from Jarman on Wills cited in Watson v. Watson (1). Jarman says:—"Where a bequest is made to a person with a gift over in case of his death, a question arises whether the testator uses the words 'in the case of' in the sense of 'at' or "from" and thereby as restrictive of the prior bequest to a life-interest, i.e., as introducing a gift to take effect on the decease of the prior legatee under all circumstances, or with a view to create a bequest in defeasance of, or in substitution for, the prior one in the event of the death of the legatee or some contingency. The difficulty in such cases arises from the testator having applied terms of contingency to an event of all others the most certain and inevitable, and to satisfy which terms it is necessary to connect with death some circumstance or association with which it is contingent. That circumstance naturally is the time of its happening; and such time where the bequest is immediate (i.e., in possession) necessarily is the death of the testator, there being no other period to which the words can refer."

The law on this point is further explained as follows by Mr. Justice Fry in Re Hayward, Creey v. Lingwood (2):

There is no doubt that when a gift is made to a person in terms absolute, and that is followed by a gift over, in the event of the death of that person sub modo (that is to say, without issue or subject to any other limitation which makes the death a contingency), the effect of the gift over is prima facie to prevent the first taker from taking absolutely, to convert the interest of the first taker into one subject to the contingent devise or bequest over. In such a case, there is no reason to confine the meaning of the word 'death' to death during the life-time of the testator or death during the life of the tenant for life. The only reason, or the main reason, why that is done in certain cases is, that the testator has spoken of death which is certain, as a contingency, but when the testator has spoken of death sub modo, that being contingent, there is no need to render it contingent by introducing any limitation."

The case of Elliot v. Smith (3) is an example of the application of the rule. A testator left legacies to three persons and "if any of them died" their share was to go to the others. One of the legatees and the testator died at the same instant. It was held that "death" must, according to the ordinary rule, mean death in the testator's life-time. Similarly, in Origan v. Baines (4), where the testatrix bequeathed as follows:—

"I give the legacy to A. and in case of his decease, I give the same legacy to his wife and at her decease to their eldest daughter."

It was decided that A., having survived the testatrix, was absolutely entitled to the legacy. In both these cases, and in all other cases where the rule has been applied, the testator speaks of death, which is certain as if it were a mere contingency, ("if any of them die," "in case of his decease" and the like expressions). It is, therefore, considered necessary (as explained in the extract from Jarman on Wills) to link with death some circumstance in association with which it is contingent, and thus it comes about that in such cases as the above, the death in the contemplation of the law is deemed to be death within the testator's life-time.

But the present case is different. Here the testator does not speak of the death of his wife as a contingent event. He speaks of her pre-deceasing her son as a contingency, which, of course, it was. Thus (to borrow the words of Mr. Justice Fry in the case above cited) the testator has spoken of death sub modo and there is no need to render it contingent by introducing any limitation (such as that the death of the donee must take place in the testator's life-time).

It appears to me quite clear, therefore, that the bequest of Ma Hmwe Gaing was liable to defeasance in the event which has actually occurred, namely, her death before her son, C. W. Napean, (whether before or after the testator's death). That this was the intention of the testator may also be gathered from the form of the words used viz., "her share will descend to him" which seems to imply that the testator contemplated Ma Hmwe Gaing outliving him. The form of words used does not apply aptly to the case of a bequest which is to be diverted to another person if the legatee primarily designated in the Will should happen to die before the testator.

The interpretation now put on the Will is, moreover, in accordance with the expressed wish of the testator that the estate should "remain as far as possible one property."

I decide, therefore, that Ma Hmwe Gaing's interest was a life-estate and that her legal representatives now have no interest in the property. It follows that the deed of settlement of 3rd July 1908 is of no effect.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Res judicata—Alienation by husband—First suit by wife for protecting her right of maintenance—Second suit for recovery of property after husband's death—Judgment—Evidence—Point not in issue.

A. transferred certain properties to B. In a suit by A.'s wife, C., it was decided that the transfers in question would not affect C.'s right to maintenance out of A.'s properties. The only issue in that suit was whether the alienations were binding on C. There was no issue as to whether they were nominal or bogus transactions but in one portion of the judgment they were characterised as bogus transactions, while in another portion they were treated as collusive transfers brought about by A. and B. to defeat C.'s right to maintenance.

After A.'s death, C. sued B. to recover the properties on the ground that the transfers were nominal transactions:

Held, (1) that the question whether the transfers were nominal transactions was not res judicata by reason of the decision in the previous suit;

(2) that the judgment in the previous suit could not be treated as evidence on the question of the nominal character of the transfers.

Appeal, under section 15 of the Letters Patent, against the judgment of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Sankaran Nair, in Second Appeal No. 1590 of 1910, presented against the decree of the District Court of South Canara in Appeal Suit No. 439 of 1908, presented against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif of Mangalore in Original Suit No. 10 of 1908.

Mr. B. Sitarama Rau, for the Appellant.

Mr. H. Balakrishna Rau, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—We are unable to agree with the learned Judge that the question whether the documents by which the plaintiff's deceased husband transferred his rights in the plaint properties to the defendant were nominal transactions not intended to have any legal operation, is res judicata by reason of the decision in Original Suit No. 151 of 1901. In that suit it was decided that the transfers in question would not affect the plaintiff's right to maintenance out of her busband's properties. The issue framed in that suit was whether the alienations were binding on the plaintiff. There was no issue whether they were nominal transactions. No doubt they were characterised as bogus transactions in one portion of the judgment, but in another portion they were treated as collusive transfers brought about by the alienee and by the plaintiff's husband to defeat the plaintiff's right to maintenance. In the latter case, they would be binding on the plaintiff's husband, and on the plaintiff seeking to recover the properties as her heir. The plaintiff's limited right of maintenance being alone in question in the previous suit, the finding that that right was not affected by the transfers cannot entitle the plaintiff to recover the properties as her husband's heir. Our conclusion that there was no issue as to the nominal character of the transfers in the previous suit also makes it necessary that we should hold that the judgment in that suit cannot be treated as evidence on that question. A mere assertion by the plaintiff that the transfers were nominal cannot be treated as legally sufficient to uphold the plaintiff's right. There being no other evidence in support of her claim, we must reverse the decrees of the Courts below and the judgment of Sankaran Nair, J. and dismiss the suit, with costs throughout.

C. CHAUNG TAIK—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. IX, r. 9—Restoration of an appeal dismissed for default—Sufficient cause—Advocates must suffer the consequences of keeping careless clerks.

A Court is bound to set aside an order dismissing an appeal for default of prosecution if it is satisfied that there was sufficient cause for non-appearance on the date fixed.

An appeal was duly entered on the printed cause list for the day. The Advocates for appellant were shown as A. and B. and B.'s clerk admitted that when he was sent by B. to inspect the cause list, he saw the appeal entered with A. and B. against it in the list; but as he was under the impression that A. and not B. was to argue the case, he did not tell B. that his attendance was necessary. The appeal was consequently dismissed in default:

Held, that due care and attention were not exercised and the clerk was exceedingly careless in trusting to a defective memory instead of looking up the briefs in the Advocate's office and that there was no sufficient reason for restoring the appeal.

Even if sufficient cause for non-appearance is not shown, it is still open to the Court, to consider, independently of Order IX, rule 9, the question of restoring for just and sufficient cause any appeal which has been dismissed for default.

If it appears that the decree appealed against was unjust or wrong on the merits, that might be a good reason for restoring the appeal on terms.

Appeal from the judgment and decree of the Judge, Small Causes Court, Rangoon.

Messrs. Agabeg and Maung Pu, for the Appellant.

Mr. Alexander, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application under Order IX, rule 9, to set aside an order dismissing the petitioner's appeal for default of prosecution. I am bound to set aside the order if the petitioner satisfies me that there was sufficient cause for non-appearance on the date fixed. The appeal was duly entered on the printed cause list for the day. The Advocates for appellant were shown as Agabeg and Maung Pu and Maung Pu's clerk admits that when he was sent by Maung Pu to inspect the cause list, he saw the appeal entered with Agabeg and Maung Pu against it in the list. But as he was under the impression that Mr. Agabeg and not Maung Pu was to argue the case, he did not tell Maung Pu that his attendance was necessary. It cannot be said that due care and attention were exercised. The clerk was exceedingly careless in trusting to a defective memory instead of looking up the briefs in the Advocate's office and Advocates must take the consequences if they employ careless clerks.

At the same time, I agree that even if sufficient cause for non-appearance is not shown, it is still open to the Court to consider, independently of Order IX, rule 9, the question of restoring for just and sufficient cause any appeal which has been dismissed for default. If it appeared that the decree appealed against was unjust or wrong on the merits, that might be a good reason for restoring the appeal on terms. But after examining the lower Court's proceedings in this case, I see no reason to think that the decision is unjust or contrary to law. The issue was a simple one of fact which the learned Judge appears to me to have decided according to the weight of evidence.

Poramboke land in a zemindari—No presumption that it is cultivable poramboke—Onus on zemindar to make out his right to cultivate or let out to tenants.

There is no presumption that any poramboke land in a zemindari is of such a character as could lawfully be cultivated or given out by the zemindar for purposes of cultivation. Therefore, the zemindar must prove that it is such as he is entitled to let out on cultivation or receive kist for, if cultivated without his permission.

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the judgment and decree of the Court of the District Munsif of Narsapur, in Small Cause Suit No. 579 of 1910.

Mr. P. Nagabhushanam, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—I am of opinion that on the evidence on record the suit was rightly dismissed. The plaintiff, the Receiver of the estate, admits that the land was poramboke. There is no evidence as to the character of the poramboke. There is absolutely nothing to show that it is such as the zemindar would be entitled to let out on cultivation, or to receive kist for, if cultivated without his permission. Mr. Nagabhushanam may be right in his argument that the word "poramboke" is a comprehensive one including lands which might be cultivated. But there is no presumption that any poramboke land is of such a character as could lawfully be cultivated or given out by the zemindar for purposes of cultivation. The only evidence on record is that of the kurnam who says that the land is a part of Survey No. 1 of the Ankuvedu village belonging to the estate. Mr. Nagabhushanam says the land that could not be cultivated would have no survey number. He has not shown me any evidence or any authority which supports the assertion. Assuming the evidence of the kurnam is credible, the fact that the land is treated as part of the village is not sufficient to show that it is cultivable poramboke. I dismiss the petition.

Held, (1) that A. was the eldest daughter within the meaning of section 163 of the Digest;

(2) that if the eldest child, who died in infancy, were a daughter, the status of eldest daughter would have devolved on A. as the next eldest daughter and that the fact that the eldest child was a son made no substantial difference, as no other son was born who could fill the place of the deceased orasa

Po Sein v. Po Min, 3 L. B. R. 45, distinguished.

The texts cited in section 163 of the Digest give the issue of the eldest daughter a share equal to that of the youngest of his aunts and there seems to be no authority for holding that these texts apply exclusively to families consisting of daughters only.

The texts are applicable to a family where the only children arriving at maturity were two daughters and the only other child was a son who died in infancy.

Second appeal against the judgment and decree of the Divisional Court of Prome, in Civil Appeal No. 6 of 1911, dated 20th July, modifying that of the Sub-Divisional Court of Zigon.

Mr. Nicol, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiff-respondent's mother, Ma Shwe Ma, was the eldest daughter of her parents, but it is contended that she was not technically the "eldest daughter" contemplated in the texts cited in the Digest, section 163, because she was not the first born child, her parents having had before her a child who died in infancy. The only other child was a daughter, the defendant-appellant, who was born seven years after Ma Shwe Ma.

The learned Counsel for appellant relies mainly on the ruling in Po Sein v. Po Min (1). But in that case the plaintiff's mother had three elder brothers and an elder sister who all four predeceased her, and at the time of her mother's death, she had an adult brother living and competent to assume the headship of the family. In the present case, if the eldest child who died in infancy were a daughter, I think it is clear, from the rulings cited in Ma Hnin Gaing v. Ma Tha Li (2), that the status of the eldest daughter would have devolved on Ma Shwe Ma as the next competent daughter. The fact that the eldest child was a son appears to make no substantial difference. No other son was born who could fill the place of the deceased orasa. But the texts cited in section 163 give the issue of the eldest daughter a share equal to that of the youngest of his aunts, and there seems to be no authority for holding that these texts apply exclusively to families consisting of daughters only. At any rate, I see no reason to think that they do not apply to a family where the only children arriving at maturity were two daughters and the only other child a son who died in infancy. It is clear enough I think that Ma Shwe Ma was an eldest daughter as contemplated in section 163 and that the plaintiff-respondent as her son is entitled to a share equal to that of his aunt.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

THE MOULMEIN MUNICIPAL COMMITTEE, BY THEIR PRESIDENT J. D. FRASER—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 72—Suit to recover money paid by mistake—Mistake or ignorance of law cannot to be pleaded.

The petitioner was bailiff in the Municipal Office and as such was authorised to draw commission on taxes which the ward headmen failed to collect within 45 days from the date on which tax tickets were issued. In November 1908, the petitioner represented to the Municipal President that, although the ward headmen were bound to submit any tax tickets on which they had failed to collect taxes within 45 days, yet they were retaining some tickets after the prescribed period and making collections on them. He asked expressly that commission on these belated collections by the headman should be paid to him and not to the headmen. The petition was granted by the President and the Committee passed a resolution which was intended to have the same effect as the President's order. The petitioner drew a sum of Rs. 111-6-2 as commission on collections made by ward headmen after the expiry of the prescribed period of 45 days. Afterwards, objection was raised that the bailiff should not receive commission on taxes which he did not collect. The petitioner was called upon to refund and on his refusal this suit was instituted, the basis of the suit being that the bailiff was not entitled to the money, and, therefore, should refund it:

Held, (1) that if the money was recoverable at all, it was recoverable under section 72 of the Contract Act, which provided that a person to whom the money was paid by mistake must re-pay it, but that the payment in this case was a voluntary payment made with full knowledge of the facts;

(2) that to succeed under section 72 of the Contract Act, the Committee should show that there was some mistake as to the existence of the obligation, but that in this case there was none, as the petitioner was an employee of the Committee and the money must be deemed to have been paid in part remuneration of his services;

(3) that even if it be regarded as a mistake of law, section 72 of the Contract Act should be read as subject to the Common Law rule that ignorance of law cannot be pleaded.

Application to revise the judgment and decree dated the 20th July 1911 of the Court of Small Causes, Moulmein, in Civil Regular No. 637 of 1911.

Mr. Halkar, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—The respondents in this case are the Municipal Committee of Moulmein. They have not put in an appearance and the petition for revision has been heard ex parte.

The petitioner was bailiff in the Municipal office and as such was authorized to draw commission on taxes which the ward headmen failed to collect within 45 days from the date on which tax tickets were issued. In November 1908, the petitioner represented to the Municipal President that, although the ward headmen were bound to submit any tax tickets on which they had failed to collect taxes within 45 days, yet they were retaining some tickets after the prescribed period and making collections on them. He asked expressly that commission on these belated collections by the headmen should be paid to him and not to the headmen. This petition was granted by the President, and the Committee passed a resolution which was clearly intended to have the same effect as the President's order. It was argued at the hearing that the Committee's resolution was intended to apply only to collections actually made by the bailiff. But this contention is untenable in view of the bailiff's petition on which the resolution was based.

Accordingly, the petitioner drew a sum of Rs. 111-6-2 as commission on collections made by ward headmen after the expiry of the prescribed period of 45 days. Subsequently, the Government Auditor objected to the payment on the ground that the bailiff should not receive commission on taxes which he did not collect. The defendant-appellant was called upon to refund and on his refusal, this suit was instituted, the basis of the suit being that the bailiff was not entitled to the money and, therefore, should refund it. The learned Judge of the lower Court held that as the Municipal Committee paid the money through misapprehension of the rules governing such payments, they are entitled to recover the money from the petitioner.

If the money is recoverable at all, it is recoverable under section 72 of the Contract Act, which provides that a person to whom the money is paid by mistake must re-pay it.

There can be no doubt that the payment in this case was a voluntary payment made with full knowledge of the facts. The bailiff's petition to the Municipal Committee showed clearly that he was claiming commission for collections made by the ward headmen. The only mistake the Committee can plead is the mistake as to their own authority to sanction the payment. They do not actually plead this mistake. They merely say in their plaint that the defendant should refund because he was not entitled to the money. But it does not seem permissible for the Committee to say this in view of their unrescinded resolution under which the defendant-appellant was clearly entitled to the money. The plaint might, therefore, have been rejected as disclosing no cause of action. But, even if the claim were expressly based on section 72 of the Contract Act, I do not think that the Committee could succeed. The Small Cause Court Judge seems to have thought that any money irregularly paid out by a Municipal Committee can be recovered in a civil suit. But there is no authority for this view. To succeed under section 72 of the Contract Act, the Committee should show that there was some mistake as to the existence of the obligation. In this case there was none, for the petitioner was an employee of the Committee and the money must be deemed to have been paid in part remuneration of his services. The mistake as to the Committee's authority was merely a collateral matter concerning the Committee in its relation to the Local Government. Even if it be regarded as a mistake of law, the better opinion seems to be that section 72 of the Contract Act should be read as subject to the Common law rule that ignorance of law cannot be pleaded.

The decree of the lower Court is set aside and the original plaint is dismissed with costs in both Courts.

Mortgage-suit—Mortgagor and mortgagee—Final decree—Accounts—Execution—Legality.

Accounts between a mortgagor and mortgagee should be taken by the Court before passing a final decree. A provision in the judgment for taking accounts between the parties in execution is not in accordance with law.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of South Malabar, in Appeal Suit No. 29 of 1908, presented against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Cochin, in Original Suit No. 23 of 1907.

Mr. C. V. Anantakrishna Iyer, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. Govinda Marar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—According to Exhibit A, the first defendant is bound to pay the 2nd defendant only Rs. 1,200. There was no stipulation for the payment of any interest for the debt as the mortgage was usufructuary and the land mortgaged was to be enjoyed in lieu of interest. The plaintiff, as sub-mortgagee from the second defendant's mortgagee, cannot recover from the 1st defendant more than the sum of Rs. 1,200, which the 1st defendant was bound to pay the 2nd defendant. The decree of the lower Appellate Court must be modified accordingly.

We may point out that the provision made in the judgment of the lower Court for taking accounts between the parties in execution is not in accordance with law. Accounts between a mortgagor and a mortgagee should be taken by the Court before passing a final decree. In this case, however, there is no necessity for taking any accounts as the amount payable by the 1st defendant is already certain, viz., Rs. 1,200.

It was also contended for the appellant that there was no proper notice of demand made on the 1st defendant. This contention is clearly unsustainable.

There will be no order for costs in the second appeal. The 1st defendant will pay plaintiff's costs on the amount decreed against him.

Messrs. Burjorjee and Dantra, for the Applicant.

Mr. Giles, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The applicants sued respondent to recover Rs. 1,678-15 under the following circumstances. They say that on the 7th April 1906, they advanced to Abdul Monaf Khan and the respondent Rs. 1,700 on a promissory-note with interest accruing thereon and that the borrowers jointly and severally promised to pay the sum due on the note on demand to the applicants or to their order, that Abdul Monaf Khan failed in business and entered into a composition with his creditors on the 18th August 1906, whereby they agreed to accept 8 annas and 6 pies in the rupee and release the said Abdul Monaf Khan, that applicants at first refused to be a party to such composition-deed as their claim was against Abdul Monaf Khan and the respondent, that they have been informed that a few days after the 18th August, 1906, their then agent, Vyraven Chetty, executed such composition-deed at the inducement and on the promise of the respondent that he will pay whatever balance there might remain owing on the promissory-note after due credit had been given for the sum received from the trustees of Abdul Monaf Khan, that they received Rs. 630 under the terms of the composition-deed, and that the respondent will not pay the balance due. The applicants claim that in the event of the agreement with respondent not being proved, they can still sue for the balance due, and they claim exemption from limitation by virtue of a letter filed, which they say amounts to an acknowledgment. In reply, the respondent allows executing the note and pleads when Vyraven Chetty entered into the composition deed, no further claim could be made on the note, whether there was a subequent agreement or not, that there was no such agreement and that the applicants cannot sue on the note as there was a novation of contract according to them and that further any claim on the note is barred by limitation. The learned Judge of the Court of Small Causes dismissed the suit, and now this application in revision is made. The law as regards composition-deeds is clearly stated in the case of Britten v. Hughes (1). There Best, C. J., said :—"The principle is clear that upon a composition-deed all the parties are supposed to stand in the same relation and, if there is any one of them who refuses to do so, he must announce it at the time..... ...No engagement can stand which has been withheld from the knowledge of the whole body of the creditors, and which it would have been material for them to know." The point for consideration in the present case seems to be whether it was material for the creditors to have known of this alleged agreement with the respondent. If they had known of it, would it have influenced their judgment? It seems to me that it may have done so, as they would have known that the applicants were arranging to secure the whole sum due, and they might not have agreed to this. I am, therefore, of opinion that, even if there was this alleged agreement, it cannot now be sued on. In the alternative, the applicants wish to sue on the note. I am unable to allow that they can, as by their pleadings new contracts were subtituted for it. I accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

The applicants applied for a review of this judgment and Mr. Justice Hartnoll on hearing the petitioners' Advocate passed the following ORDER.—Exception is taken to my judgment that I erred in holding that the terms of the composition-deed, in any way, precluded plaintiffs' remedy against the respondent, that the respondent being a joint debtor with Abdul Monaf Khan, there was no engagement in the composition-deed to forego any claim as against the respondent, and that there was an error in law in my judgment that the new contract alleged in any way was void as against the terms of the composition-deed. Now the facts alleged by the plaintiffs are that their agent first refused to be a party to the composition-deed as his claim was against Abdul Monaf Khan and the defendant, and that their agent executed the composition-deed subsequently at the inducement and on the promise of the defendant that he would pay whatever balance remained owing to the promissory-note after due credit had been given for the sum received from the trustees of Abdul Monaf Khan. It would appear that if this story is true, plaintiffs' agent did not then understand the legal position when he entered into such an agreement and did not realize that whatever sum was recovered from Abdul Monaf Khan's trustees, he had the right to sue the defendant for the balance. It would appear that he certainly expected a material advantage to himself from such an agreement, and that it constituted the inducement to him to sign the composition-deed. If he took this view of the matter, was it not incumbent on him to inform the other creditors of the agreement? If the other creditors had known of it, may it not also have influenced their decision? They also like plaintiffs' agent may not have understood the legal position and, not understanding it, may have acted otherwise than they did. It cannot be too clearly insisted on that there must be perfect good faith in a matter of this kind and that everything must be done bona fide. It is true that the defendant-respondent was not a creditor of Abdul Monaf Khan and a party to the composition-deed; but if a bargain not disclosed to the other creditor is made by one creditor with a third party, it will not be enforceable against him, and this view is not without authority, as I would refer to the case of Edeman v. Waller (2). It is true that the legal position being as it was is in favour of the plaintiffs but I would still hold that my decision was right in that if the other creditors had known of the alleged agreement their judgment might have been affected. But, be that as it may, the legal position is now understood. If the plaintiffs were unable to recover the whole of their debt from Abdul Monaf Khan, they were at liberty to sue the defendant-respondent for the balance due on the promissory-note. This being so, there was no consideration for the subsequent alleged agreement. Plaintiff's Counsel says that the consideration was extension of time. I cannot see that this was anywhere alleged in the pleadings and it was evidently urged as an afterthought. I must, therefore, hold that the alleged subsequent agreement, even if it was made, is void.

I now come to the fourth and fifth grounds of the review and am of opinion that there are good grounds for them. I erred in seeing that, as by the pleadings new contracts were substituted for the note, the plaintiffs could not sue on the note, as I held that the new alleged contract was void. As I so held, I think that the plaintiffs could sue on the note if it is not time-barred. It was time-barred unless the letter of the 15th February 1908 under section 19 of the Limitation Act creates a new period of limitation. No authorities were placed before me, but I would refer to the cases of Narbidashankar v. Raghnath (3), Dharma Vithal v. Gobind Sadvalkar (4), Venkataramanaya v Srinivasa Rau (5) and Ramdas v. Brijnundan Das (6). These cases lay down that there must be a distinct acknowledgment of an existing liability or jural relation for section 19 to apply. Looking at the letter of the 18th February 1908 in this view, I am of opinion that it is not such an acknowledgment as comes within the meaning of section 19 of the Limitation Act. It may be taken to allow that defendant-respondent signed the note though that is not too clear as such a construction can only be arrived at by implication, but it clearly repudiates liability on the ground that plaintiffs agreed to take 8 annas 6 pies in full discharge of his claim without any reservation on the promissory-note. There was, therefore, no distinct acknowledgment of an existing liability or juarl relation. The suit on the note is, therefore, time-barred.

JUDGMENT.

IN S. A. No. 1406 OF 1910.

The plaintiff in this case prays for a declaration that a sale of the plaintiff's property by his mother as his guardian is not binding on him, and for possession and mesne profits. Both the lower Courts have held that the plaintiff failed to adduce sufficient proof of his age, and the question for decision is whether the period of limitation is twelve years from the date of alienation in 1904, under Article 144, or three years from the date of the plaintiff's majority under Article 44, of the Limitation Act, 1877. We are of opinion that the case falls within the decision of the Privy Council in Gnanasambanda Pandara Sannadhi v. Velu Pandaram (1), which was followed by this Court in Madugula Latchiah v. Palli Mukhalinga (2) and that Article 44 applies. In view of these decisions, we are unable to follow the cases in Unni v. Kunchi Amma (3) and Kamakshi Nayakan v. Ramaswamy Nayakan (4). We may point out that in Gnanasambanda Pandara Sannadhi v. Velu Pandaram (1), the sale by the minor's guardian was held to be void and incapable of passing any title to the purchaser, while the ground of the decision in Unni v. Kunchi Amma (3) was that such a sale deed may be treated as non-existent, and the remedy of the minor is to sue for possession and not to set aside the sale.

The judgment in Unni v. Kunchi Ammal (3) was obiter as regards a sale by minor's guardian which is the case specifically provided for by Article 44, and no other authority appears to have been considered in the case reported in Kamakshi Nayakan v. Ramaswamy Nayakan (4).

The second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal against the judgment and decree of the District Court, Tharrawaddy.

FACTS.—This appeal was first filed on 21st December 1909. It was admitted and notice was served on the respondent who appeared by an Advocate and so the appeal was transferred to the contested Board on 10th May 1910.

On 25th July 1911, the Advocates for the respondent put in a petition supported by an affidavit praying that as the appellant died on 17th December 1910 and as no steps had been taken to substitute legal representatives in his place, the appeal may be dismissed. On receiving notice of this application, the appellant's Advocate put in a petition praying that Ma Doe Ma, widow of appellant deceased, Ma Sein Hmyin and Maung Po Hla minors by their guardian Ma Doe Ma, may be substituted as appellants in place of Maung Tha Maung who died on 17th December 1910. Both the petitions were considered and a Bench consisting of Justices Ormond and Twomey passed the following order on 14th August 1911:—

VIJAYARAGHAVAREDDI v. KOMARAPPA REDDI.

"The appeal abates under Order XXII, rule 3, as no application was made within 6 months of the death of Tha Maung to put his legal representatives on the record.

"It will be open to the legal representatives to apply within 60 days under Order XXII, rule 9 for an order to set aside the abatement."

On 26th August 1911, Ma Hamlyn put in a petition for setting aside the above order and praying that Ma Sein Hnyin and Maung Po Hla minors by their guardian Ma Doe Ma may be substituted as appellants in place of Maung Tha Maung deceased. The following order was passed on this application.

Messrs. Hamyn and Palit, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Sen and Banerji, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—The point for decision in this appeal is whether Ma Sein Hnyin and Maung Hpo Hla should be placed on the record as the legal representatives of their deceased father, Maung Tha Maung, and the appeal should be ordered to proceed. Ma Sein Hnyin and Maung Hpo Hla are minors and though Maung Tha Maung died on the 13th December last and more than six months elapsed before any application was made on their behalf to be made parties, they claim that under section 6 (1) of the Limitation Act they are entitled to be made parties. In support of their contention, the case of Bhikaji Ramchandra v. Purshotam (1) is quoted. Order XXII, rule 3, in our opinion, should not be construed to mean that no application should be entertained unless it is made by all the legal representatives of the deceased. This would sometimes be impossible especially within the prescribed time. Where possible, all the legal representatives should so apply, but an application by a legal representative is sufficient for him to be made a party. In the present instance by virtue of section 6 (1) of the Limitation Act, the minors are within time. It is settled by the case of Phoolbas Koonwar v. Lalla Jogeshur Sahoy (2) that applications by minors are valid if made during the period of their minority. We accordingly set aside the order of abatement and direct that Ma Sein Hnyin and Maung Hpo Hla be placed on the record as the legal representatives of their deceased father, Maung Tha Maung, and that their mother Ma Doe Ma be appointed as their guardian to represent them in the appeal.

Order set aside.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 162—Suit adjourned for want of time—No duty on trying Court to direct witnesses to appear—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLIII, r. 1, cl. (a)—Remand order not passed under Order XLI, rule 23, not appealable—Appeal against ex parte decree—Proper procedure, if Appellate Court is satisfied that the defendant had no opportunity of adducing evidence.

Where a suit is adjourned by a Court of its own motion for want of time, and not at the request of parties, there is no duty on the Court to direct the witnesses who are present to appear on the adjourned date of hearing. Section 162 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 imposes no such duty on the trying Court.

Subbarayadu v. Chenchuramayya, 24 M. 200, distinguished.

Order XLIII, rule 1, clause (a), Civil Procedure Code, 1908, apparently does not allow an appeal against an order of remand, which is not passed under Order XLI, rule 23.

Quære:—Whether an Appellate Court can, in hearing an appeal against an ex parte decree, set aside the decree and remand the case to the Court of first instance, if the defendant was not given sufficient opportunity to adduce his evidence or whether the proper procedure is not to ask the lower Court to take further evidence and submit it to the Appellate Court for disposing of the appeal on the merits?

Petition under section 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise the order of the District Court of South Arcot, dated 21st November 1910, in Appeal Suit 249 of 1910, setting aside the decree of the Court of the District Munsif of Tindivanam, dated 24th August 1910, in Original Suit No. 96 of 1910 and remanding the original suit to the said Court of the District Munsif for re-trial.

The Hon'ble Mr. L. A. Govindaraghava Aiyar and Mr. A. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Petitioner.

Mr. C. Padmanabha Aiyangar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case, the decree was passed by the District Munsif ex parte. An application was made to set aside the ex parte decree and refused, and there was no appeal from the order refusing to set aside the ex parte decree. But an appeal was filed gainst the decree itself. The District Judge who heard the appeal holds that the defendants were not prevented by sufficient cause from appearing on the date fixed for hearing and conducting the case, but he has set aside the decree and remanded the case to the District Munsif for disposal after giving the defendants an opportunity to adduce their evidence on the ground that the District Munsif had adjourned the case on the 12th July to the 24th August 1910 not at the request of the parties but for want of time and failed to direct the witnesses who were present to appear on the adjourned date of hearing. We do not propose to pronounce a definite opinion on the question, whether the District Judge could, in hearing an appeal against an ex parte decree, set aside the decree and remand the case to the Court of first instance, if a defendant was not given sufficient opportunity to adduce his evidence, or whether the proper procedure is not to ask the lower Court to take further evidence and submit it to the Appellate Court for disposing of the appeal on the merits. In this case, the finding of the District Judge on the point is against the defendants as we read the appeal judgment.

The ground on which the order of remand is based is that the District Munsif ought to have directed the defendants' witnesses to appear at the next day of hearing and failed to do so. But we do not find any such duty was laid on the District Munsif. Section 162 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, does not, as we read the section, impose any such duty on a trying Court, though probably if an application is made by a party to that effect, the Court may in a proper case bind down the witneses to attend at the next date of hearing. The second paragraph of section 162 only deals with the Court's power to detain witnesses. Nor does Subbarayadu v. Chenchuramayya (1) lay down any general rule to the effect supported by the learned District Judge. We hold, therefore, that the District Judge's order of remand is without jurisdiction. We set aside the order and remit the appeal to the District Judge for disposal according to law. Costs will abide the result.

We may add that we have treated the memorandum of Civil Miscellaneous Appeal as a Revision Petition, as, in our opinion, Order XLIII, rule 1, cl. (a), Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, apparently does not give an appeal against an order of remand, which is not passed under Order XLI, rule 23 of the Code of Civil Procedure 1903.

Second Appeal from the decree of the Divisional Court, Tenasserim, confirming that of the District Court of Amherst.

Mr. Gaunt, for the Appellant.

SIVAPRAKASAM v. PALANIAPPA MUDALIAR.

JUDGMENT.

Fox, C. J.—This is a second appeal under section 100 of the Code. The first ground of the appeal relates to the Receiver of an insolvent's estate having entered into an arrangement without the leave of the Court for deferred payment of purchase money on selling part of the insolvent's property. It is submitted that on that account the sale was void. Section 20 of the Provincial Insolvency Act contemplates that a Receiver shall obtain the leave of the Court before he makes such an arrangement, and if he does make one without the leave of the Court, he commits a breach of his duty and may be made responsible if any loss occurs to the estate. It does not lie in the mouth of the purchaser, however, to say that the sale is void on account of this breach of duty. No authority has been cited to us supporting the contention that the sale has been void.

The 2nd ground of appeal is in regard to one of the conclusions of fact; on that, the decision of the Divisional Judge is final. The remaining grounds treat the sale as a matter of contract to be dealt with under the provisions of the Contract Act. It was, however, a sale by a minister of the Court, and the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Mahomed Kala Meah v. Harperink Smith and Company (1) implies that the Contract Act has no application to sales by ministers of a Court.

In my opinion, none of the grounds of appeal are sustainable, and the appeal should be dismissed.

HARTNOLL, J.—I concur and would add that appellant admitted that he received notice of the intention to re-sell. The consideration for which the appellant paid was not the mortgage but the schooner and paddy land.

Appeal dismissed.

Quære:—Whether the representatives of the deceased defendant can institute a separate suit for the purpose of recovering costs?

Petition, under section 115 of Act V of 1903, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the District Munsif of Mayavaram, dated 27th October 1910, in C. M. P. No. 825 of 1905, in Original Suit No. 243 of 1904.

Mr. S. Muthiah Mudaliar, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, to revise the order of the District Munsif of Mayavaram, in Miscellaneous Petition No. 825 of 1905 in so far as he refused to award to the petitioners here, the costs which had been incurred by their mother in Original Suit No. 243 of 1904. It is necessary to state the facts briefly to make the point arising for decision clear. Original Suit No. 243 was instituted by Planiappa Mudali against Thayali Anni, the mother of the petitioners, for a declaration that a certain Will, which she had presented for registration, was a forgery. The suit was originally instituted in the Sub-Court of Kumbakonam. That Court, holding that it had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit, returned the plaint for presentation to the proper Court. Subsequently, the plaint was presented in the Munsif's Court of Mayavaram. Thavali Anni died subsequently. After her death the plaintiff applied to the Munsif for permission to withdraw his suit with leave to sue again, and permission was granted. The order giving permission was subsequently set aside by this Court in Letters Patent Appeal No. 146 of 1909, presented by the present petitioners, the sons of Thayali Anni. They had previously asked the Munsif to review his order granting leave to sue again but failed. This Court, in setting aside the order granting leave, remitted the plaintiff's petition to withdraw his suit with leave to sue again, for fresh disposal. The District Munsif's Court, on re-hearing, dismissed the plaintiff's petition and granted to the present petitioners their costs incurred previously in this Court and also their costs incurred in the plaintiff's petition in the Munsif's Court. This revision petition relates to the refusal to award to the present petitioners the costs incurred by their mother in the Kumbakonam Sub-Court, before that Court had returned the plaint. The Munsif holds that subsequent to the re-presentation of the plaint in the Mayavaram Court, the suit abated on Thayali Anni's death; that no petition was put in by the plaintiff or by the present petitioners for the substitution of the petitioner's names on the record in the place of Thayali Anni; and that he had no power in these circumstances to award to the petitioners the costs incurred by Thayali Anni. The petitioners' contention before me is, that he was mistaken in supposing that he had no power to do so. I am of opinion that the District Munsif is right. If a suit abates on the ground that no representative of a deceased defendant is brought on record, there is, as far as I am aware, no provision entitling the representatives of the deceased defendant to come to Court and ask for the costs of the suit. When the abatement of the suit is in consequence of the death of the plaintiff, there is provision made in the Code for ordering the costs of the defendant to be paid out of the estate of the deceased plaintiff. But there is no similar provision for directing the plaintiff to pay to the heirs of the deceased defendant the costs incurred by such deceased defendant when the suit abates in consequence of his death. What remedy, if any, would be open to the heirs in such a case, does not arise for decision in this petition. It may be that they might be entitled to institute a suit for the purpose. At any rate, my attention is not drawn to any authority for holding that the Court can award in the suit which has abated costs to the heirs of the deceased defendant against the plaintiff.

The order of the Munsif was, therefore, right and I dismiss this petition.

Petition dismissed.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of Tanjore in Appeal Suit No. 411 of 1909, presented against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif of Tiruvalur in Original Suit No. 142 of 1908.

Mr. G. S. Ramachandra Iyer, for the Appellant.

Mr. V. Narasimha Aiyangar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The point raised in second appeal is that the suit to compel registration is not maintainable in this case as the Sub-Registrar did not refuse to register the document but under section 20 of the Registration Act refused to take it up for registration; and that the Registrar, on appeal, must be taken to have done the same thing. Reliance is placed on Gangava v. Sayava (1). Assuming that, when a Sub-Registrar refuses to take up a document for registration, no appeal would lie to the Registrar, and no suit could be instituted in the regular Courts to compel registration, it is not shown that in this case registration was not refused. The District Munsif says that there was an appeal against the Sub-Registrar's order to the Registrar under section 72. If the Sub-Registrar merely refused to take up the document for registration, no appeal would lie to the Registrar against his order according to the appellant's contention. The point raised here does not seem to have been argued in the lower Appellate Court. We cannot assume that there was not an order refusing registration by the Sub-Registrar and by the Registrar. On this ground, we dismiss the second appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

The petitioner, one of the creditors of an insolvent, claimed to rank as a secured creditor against the sale-proceeds of the stock in trade of the insolvent. He had obtained a letter of hypothecation in which one term was:—"I agree to deliver to you the keys of the said business premises and to take from you every morning the said keys and return them to you every evening. For breach of any stipulation contained herein or failure to pay the money due when demanded, it shall be lawful for you without my consent to retain the keys and seize the goods or otherwise take possession of them." The agreement was carried out and when the insolvent subsequently absconded, the petitioner took possession of the stock-in-trade and had it sold:

Held, (1) that on the day of the bankruptcy, which related back to the day of absconding, the stock-in-trade was in the possession, order and disposition of the insolvent so as to make him the reputed owner thereof under section 52 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act;

FACTS.—The material facts appear from the judgment. The letter of hypothecation under which one of the claimants, Hinduji Jeethaji, claimed to rank as a secured creditor ran thus,—

We further declare that the stock-in-trade of the said business is now worth about Rs.....We agree to deliver to you the keys of the said business premises and to take from you every morning the said keys and return them to you every evening. For breach of any stipulation contained herein or failure to pay the money due when demanded, it shall be lawful for you, without our consent previously obtained and without notice to us, to retain the said keys and seize the goods or otherwise take possession of them and to sell the said property after three days' notice thereof to us.

Yours faithfully."

Mr. W. B. Barton, instructed by Messrs. Grant and Greatorex, for the Claimants.

Mr. Nugent Grant, instructed by Mr. Wilson, for the Official Assignee and the Opposing Creditors.

JUDGMENT.—In these two connected cases, the Official Assignee has rejected the claims of the petitioners to be entitled to rank as secured creditors against the sale-proceeds of the stock-in-trade of the insolvent which was in his possession and which after the insolvent had absconded, they took possession of and directed to be sold by the Madras Sales Agency. The sale-proceeds were claimed and recovered by the Official Assignee and subsequently, as I have said, he refused to admit the petitioners' claim to rank as secured creditors and these two notices of motion, though they do not so state expressly, must be regarded as appeals from the decision of the Official Assignee.

They—one of them at any rate—raise a question of very considerable importance. Hinduji Jeetaji, the first petitioner, made various advances to the insolvent and obtained promissory-notes and what I may call letters of hypothecation in which one term was:—"We agree to deliver to you the keys of the said business premises and to take from you every morning the said keys and return them to you every evening. For breach of any stipulation contained herein or failure to pay the money due when demanded, it shall be lawful for you, without my consent, to retain the keys and seize the goods or otherwise take possession of them." The effect of these provisions really is to make the mortgagee custodian of the keys out of business hours and until the happening of the breach referred to, he has apparently no right to intermeddle with the goods even during these hours. There is evidence that that agreement was carried out and the important question arises whether under this arrangement, "the stock-in-trade was left in the possession or order or disposition of the insolvent in his trade or business by the consent and permission of the true owner under such circumstances that he was the reputed owner thereof"—this is the language of section 52 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act—and whether this state of things existed at the commencement of the insolvency, the commencement of the insolvency being the date of the first act of bankruptcy according to another section.

Now, I think it may be said at once that this provision is a product of local ingenuity. From the time of James I down to the present day, during which these provisions have been in force, no one, so far as can be ascertained, has ever yet thought that it was enough to defeat the provisions of the Act that every day when the trader locks up his shop and leaves it and goes to his place or residence, instead of keeping the keys under his own pillow for the night, he should hand them over to the mortgagee and take them back again in the morning. Such a proceeding is one of which the people trading with the insolvent would be absolutely unaware so that in the view of everybody, the goods would be at the order and disposition of the insolvent and he would be the reputed owner thereof.

If this is enough to take the case out of the section, the latter will become very largely a dead letter. As we know, all traders have a very natural objection to its being known that they have had to pledge their stock-in-trade because it affects their credit. If it be enough to secretly hand over the keys every night in some other part of the town and get them back next morning to prevent the goods from being in the possession, order and disposition of the trader, one can scarcely doubt that this method will be very widely adopted and the object of the Legislature defeated. However, if that is the law, I am bound to give effect to it but I am of opinion that it is not the law. I am of opinion that, under this agreement, these goods continued to be in the possession, order or disposition of the trader, notwithstanding that the keys were taken every night to the secured creditor in another part of the town and were taken from him every morning. A case was cited, In the matter of William Hastie (1), in which an insolvent obtained an advance and the lender insisted that the stock-in-trade should be given as security and that the key of the godown in which the goods were stored should be delivered to him at once. I think it was the next day the insolvency happened and it was held that by getting possession of the key, the lender had got possession of the goods and that he did all that he could do and that the goods had ceased to be in the possession, order or disposition of the insolvent. But that was, in my opinion, a very different case from this in which the only right the lender reserved to himself was a right of keeping the keys at night when the premises were shut up and he had not even then any right to intermeddle with the stock until the happening of a breach. In my opinion, any possession which the lender had under that arrangement was not a real but a sham possession, and that, as I understand it, is the test. In the case of Ex parte National Guardian Assurance Co., In re Francis (2), that is the test which is laid down. Discussing the evidence in that case, Lord Justice James said:—"It was not a sham but a real possession, taken for the purpose of giving effect to the security of the Company." And Lord Justice Thessiger also said at page 415 that it was necessary to arrive at a conclusion whether the possession was a real one or a mere sham. If, as held in the circumstances of that case, the possession of the true owner was a real one, the case is at once taken out of the section, but I am prepared to hold that in this case the possession was a mere sham. Further, I find in the case of Ex parte Cohen, In re Sparke (3), it is said of the agreement proved in that case by Lord Justice James:—" The agreement was evidently concocted for the purpose of evading, if possible, the remedy which the Act as to bills of sale intended to provide for the benefit of the creditors. This attempt at fraud does not, in my opinion, strengthen the position of those who rely upon it to support the assignment. To hold that such an assignment could stand would be a direct encouragement to fraud." Lord Justice Mellish says:—"It is a device between them for the benefit of the debtor, to enable him to avoid that registration which the Act of Parliament has required." Similarly, in this case, I should be prepared to hold that a device of this sort, under which the debtor was in effect really left in the enjoyment of an effective control of the goods, was simply a device to effect fraud upon the Act, such as spoken of here. A deliberate arrangement such as this to deceive the public differs, in my opinion, entirely from such a case as Hilton v. Tucker (4).

(1) 11 C. 451.

Further, whether I am right in the view I have taken or not, there cannot be the least doubt that under this agreement during the working hours of the day, those goods were absolutely in the possession, order and disposition of the insolvent. He got the keys in the morning and he returned them late at night and under the circumstances I hold that they were during the day time in his absolute order, possession and disposition. Then, under the Act, the Insolvency relates back to the act of Bankruptcy, and on sending for the petition upon which the adjudication was made, I found that the adjudication is made on an affidavit which alleges that "on or about the 13th of December, the said insolvent, with the object of secluding himself, so as to deprive his creditors of the means of communicating with him, locked up the place of business and left Madras taking the keys thereof." And the evidence is that he left for Bombay on that night. Even assuming that before he left for Bombay, he had handed the keys to these creditors, still the words of the Act are "with intent to defeat or delay his creditors, he departs from his usual place of business or otherwise absents himself." It seems to me that he must have left his place of business on the night of the 13th with the intention of so starting for Bombay and that the act of Bankruptcy must be considered as having taken place when he left his place of business on the evening of the 13th without any intention of returning, at a time when in my judgment the goods were in his possession, order or disposition with the consent of the true owner, that is to say, the hypothecatees.

So much for the appeal in the first case of Jeetaji. With regard to the second appeal of Jeevaji, the case is not even so strong because the letter of hypothecation in that case which recites that the goods have been deposited with the creditor says nothing whatever about this arrangement of handing over the keys every night and taking them again in the morning. The evidence is that there were two sets of keys, one set of which was handed to Jeetaji every night and the other to Jeevaji. Though these two professed to be absolute strangers to each other, they never heard of each other even, yet they combined in all the steps taken for realizing the goods, and the evidence of there being two sets of keys is of a very unsatisfactory character. I am not prepared to hold that it has been satisfactorily proved that Jeevaji had even this sort of possession which would have resulted to him from the keys being left in his house every night and taken away in the morning. It looks to me more as if this was an after-thought intended to bring him into line and to put him within as strong a position as Jeetaji. At any rate, the onus is distinctly upon him to establish that the goods were in his possession and I hold he has failed to establish that by satisfactory evidence. The result is that

LOWER BURMA CHIEF COURT.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL No. 67 OF 1911.

February 14, 1912.

Present:—Sir Charles Fox, Chief Judge, and Mr. Justice Hartnoll.

versus

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11, O. II, rr. 1, 2—First suit on contract—Second suit for compensation for services—Res judicata.

In a previous suit the plaintiff based his claim on a personal contract with the defendant for the supply of boats at an agreed rate and on failing to prove that agreement, brought this suit for recovery of the same money as compensation for services rendered:

Held, that the 2nd suit was barred as res judicata under section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code. The matter directly and substantially in issue in the first suit was whether the defendant owed the plaintiff any sum on account of the use by him of the plaintiff's boats. The ground in the second suit ought to have been taken as an alternative in the first suit in the event of the respondent not having been able to prove a direct contract.

Appeal against the judgment and decree of the District Court of Amherst, in Suit No. 233 of 1909.

Messrs. Giles and Higginbotham, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

FOX, C. J.—The first question on this appeal and the only one which has so far been argued is whether the suit is barred as res judicata under the provisions of sections 11 and 12 and Order II, rule 2 of the Civil Procedure Code. The suit, the decision in which is put forward as a bar to the present suit, is No. 251 of 1907, in which the present plaintiff was the plaintiff and the present defendant and Venkat Reddy and Y. Subramoney were defendants. * *

* * * * * * * *

In Suit No. 251 of 1907, the plaintiff alleged and endeavoured to prove by evidence a contract for the supply of the boats at an agreed rate and that such contract had been made by him with P. L. Christensen personally. The District Judge found the contract not proved, but on the evidence he came to the conclusion that the plaintiff was led to believe by the second and third defendants that he had let his boats to the first defendant and that the latter knew that he was under that impression and designedly took no steps to remove it and consequently he was debarred from denying that the plaintiff had let his boats directly to him. He also found that the second and third defendants had engaged the plaintiff's boats for and as agents for the first defendant. On these grounds, he found on the second and third issues that the plaintiff had let his boats to the first defendant and had not let them to the second and third defendants. He gave the plaintiff a decree for the amount claimed with costs as against the first defendant, and dismissed the suit with costs as against the second and third defendants. The first defendant appealed to this Court against the decree against him and this Court reversed the decree on the ground that the question of a contract between the plaintiff and the first defendant made through the agency of the second and third defendants had not been raised by the parties and had not been involved in the suit. This decision was given on March 15, 1909. Suit No. 238 of 1909 was instituted on August 24, 1909. In the plaint, it is described as a suit for compensation for services rendered and it is put forward as a suit open to the plaintiff and contemplated by section 70 of the Contract Act. Omitting all mention of the contract alleged in the previous suit, the plaint merely says that the plaintiff supplied the boats and the defendant employed them, and the services were reasonably worth to the defendant Rs. 100 a day for each boat. The ground of claim was apparently simply the facts that the plaintiff had supplied the boats and he had not intended to do so gratuitously, and the defendant had had the benefit of them. Consequently, he was bound to make compensation for the use of them. When the case came on for hearing, it was agreed by both sides that the evidence in Suit No. 251 of 1907 should be treated as evidence in the case. In the further evidence the plaintiff gave in the later suit, he again said that the defendant had agreed to pay him Rs. 100 for each boat.

In face of the obvious fact that on the plaintiff's own allegations and also on those of the defendant in both suits, the boats had been supplied by the plaintiff under a contract made by him with some one, that was, either with P. L. Christensen, personally, or with Venkata Reddy and G. Subramoney as agents of Christensen, or with them as principals, the District Judge gave the plaintiff a decree, thinking apparently that the rule of law embodied in section 70 of the Contract Act applied to such a case. This question need not be discussed now since the only point at present for decision is whether the later suit was not barred as res judicata. Omitting parts of it which have no bearing, the first para. of section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure enacts that no Court should try any suit or issue in which the matter directly and substantially in issue has been directly and substantially in issue in a former suit between the same parties in a Court competent to try such subsequent suit and had been heard and finally decided by such Court. The matter directly and substantially in issue between the plaintiff and first defendant in Suit No. 251 of 1907 was whether that defendant owed the plaintiff any amount on account of the use by him of the plaintiff's boats. Under Order II, rule 1, the plaintiff was bound to frame his suit as far as practicable in such a manner as to afford ground for a final decision upon "the subject in dispute," and in such a manner as to prevent further litigation concerning such subject.

Under Order VII, rule 1 (c), his plaint had to set forth the facts constituting his cause of action. He chose to set forth as such facts a contract made personally with the first defendant, which he subsequently failed to prove. He was bound in that suit to put forward the whole case on which he relied as grounds for the Court giving him the relief he asked for. Even inconsistent allegations of fact were open to him [see Venkatachellam Chetty v. Maung Kyauk Lon (1).]

He chose to base his claim on allegations of fact which could not be supported. His suit was finally dismissed. This was tantamount to a decision that nothing was due to him by the first defendant on the facts which he had put forward, or on the facts which he might have but did not put forward in support of his claim. In my opinion, the matter directly and substantially in issue, namely, whether the first defendant owed him any money on account of the use of his boats, was heard and was finally decided by the Appellate Court's decision on the appeal from the decree in Suit No. 251 of 1907, and the hearing of the Suit No. 238 of 1909 was barred by the provisions of section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure. I would allow this appeal, set aside the decree of the District Court, and dismiss the suit with costs, and order the plaintiff to pay the defendant's costs of this appeal.

HARTNOLL, J.—I take the same view as the learned Chief Judge. The matter directly and substantially in issue in both suits is the same. It is whether the appellant is liable to pay a certain sum of money to the respondent on account of the use of certain boats. Explanation 4 to section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code enacts that any matter which might and ought to have been made ground of defence and attack in such former suit should be deemed to have been a matter directly and substantially in issue in such suit. In the first suit, it was alleged that there was a direct contract between the parties. Such was not proved. Now the ground is taken that the appellant is liable under the principle enacted in section 70 of the Contract Act. That this ground might have been made a ground for attack in the former suit is clear. Whether it ought to have been, depends on the facts of the case. This was laid down in the case of Kameswar Pershad v. Raj Kumari Rattan Koer (2). In that case, their Lordships also said:—"Where matters are so dissimilar that their union might lead to confusion, the construction of the word 'ought' would become important." In this case and in the former, the matter in issue is, what were the true facts of a certain transaction. No confusion could have arisen by taking the present ground as an alternative in the former case in the event of the respondent not having been able to prove a direct contract. I am certainly of opinion that it ought to have been made a ground of attack in the former suit. Hence the first sentence of section 11 is applicable and bars the

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL, REPRESENTED BY THE COLLECTOR OF KISTNA—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Land revenue—Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), s. 16—Acquisition for a Municipality—Transferee of Municipality—Inam land—Exemption from revenue—Madras District Municipalities Act (IV of 1884), s. 279.

Certain inam land was acquired for a Municipal Council under the Land Acquisition Act and by successive sales the plaintiff became the owner of it. He contended that the Government was entitled only to quit-rent as from the inamdar and not ground rent:

Held, that when the land vested in the Government, it became ordinary Government property liable to assessment in the hands of any person who might afterwards become its occupier. If the plaintiff claimed to hold the land free from the payment of such assessment as the Government may fix, he must show some grant exempting him from the payment of the ordinary assessment. The Government order conferring an absolute property on all transferees from a Municipality simply removed all the objections to the transfer on the ground that the transferor is a Municipal Council and did not grant to such transferees an exemption from payment of land revenue.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of Kistna at Masulipatam, in Appeal Suit No. 157 of 1908, presented against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif of Bezwada, in Original Suit No. 324 of 1906.

Mr. T. Prakasam and V. Ramadoss, for the Appellant.

The Government Pleader, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff's suit is for a declaration that the Government is not entitled to levy ground rent for certain land in his occupation and for the recovery of the amount collected from him by the Government as ground rent.

The District Judge has decided, and, in our opinion, quite rightly, that the plaintiff has not made out any cause of action. Two points are argued in second appeal. The first is that the Municipality acquired by the land acquisition proceedings the inam right which belonged to the original owners of the land and that by successive sales the plaintiff now owns that right. The Government, it is contended, is entitled only to quit rent as from the inamdar and not ground rent. Assuming that a Civil Court could go into this question, there is really no basis for the contention. The land was acquired by the Government for the requirements of the Bezwada Municipality under the Land Acquisition Act. It is quite clear that when the land was acquired, the title to it vested in Government. See section 16 of the Act. Section 279 of the Madras Act IV of 1884 does not help the plaintiff at all. It provides that on payment by the Municipality of the amount of compensation awarded for the land, the land shall vest in the Municipality. It is quite clear from that section itself that it is the Government that is to acquire the land. The effect of the section is merely to declare that the title which vests in the Government by the acquisition passes to the Municipality when the Municipality pays the amount settled as compensation. The title of the Municipality, therefore, was derived from Government. When the land became vested in the Government, it became ordinary Government land liable to assessment in the hands of any person who might afterwards become the occupier. If the plaintiff claims to hold the land free from the payment of such assessment as the Government may fix, he must show some grant exempting him from the payment of the ordinary assessment. The appellant's Counsel argues that it must be taken that there was such a grant in this case because, when G. O. No. 210, dated the 20th February 1889, was issued, permitting Municipal Councils to transfer lands vested in them by sale, mortgage or otherwise, no condition was inserted that the assignee would be liable to pay such assessment or ground rent as might be fixed by the Revenue Authorities and that this condition was inserted only in an order passed in the year 1900. The argument is that, under the previous order of 1889, every transferee from the Municipality would acquire an absolute right to the property transferred free from the payment of any assessment; in other words, that order granted an exemption for payment of land revenue to all persons who might purchase lands from the Municipality. This is a contention which it is impossible to uphold. There are no words of exemption from liablity to assessment in the Government Order of 1889. No exemption can be claimed without a grant or exemption in express words The construction to be placed on the order of 1889 would be that the transferees would obtain a title to the land under their transfers although the transferor might be a Municipal Council, that is, to remove all the objection to the transfer on the ground that the transferor is a Municipal Council. There is no reason for differing from the conclusion of the lower Appellate Court. We dismiss the second appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Contract—Agreement reduced to writing—Undue influence or fraud not proved—Discretion of Court—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 16.

In the case of an agreement reduced to writing, a Court cannot, in the absence of fraud or undue influence, within the meaning of section 16 of the Contract Act, refuse to enforce its terms, however unreasonable they may be. Under such circumstances, the Court has no discretion.

Dhanipal v. Raja Maneshar Bakhsh Singh, 33 I. A. 118; 28 A. 570; 4 C. L. J. 1; 1 M. L. T. 205; 3 A. L. J. 495; 9 O. C. 188; 8 Bom. L. R. 491; 10 C. W. N. 849; 16 M. L. J. 292, referred to.

Second appeals against the decree of the District Court of South Canara, in Appeal Suit No. 253 of 1909, presented against the decree of the District Munsif of Kasargod, in Original Suit No. 213 of 1908.

Messrs. K. P. Madhava Rau and K. P. Lakshmana Rau, for the Appellant.

Messrs. B. Sitarama Rau and H. Balakrishna Rau, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—There is evidence to support the District Judge's finding that Exhibit I is genuine. We are bound by that finding in second appeal. We are further of opinion that the District Judge is right in finding that the amount due under that document must be paid by the plaintiff, as well as the amounts due under Exhibits II and XI before he can redeem the property.

But we can find no grounds for not enforcing the terms of the contract evidenced by Exhibit I. It is not suggested that it was brought about by fraud or undue influence as defined in section 16 of the Contract Act. It is pleaded before us that the period of 20 years fixed for redemption is unreasonable and would not be enforced by a Court of Equity, but the 30 years expired in 1887, and it does not appear that the mortgagor, either before or since that time, ever wished to redeem. It is certainly no reason for not enforcing the terms of the contract. In the circumstances of this case, the Court has, in fact, no discretion. Dhanipal Das v. Raja Maneshar Bakhsh Singh (1). We are also of opinion that the value of the paddy payable under Exhibit I should be calculated according to the market-rate on the day when the account is made up for the purposes of drawing up the mortgage decree.

In the result, we must dismiss the plaintiff's appeal (No. 1717), and allow the appeal of the 1st defendant (No. 1182) with costs payable by the plaintiff to the 1st defendant throughout.

We must, therefore, direct the District Judge to restore the appeal to his file and draw up the usual mortgage decree for the plaintiff on the basis of the above findings.

Dr. S. Swaminathan, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application by the plaintiff in Small Cause Suit No. 97 of 1907 in the District Court of Nellore to revise the judgment of the District Judge. The suit is to recover from the defendants a sum of Rs. 349-8 on a pro-note executed by them, in favour of the plaintiff in 1906. The defendants pleaded that there was no consideration for the note, that they had instituted a suit, Original Suit No. 281 of 1907, in the District Munsif's Court of Nellore for the cancellation of the note and that the suit was, therefore, not maintainable. It appears, from the B Form Diary, that the suit was adjourned pending the decision of the Munsif in Original Suit No. 281 of 1907, and that, after the Munsif's decision of the suit declaring the pro-note not enforcible against the defendant, this suit was dismissed. The judgment of the District Judge states: "Both parties represented in this Court that they would abide by the decree of the District Munsif of Nellore in Original Suit No. 281 of 1907 on his file in regard to the question raised in this case." The question referred to in this sentence seems to be whether the pro-note was unenforceable on the ground that it was not supported by any consideration. Unfortunately, there is no written record of the representation by the parties except what appears in the judgment. Nor are the parties agreed as to what exactly the representation was. The plaintiff says that the agreement between the parties was that the question in dispute should be decided in accordance with the final judgment of the matter in Original Suit No. 281 of 1907 on the file of the District Munsif of Nellore, which was capable of being carried up on appeal to the District Court and finally to this Court. The defendants, on the other hand, contended that the decision of the District Munsif in Original Suit No. 281 of 1907 was to be accepted as binding between the parties in the Small Cause Court. In the view we take of the case, we think it unnecessary to decide which of these statements is correct. It may be noted that the decision of the Munsif in Original Suit No. 281 of 1907 was reversed by the District Court on appeal and the pro-note was held to be binding on the defendants; and the second appeal against the District Judge's judgment was dismissed by this Court.

The question argued in this revision petition at the hearing was,—assuming that the plaintiff had originally represented that the case might be decided in accordance with the decision of the Munsif in Original Suit No. 281 of 1907, he thereby disentitled himself to ask subsequently that it should be decided by the District Judge on the merits. We are not at present concerned with the question of what legal effect, apart from any agreement between the parties, the judgment of the Munsif in Original Suit No. 281 of 1907, or the final appellate judgment in that case, would have upon the controversy in the small cause suit,

We have come to the conclusion that the defendants were not entitled to insist on the representation originally made by the parties as a bar to the plaintiff's right to the trial of the small cause suit. The agreement in question cannot be regarded as an adjustment of the subject-matter of the suit by a lawful agreement or compromise. The agreement did not settle the dispute but postponed the settlement and purported to authorise the Court to settle it in a certain manner. A compromise has been defined as "a mutual agreement between two or more persons at difference, to put an end to such difference, upon certain terms agreed upon." (Burrill's Dict., quoted in 8 American Cyclopædia of Law and Procedure, page 501). It must be an agreement which one of the parties can insist on the Court enforcing against the will of the other. Can it be said in this case that one of the parties could insist on the Court postponing the Small Cause suit till the District Munsif's decision in Original Suit No. 281 of 1907? We think, not. The ordinary rule is that, when the Court is seized of a case, it has jurisdiction to decide it in the manner prescribed by law, and that parties have no right to interfere with its authority to do so. There are no doubt well understood exceptions to this rule, but where the exceptions do not apply, the rule must prevail. Notwithstanding the pending of a suit, the parties may settle their disputes as they like by any lawful arrangement, and the Court is then bound to give effect to the settlement. Again, they may ask the Court to refer the questions in dispute to an arbitrator, in which case, though the decision of the cause is primarily transferred to another tribunal, the Court will retain some control over the proceedings. The parties may also enter into an agreement making the oath of one of them conclusive evidence of all or any of the facts in issue between them. This again is subject to the control of the Court.

The present case does not fall within any of these exceptions. Our attention is not drawn to any rule or principle which would compel a party to adhere to any agreement by him that the suit may be decided in a manner different from that prescibed by law. For instance, we do not think that if a litigant agreed that the Judge might decide the suit in the manner that a certain individual might advise, such an agreement would bind him. In Rukhanbai v. Adamji(1), Beaman, J., held that an agreement that certain disputes relating to the accounts between the parties in the case should be decided by the Assistant Commissioner in a summary manner without going into formal evidence beyond the accounts, objections and surcharges filed before him, was not binding. The learned Judge observes that it did not amount to an adjustment or compromise and that the agreement not being in writing would not constitute a binding reference to arbitration. He elaborately discusses the question whether an agreement to refer to arbitration and to be bound by the award passed by an arbitrator can be treated as amounting to a compromise and expresses disinclination to accept as sound the decisions cited before him in support of the position that such an agreement would amount to an adjustment or compromise when an award had been passed by the arbitrator. We consider it unnecessary to express any opinion on this question, as it is clear that the agreement in the present case cannot be treated as a reference of the dispute in the small cause suit to the arbitration of the Munsif who was trying Original Suit No. 281 of 1907. In Moyan v. Pathukutti (2), an agreement by the plaintiff to take a certain oath and to have his suit dismissed, if he failed to do so, was regarded as not binding on him. We hold that the agreement in question in this case did not deprive the plaintiff of his right to have the suit decided on the merits. We, therefore, reverse the decision of the Judge and remand the suit to the District Munsif of Nellore to be disposed of by him according to law, as a regular original suit. The costs of this petition will abide the result.

Buddhist Law—Inheritance—Hnapazon and let-tetpwa—Husband's share in lettetpwa inherited by wife during coverture.

Property inherited by the wife from her father after her marriage is lettetpwa and not Hnapazon. The husband, as the party through whom the inheritance did not come, is entitled to one-third share of such property.

Appeal against the decision of the District Court of Toungoo, in Civil Appeal No. 24 of 1910, dated the 31st March 1910, confirming that of the Township Court of Pyu, in Civil Suit No. 445 of 1909.

FACTS.—Plaintiff-appellant sued Ma Kaing (respondent) for declaration of the title of the judgment-debtor, Mg Yan Bye, husband of Ma Kaing, to certain property attached by him in execution of a decree against Yan Bye. The respondent alleged that the property was hers. Both the lower Courts dismissed the plaintiff's claim. On 31st August 1911, the case was remanded by Mr. Justice Twomey for further evidence. On receiving the additional evidence, the following judgment was delivered:—

Mr. Palit, for the Appellant.

Mr. Gaunt, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—From the evidence recorded on remand, it is clear that the property in suit was inherited by Ma Kaing from her father, Saya Paing, after Ma Kaing's marriage with the judgment-debtor, Yan Bye.

Though not hnitpazon in the sense that it was acquired by the joint industry of the husband and wife, it was lettetpwa, in which, according to the rulings both of this Court and of the Judicial Commissioner, Upper Burma, the husband, as the party through whom the inheritance did not come, acquired a one-third interest.

The decree of the District Court is set aside. A decree will be given in the appellant's favour declaring that the judgment-debtor Yan Bye is entitled to a third share in the property in dispute and that this share may be attachad in execution of the appellant's decree.

Partners—Suit on a pro-note—Parties—Promissory-note—Transfer—Actionable claim—Assignment—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 130, 137.

The proper parties to a suit on a pro-note in favour of a firm are all the members of the firm when the obligation on it was contracted; the fact that one of them has retired would make no difference. He is still a proper party to join the suit unless before suit there has been a due and valid assignment of the chose in action from the partners to one of them.

A promissory-note unless transferred in accordance with the Negotiable Instruments Act, must be transferred according to the provisions of section 130 of the Transfer of Property Act. Section 137 of that Act does not render oral assignments valid.

Messrs. T. Ethiraja Mudaliar, and W. V. Rungasamy Iyengar, for the Defendants.

JUDGMEMT.—This is a suit brought by the plaintiff, R. M. A. R. Raman Chetty, on a promissory-note in a two-fold character of payee and indorsee of the note. At the trial, the claim of the plaintiff as indorsee broke down as he was unable to prove the authority of the agent who made the endorsement. And the plaintiff's Counsel then contended that he was entitled to succeed as a sole payee owing to the fact, as he alleged, that, subsequently to the making of the note, his partner had retired from the firm and he had become the sole owner of the firm, and he adduced evidence to that effect. Thereupon, I allowed him to make the other member of the firm a party to the suit either as plaintiff or defendant and adjourned the case. When the case came on, no further argument was addressed to me nor evidence called by either side, and treating the case as undefended, I gave judgment, without assigning reasons, for the plaintiff, on the basis that the original plaintiff had become the sole owner of the note. The Appellate Court, considering that this question had not been sufficiently and distinctly raised, had directed a fresh trial of this issue. Fresh evidence has been called and I have to decide the case upon that evidence and upon contentions of law which had been raised before me. The evidence of assignment is that of the first plaintiff who died before this issue was tried but whose evidence on the previous occasion is available as he was cross-examined and also the evidence of his partner. According to the evidence of the partner, the arrangement for his retirement was an oral one, that as the business was being conducted at a loss, he agreed to retire from it and leave all the liabilities and assets to his other partner. The evidence is not very satisfactory but is borne out to some extent by the fact that the present note was undoubtedly endorsed over to the present first plaintiff although the authority to do so could not be satisfactorily proved in the case owing to the terms of the Powers-of-Attorney. I am prepared to hold that the second plaintiff, as he now is really, did retire from the firm and that the agreement between the parties was that he should cease to have any interest in the note. But then the question arises whether a mere oral transfer, which is all the evidence proves, is sufficient, in the case of one partner retiring from a firm. The law, as laid down in Lindley on Partnership, is, that the proper parties to the suit are the members of the firm when the obligation was contracted, and that the fact that one of them has retired makes no difference and he is still a proper party to join the suit just as a fresh partner, who is brought in, would not be a proper party. Of course, a suit in the case of partnership may be instituted in the name of the partnership firm, and then those who are members of the firm at the time may be entitled to the benefits of judgment. But this is not a suit in the name of the firm. As this promissory-note was made at a time when the two present plaintiffs were partners, this suit ought properly to have been instituted in the name of both partners unless before suit there was a due and valid assignment of the chose in action from the partners to one of them, the second plaintiff having been added after the period of limitation. Now, there is only an oral assignment of the chose in action. There is no assignment of the promissory-note under the Negotiable Instruments Act, and the question is—Is such oral assignment good? The point is covered by the authority of the case Arunachala Reddi v. Subba Reddi (1), to which I was a party, which is binding upon me, and from which I see no reason to recede. As is well known, the intention of Legislature in amending this Chapter of the Transfer of Property Act, was to bring the law in India generally into conformity with the law in England, which under the Judicature Act requires assignments of chose in action to be in writing, a provision which is, in my opinion, highly necessary for the benefit of the other party to the contract who ought not to be embarassed by mere oral allegations of transfer which may easily be distinguished and upon which it may be very difficult for him to act with any degree of safety to himself. Section 130 of the Transfer of Property Act provides:—"The transfer of an actionable claim shall be effected only by the execution of an instrument in writing signed by the transferor." Then section 137 says:—"Nothing in the foregoing section of this Chapter applies to stocks, shares or debentures or to instruments which are for the time being, by law or custom, negotiable or to any mercantile document of title to goods." All those kinds of actionable claims have their own proper methods of assignment under mercantile law and they constitute, perhaps, taken collectively, the most important classes of actionable claims, and to say that the effect of the section is that all these actionable claims, not only promissory-notes, but bills of lading payable to order and the whole of this class of actionable claims, unless there is any express statutory provision to the contrary, are capable of oral transfer in addition to the methods of transfer provided by the mercantile law, is to my mind a most startling conclusion, and a conclusion which it appears to me to a very large extent would defeat the intention of the Legislature. It does not appear to me to be necessary to give section 137 of the Act any such extensive construction. It seems to me that if such actionable claims ought to be considered at all as capable of transfer otherwise than by the methods recognised by the mercantile law, it can only be by treating them as mere actionable claims within the meaning of section 130 and ignoring their character as mercantile documents which have special methods of transfer of their own. In this case, there has been no assignment under section 130 by the two plaintiffs to the one plaintiff and, therefore, on this point, which was not argued before me on the previous occasion, the suit fails and is dismissed with costs.

There is another matter which I ought to mention. On the last occasion, the defendant was put into the box and in somewhat hesitating manner, and to my mind absolutely unmistakably, admitted the execution of the promissory note.

The Applelate Court left the matter to me. When the case came up again, the plaintiff was in a position to prove beyond any possibility of doubt that the promissory-note had been executed and I allowed the issue to be framed for that purpose; with the ill-fortune which has dogged the plaintiff all along, he did produce a witness and put him into the box to prove the execution of the note but subsequently he was not able to produce the witness for further cross-examination and so his evidence has become unavailable. On this part of the judgment of the Appellate Court, I take the evidence given at the first trial by the defendant to prove sufficient execution. However, on the other question, I am of opinion that the plaintiff's case fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Suit dismissed.

JUDGMENT.—The defendants pleaded that the lands were their own private inam and that if it should be found that their right to hold was burdened with any service to the plaintiff, they were prepared to render the service due. It is contended that these are inconsistent pleas which cannot be combined by the defendants. There is certainly no rule preventing a defendant from raising inconsistent pleas, at any rate, where the facts to which the pleas relate are not within his personal knowledge. The next contention is that as it has been found that the defendants were bound to render service, it must be presumed that the lands in question were held by them as emoluments for rendering service. It is not shown that the Subordinate Judge has based his finding on the ground that there was no such presumption.

He comes to the conclusion that on the evidence on record, the lands were held by the defendants merely with the burden of service and not as emoluments for service. He was entitled to arrive at that finding on the evidence on record and the question of onus is immaterial.

The last contention urged is that the defendants must be held to have forfeited their right to hold the lands even if they were not merely for emoluments for service, which could be resumed at the plaintiff's will. We are unable to agree with Mr. Ramesam that there is such a denial of the plaintiffs' right in Exhibit C as to work as a forfeiture of the defendant's right to hold the lands. We dismiss the second appeal with costs.

Security—Redemption decree — Mortgage-money — Deposit in Court—Execution— Security for mesne profits—Whether deposit money can be security.

In a redemption suit, the mortgagor obtained a decree and in accordance with the decree deposited the mortgage amount of Rs. 10,000 in Court. An appeal was filed by the mortgagee and execution was ordered only on the mortgagor furnishing security for Rs. 3,000 for any mesne profits that might be payable by the mortgagor to the mortgagee in case the decree of the lower Court was reversed on appeal. The mortgagor wanted the Court to accept as security the sum of Rs. 10,000 which he had deposited in Court:

Held, per Abdur Rahim, J., confirming the order of the lower Court, that the mortgagor was entitled to give it as security. The decree directed that the money should be deposited in Court; it did not say to the credit of the defendant. The money remained to the credit of the suit and there was no reason why it could not be given as security.

Per Sundara Aiyar, J. contra—The sum of Rs. 10,000 was no longer the money of the mortgagor and he had no disposing power over it. Only some property over which one has a present disposing power could be given as security. So, no charge could be created over the mortgagee's liability for Rs. 10,000 which would come into existence in case the decree for redemption was reversed. Such a mere possibility of a debt could not be transferred according to the principles embodied in section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act.

Appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge's Court of Kumbakonam, dated the 18th January 1912, in E. P. No. 101 of 1911 (in O. S. No. 23 of 1910).

Mr. G. S. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

ABDUR RAHIM, J.—In my opinion, the order of the Subordinate Judge accepting the security tendered by the respondent is right. He has accepted the Rs. 10,000, deposited by the respondent in Court under a decree passed in a suit for redemption, as security for Rs. 3,000 for any mesne profits that might be recovered from him by the appellants. The money which is in deposit in Court under the decree is the amount which would be payable to the defendants, who are the mortgagees, as money due under the mortgage. The defendants-respondents, who have appealed against the decree for redemption, will not be entitled to this money if they succeed in their appeal, and the decree for redemption is set aside, in which case the money will be available as security. On the other hand, if the defendants' appeal fails and the decree for redemption is confirmed, the defendants will be entitled only to the Rs. 10,000 and there would be no claim for mesne profits at all. The decree directs that the money should be deposited in Court. It does not say to the credit of the defendants; and I am not, therefore, prepared to hold that the property in the money has passed to the defendants, though they may undoubtedly apply for an order that the money may be paid to them. They have made no such application but have appealed against the decree by virtue of which alone they would be entitled to apply that the money may be paid to them. The money remains to the credit of the suit and I see no reason why such money cannot be given as security. Even if defendants draw the amount, they will be liable to refund the amount in case they succeed in their appeal.

In these circumstances, it is difficult to see why the money should not be a valid security. I would, therefore, dismiss this appeal.

SUNDARA IYER, J.—I regret I am unable to agree in the conclusion arrived at by my learned brother. The plaintiff obtained a decree for redemption against the defendants. The mortgage-money payable by him according to the decree was Rs. 10,000. The defendants have filed an appeal against that decree. In the meanwhile, the plaintiff wants to execute his decree for redemption and to take possession of the mortgage property. At the defendant's request, this Court passed an order that the plaintiff should not execute the decree and take possession of the property unless he gives security to the satisfaction of the lower Court for Rs. 3,000 for the mesne profits that would be payable by the plaintiff to the defendants in case the decree of the lower Court should be reversed on appeal The plaintiff now wants the Court to accept as security for Rs. 3,000 the sum of Rs. 10,000 which he has deposited in Court on account of the mortgage-money due under the decree. The lower Court has held that he is entitled to have that amount accepted as security. The question for decision is, whether the sum of Rs. 10,000 in Court can legally be accepted as security for the sum of Rs. 3,000 that might become payable by the plaintiff as mesne profits. In my opinion, it cannot be. According to the decree, the plaintiff is entitled to recover possession only on paying a sum of Rs. 10,000 into Court. In addition to that liability, the order of this Court has also made the plaintiff's right to take possession conditional on his further giving security for Rs. 3,000. Now, can he give the Rs. 10,000 which he has deposited as security for Rs. 3,000?

The sum of Rs. 10,000 is, as I have already stated, mortgage-money payable to the defendants, and the plaintiff's right to recover possession is conditional upon this mortgage-money being paid to the defendants. Ordinarily, a decree for redemption would direct that the plaintiff should pay the money to the defendants, the mortgagees, or into Court. Evidently, the object of this alternative provision is to guard against the plaintiff's right to recover possession being affected by the failure on the part of the defendants to receive the money from the plaintiff. The section provides that payment into Court is equivalent to the payment to the defendants so far as the plaintiff's right to recover possession is concerned. I cannot doubt that, when a mortgagor who obtains a decree for redemption pays the mortgage-money into Court, he pays it for the benefit of the defendants; whatever his intention may be, that is why he was directed to pay the money into Court. It is impossible for me to suppose that the plaintiff could be entitled to recover possession and at the same time to contend that the money paid into Court is his. If the money did continue to be his, even after the deposit in Court, it is difficult to see how the defendants could be entitled to draw it; and I am, therefore, obliged to come to the conclusion, first that the sum of Rs. 10,000 is no longer the money of the plaintiff, and secondly, that he has no disposing power over it. The latter position, namely, that it is not any longer in his disposition, would by itself be sufficient to prevent him from tendering it as security for Rs. 3,000. The result of allowing this Rs. 10,000 to be given as security would be, in my view, to regard what has already been paid to the credit of the defendants as money which the plaintiff could dispose of so as to tender it as security for another liability. The respondent, no doubt, could put his case in another way. Treating the money as the defendants', the respondent might say that he is prepared to create a charge over the defendants' liability for Rs. 10,000 which will come into existence in case the decree for redemption is reversed. And it is a strong fact in his favour that the liability to pay the mesne profits would also arise only on the same contingency, namely, the reversal of the decree for redemption. So far as the substantial justice of the case is concerned, the respondent has an unshakeable position and I should be willing to dismiss this appeal if I could ; but I am unable to see any way to do so. Now, when a Court directs security to be given, it may either be personal security or security of property. The security tendered in this case is not the personal undertaking of any third person. It is a charge on the debt of Rs. 10,000 which would become due from the appellants to the respondent in case of the reversal of the decree. But could the respondent create a charge on such a debt? What is the nature of debt? There is at present no indebtedness on the part of the defendants to the plaintiff, for we must proceed on the assumption that the decree of the lower Court regulates the present rights of the parties. Under that decree, the plaintiff is entitled to the property and the defendants are entitled to the Rs. 10,000; and, in my opinion, the defendants are as much the present owners of the Rs. 10,000, if they drew it, as they are of any other money belonging to them; and the result of a reversal would be only to create a debt as from the date of the reversal of the decree. Can a person then tender as security an expectation of a debt coming into existence? In my opinion he cannot. He can only tender something over which he has a disposing power. A mere possibility of a debt cannot be transferred according to the principle embodied in section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act. No doubt, the liability for mesne profits would only arise on the expectation being realised but that does not alter the position of the parties. The circumstance would, no doubt, be a justification for not ordering the respondent to give any security at all for mesne profits becoming due, the defendants would have Rs. 10,000, of the plaintiff's money into their own hands, and they could deduct Rs. 3,000 from the amount which they would have to pay back. But the Court has directed that for the contingent liability of Rs. 3,000, security should be furnished. The fact that the liability would arise only in a certain case cannot alter the rule as to what can be given as security. It must be some property over which the plaintiff has present disposing power ; and as the plaintiff has no disposing power over the Rs. 10,000, I must hold that amount cannot be given as security. Mr. G. S. Ramachandra Iyer has drawn our attention to the definition of security, namely, something which makes certain. But how can a charge over a property, over which the plaintiff has no disposing power and, therefore, no right to create a charge, make anything a bit more certain than it is already ? I must hold that it cannot. I would, therefore, allow this appeal without costs.

Appeal allowed.

Grove-holder, position of—Proprietor a licensor—Licensor and licensee, position of, governed by the same general principles of law as that of lessor and lessee—Sale, lease or mortgage, transfer by way of, difference between.

The plaintiff, who was the proprietor of a village, sued the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, who were the holders of a grove, and the defendant No. 3, a mortgagee in possession of the right of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in the grove, for possession on the ground that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 had forfeited their rights by transferring possession to defendant No. 3. The wajib-ul-arz of the village provided that ".....without the permission of the proprietor the holder of a grove has no right to sell or mortgage the trees; and if the said grove-holder abandons his residence within the limits of the proprietor's estate he forfeits his entire rights in respect of the grove."

Held, that the position of a grove-holder in a case like the present was that of a licensee entitled to use, for certain purposes, land belonging to the proprietor who was the licensor.

According to the general principles of law applicable to leases, the forfeiture of a lease is not involved in the case of the breach of any condition for which forfeiture is not prescribed as the proper penalty under the terms of the lease or agreement under which the lessee holds. There is no reason why a similar principle should not apply to the case of a licensor and licensee generally.

There is an essential distinction between a transfer by way of lease or mortgage and a transfer by way of sale in which case different considerations would apply.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in this case is the proprietor of village Maharaj Nagar in which the first two defendants are the holders of a certain grove. The said defendants have mortgaged their rights in the grove to the defendant No. 3 and have put him in possession of the same. The plaintiff thereupon sues for possession of the grove by ejectment of all three defendants, on the ground that the grove-holders had no transferable right and that by transferring possession over the grove to a stranger, they have forfeited whatever rights they possessed so as to give the plaintiff a right of re-entry. The Court of first instance held that the plaintiff had no right under the circumstances to re-enter into possession of the grove, but gave him a declaratory decree to the effect that the mortgage-deed executed, on January 19th, 1909, by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in favour of defendant No. 3 in respect of the grove in question, is inoperative as against the plaintiff and not binding upon him. In this decree, the defendants acquiesced; the plaintiff appealed to the District Judge, but the lower Appellate Court, though differing in one or two matters of detail from the view taken of the evidence by the Court of first instance, has affirmed the decision of that Court. The plaintiff comes before us in second appeal, and we have to decide whether on the facts of the case, as admitted and found by the Courts below, the plaintiff has established his right to actual possession over the grove in suit by ejectment of all three defendants. The suit is based mainly on the provisions regarding grove-holders contained in the village wajib-ul-arz. This recites that there are in the village sixty-four groves in the possession of tenants; no rent is taken from such tenants, nor have they any rights over the soil of the groves.

"They are merely proprietors over the right to the produce of the trees (sirf haqqiat sar darakhti ke malik hain); they may take fruit and fallen timber; they are also entitled to lop branches according to their needs for the manufacture of implements of agriculture, and even to fell two or three trees in case of necessity in order to build a house or on the occasion of such an event as a wedding or the like. Without the permission of the proprietor, they have no right to sell or mortgage the trees; in case of a sale effected with the permission of the proprietor, the latter is entitled to one-fourth of the price. He takes nothing in the case of a mortgage effected with his permission, but if the mortgagee eventually acquires proprietary possession, he is bound by the above condition as to payment of a portion of the price. Without permission of the proprietor, the holder of a grove has no power to sell or mortgage the trees; and if the said grove-holder abandons his residence within the limits of the proprietor's estate (dehat milkiat), he forfeits his entire rights in respect of his grove. In the event of his subsequent return, it is at the option of the proprietor to restore him possession of the grove or not as he may think fit." The above are all the conditions in the wajib ul-arz bearing upon the point in issue and it may be noticed at once that they only provide in express terms for the proprietor's right of forfeiture or re-entry in the event of the grove-holder's abandoning his residence. There is no express provision as to what will be the proprietor's rights in the event of a grove-holder's selling or mortgaging the trees of his grove in contravention of the terms of the wajib ul-arz.

The case for the plaintiff-appellant was presented to us in argument from two or three different points of view which may be dealt with separately. In the first place, we may consider whether the plaintiff ought to succeed on the ground that he is suing to enforce a right, call it a right of escheat or forfeiture, or what you will, which has accrued to him in virtue of a local custom binding upon the parties. From this point of view, it would be incumbent on the plaintiff to show that by local custom whenever a grove-holder mortgages with possession the whole or any portion of his grove and puts the mortgagee in possession, he thereby forfeits all his rights in respect of the grove or the mortgaged portion of the same, and the proprietor becomes entitled to possession over the same. It is obvious that the provisions of the wajib-ul-arz do not go so far as this, and there is nothing in the oral evidence which carries the plaintiff's case any further. From the point of view of custom, the plaintiff's case clearly fails.

In passing to consider the question in issue from another point of view, we wish to guard ourselves against complicating the matter by any discussion as to whether a grove-holder in the position of the first two defendants in this case can be said to be in any sense of the word a "tenant" in respect of the grove occupied by him. It is sufficient to say that the position of a grove-holder in a case like the present is at any rate that of a licensee entitled to use for certain purposes a plot of land belonging to the proprietor, who is his licensor. The relations between the parties are governed by the terms of the license under which the grove was originally planted or occupied by the licensee; these terms may be such as to constitute a contract of tenancy or to put the parties in the position of lessor and lessee, but whether they are so or not, does not affect the question from the point of view we now propose to consider. The plaintiff's case, in its broadest form, may be put in this way, that the first two defendants held the grove in question as his licensees (if not as his lessees) subject to certain conditions, one of which was that they should have no right to sell or mortgage the trees ; that there has been a breach of this condition on their part, and that the breach is of such a nature as to involve forfeiture of their rights. We have already said that the plaintiff has, in our opinion, failed to establish any customary law binding on the parties which makes the forfeiture of the grove-holder's rights the necessary penalty of a breach on his part of the conditions against transfer of those rights by way of mortgage. The plaintiff, therefore, can only appeal to the general principles of law, and these are, in our opinion, against him. Whether we refer by way of analogy to the provisions of section 111 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), or to those of section 52, clause (2) of the Oudh Rent Act, the principle involved seems to be that forfeiture of a lease is not involved in the case of the breach of any conditions for which forfeiture is not prescribed as the proper penalty under the terms of the lease or agreement under which the lessee holds. We see no good reason why a similar principle should not apply to the case of a licensor and licensee generally ; and we note that a similar principle was affirmed by this Court in the case of Lal Bahadur v. Mohammad Karim Khan(1). We note in this connection that it may well be that a distinction ought to be drawn in a case like the present between transfers by way of lease and transfers by way of sale. In the latter case, the principles, which governed the decision in Nurendra Narayan Roy v. Ishan Chundra Sen (2), would have to be considered. These principles seem to us to have also determined the decision of this Court in an unreported case, viz., Sheo Dayal v. Deputy Commissioner of Barabanki as Manager of the Court of Wards in charge of Bilahra Estate(3), decided on April 8th, 1909. The transfers with which the Court had to deal in these cases were transfers by way of sale, and I may add that the rights of the grove-holders in the village which was there in question, as recorded in the wajib-ul-arz, would seem to have been even more strictly limited than those proved by the wajib-ul-arz in the present case. At any rate, in the case of a transfer by way of sale, it may be said that there has been on the part of the transferor an entire abandonment of his rights in favour of another person, so that if a grove-holder in a case like the present purports to sell outright whatever rights he may possess in respect of his grove, he clearly has no rights left which he can set up against another person, and the transferee who is left in acutal possession cannot plead that there exists as between himself and the landlord any contract of license in respect of the trees in the grove, or the land on which they stand, which can secure him against ejectment or prevent the landlord from treating him as a mere trespasser. The case of a mortgage is different, in that the grove-holder cannot be said to have entirely parted with or abandoned his own rights, and he has still something left which he can plead against the landlord so as to protect the mortgagee, who after all is only in temporary possession by permission of the mortgagor and subject to the latter's right of redemption. It seems to us very difficult in a case like the present to draw any valid distinction between a mortgage such as we have before us and a zar-i-peshgi lease, or a lease for a term of years, or even a sale of the produce of the trees for a particular year, or specified number of years. In the absence, therefore, of any express provision in the wajib-ul-arz, or of any satisfactory evidence as to the existence of a custom giving the proprietor a right of forfeiture or re-entry in case of a breach of the rule against alienation by way of mortgage, we are unable to see that such right arises in favour of the plaintiff in the present case by reason of any general principle of law. Nor are we prepared to accede to the contention that a penalty by way of forfeiture should be presumed to exist, or should be read into the terms of the wajib-ul-arz, on the ground that in the absence of such provision, the rule against transfer of the grove-holder's rights by way of mortgage becomes meaningless and of no possible effect. The rule would in any case be efficacious to restrain an abuse of which the proprietor would have good reason to complain, namely, the mortgaging of his rights by a grove-holder who was on the point of leaving the village. The declaration which the Courts below have granted the plaintiff, and have embodied in their decree, is not to our minds as valueless as the plaintiff appears to think; it would serve to protect his rights in the event of the present grove-holders' (defendants Nos. 1 and 2) dying without heirs, or abandoning the village. If such an event were to occur, and the plaintiff were then to claim actual possession by way of escheat under the custom recorded in the wajib ul-arz, the mortgagee, defendant No. 3, would be prevented from resisting that claim on the strength of the mortgage in his favour by reason of the decree which has been rightly passed in this case declaring that the said mortgage is inoperative as against the plaintiff and not binding upon him.

In the third place, it was contended before us that, even though we might not be able to decree the plaintiff's claim as brought, we ought nevertheless to give the plaintiff some sort of decree which would put him in possession in the place of the third defendant, either upon payment of the mortgage-money or not as the Court might think fit, but subject in any case to the right of redemption possessed by defendants Nos. 1 and 2, the actual grove-holders. We have endeavoured to state this contention as it was laid before us, but we cannot say that we fully understand it or that we can conceive of any principle of law upon which any such decree could be based. It would involve reading into the provisions of the wajib-ul-arz a rule giving the proprietor a sort of right of pre-emption in case of transfers by way of mortgage, and to do this seems to us far more difficult than to read into the same rules a provision as to right of forfeiture when no such provision actually exists.

From every point of view, therefore, this appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

CIVIL REVISION PETITION No. 42 OF 1911.

February 8, 1912.

KAMATCHI AYENGAR—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Contract—Partition—Benefit to a third party—Burden goes with benefit.

By a partition agreement between the plaintiff and his brother, it was provided that the defendant should enjoy certain land for her maintenance and pay the kist due on it to the plaintiff and his brother. The plaintiff sued to recover monies paid by him on account of the above kist:

Held, that the defendant was liable, even though the defendant was no party to the partition-deed. She took the benefit under it subject to the burden placed on her by that document.

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the decree of the District Munsif's Court of Mayavaram, in S. C. S. No. 484 of 1910, dated the 5th September 1910.

Mr. T. V. Muthukrishna Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. T. R. Venkatrama Sastry, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—I am unable to sustain the decision of the District Munsif in this case. The plaintiff sued to recover monies paid by him on account of kist of certain land in the possession of the defendant, which, he alleged, the defendant was bound to pay to him. The plaintiff's case was really based on a contract. By a partition agreement between him and his brother, it was provided that the defendant should enjoy certain land for her maintenance and pay the kist due on it to the plaintiff and his brother, Rs. 8 to each of them. The District Munsif dismissed the suit on the ground that the plaintiff could claim no relief on the basis of the partition-deed because the defendant was not a party to it. But it was under the partition-deed that she got her right to hold the land. Though not a party to the contract, she was one who took a benefit under it, subject to the burdens placed on her by that document. She was, therefore, bound to pay the kist to the plaintiff and his brother as provided therein. In fact she got possession of the land by means of a suit based on the partition-deed.

The District Munsif has not disposed of the other contentions which the defendant raised. His decree must, therefore, be reversed and the suit remanded for fresh disposal on the other questions raised by the defendants. The costs of this petition will abide the result.

Decree reversed and case remanded.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 410 OF 1910.

Present:—Mr. Piggott, J. C. and Mr. Rafique, A. J. C.

KASHI RAM AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS

versus

Chaudhrain SAHIB-UN-NISSA—DEFENDANT.

Decree, construction of—Declaratory decree—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47—Mortgage of Nankar rights—Mortgagee's right to enforce payment against Talukdar.

One B. was the owner of a village in the Nawabi time. He got the village included in a Taluka and was granted in exchange a cash allowance of Rs. 240 per annum as malikana in perpetuity. In 1870 M., the son of B., obtained against the husband of the defendant-respondent, Talukdar, a decree from the Settlement Court by which Rs. 240 per annum was decreed to him as nankar. In 1896 and 1898, M. executed deeds of mortgage in respect of portions of the nankar in favour of the predecessors-in-title of the plaintiffs-appellants, who obtained a decree for possession on the basis of the mortgage-deed in 1901. The plaintiffs brought the present suit against the defendant Talukdar for recovery of the amount of nankar for six years on the basis of the mortgages. The representative of the mortgagor was not impleaded as defendant in the case.

The relevant part of judgment of the Settlement Court was as follows:—"Ordered that the claim of the plaintiff for the receipt of Rs. 240 per annum against the defendant be decreed. Order communicated to the parties. A note should accordingly be made in the papers. The plaintiff will recover Rs. 240 per annum in execution of the decree:"

Held, (1) that, on a proper construction, it must be held that the decree was merely declaratory and that the suit was not barred by section 47, Civil Procedure Code. The operative part ended with the words "be decreed". What followed appeared to be directions to the office. The decree fixed no date for the payment of the nankar. The mere addition of the direction that the nankar was to be realized on the execution side would not alter its character as a declaratory decree;

Debi Singh v. Rattan Singh, 6 O. C. 239; Raja Partab Singh v. Raja Sarat Singh, 8 O.C. 361; Ram Dial v. Inder Koer, 16 A. 179, referred to.

(2) that the fact of the defendant-respondent being no party to the deed of mortgage was no bar to the plaintiffs enforcing payment against the defendant.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Barabanki, dated 29th July 1910, reversing that of the Munsif, Fatehpur, dated 28th May 1910.

Mr. E. Manuel, for the Appellant.

Mr. Sami-ullah Beg, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was instituted by the plaintiffs-appellants in the Court of the Munsif of Fatehpur, on the 10th of August, 1910, for the recovery of Rs. 870 as arrears of nankar for six years on the following allegations:—

One Bande Ali was the owner of the village Danialpur in the Nawabi time. He got the village included in the Taluka of Karkha during the Nawabi and was granted in exchange a cash allowance of Rs. 240 per annum as malikana in perpetuity by the then Talukdar of Karkha. The allowance was paid regularly to Bande Ali and after his death to his son Mehdi Hasan. In 1870, Mehdi Hasan also obtained a decree against Chaudhari Mohammad Hasan, the husband of the defendant-respondant, from the Settlement Court by which Rs. 240 per annum as nankar, was decreed to Mehdi Hasan on the ground that his father had got the village of Danialpur included in the taluka of Karkha in consideration of receiving Rs. 240 per annum as malikana in perpetuity. On the 25th of March, 1896, Mehdi Hasan executed a deed mortgage in favour of Manak Chand, in respect of Rs. 70 per annum nankar, out of his Rs. 240 per annum nankar, in lieu of Rs. 200. On the 16th of August, 1893, Mehdi Hasan executed another mortgage in favour of Manak Chand in respect of Rs. 75, out of his remaining nankar, in lieu of Rs. 200. The two mortgages were for two years and carried interest at 2 per cent. per mensem payable every six months. In default of payment of interest, the mortgagee was given the right to enter into possession of the mortgaged nankar. Mehdi Hasan made a default in the payment of interest due on the two mortgages. Manak Chand brought a suit for possession and obtained a decree on the 11th of March, 1901, and possession on the 25th of February, 1904. Both Mehdi Hasan and Manak Chand are dead. The plaintiffs-appellants are the reversioners of Manak Chand. Mehdi Hasan has left a son called Nawab Ali. The defendant-respondent is the widow of Chaudhari Mohammad Hasan and is in possession of the Taluka of Karkha in which the village of Danialpur is included. The plaintiffs-appellants claim Rs. 870 for six years from the 30th of April, 1904, to the 30th of June, 1909, at the rate of Rs. 145 per annum on the basis of the mortgages mentioned above, out of the nankar payable to Mehdi Hasan's son annually and pray that the sum decreed be made a charge on village Danialpur. The claim was brought against the defendant-respondent only. Nawab Ali was not impleaded as a defendant in the case.

The defendant-respondent resisted the suit on various grounds, two of which need only be mentioned as they alone have been pressed before us. It was urged in defence that the suit was barred by section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure and that the claim as brought was not maintainable. The first Court disallowed the objections of the defendant-respondent and passed a decree in favour of the plaintiffs-appellants. On appeal by the defendant-respondent the decree of the first Court was reversed by the Subordinate Judge on the ground that the claim was barred by section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The plaintiffs-appellants have preferred this appeal and challenge the finding of the lower Appellate Court.

The question whether the suit of the plaintiffs-appellants is barred under section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure, depends upon the construction of the decree of the Settlement Court, dated the 30th of November, 1870. The decree of the Settlement Court, it may be observed, is not on the record, but the judgment of the Settlement Court is. It is marked as Exhibit 19 in the case. The relevant part of the judgment is as follows:—

"Ordered that the claim of the plaintiff for the receipt of Rs. 240 per annum against the defendant be decreed. Order communicated to the parties. A note should accordingly be made in the papers—the plaintiff will recover Rs. 240 per annum in execution of the decree, dated, 30th November, 1870."

The learned Subordinate Judge, on the strength of the last sentence of the order, has held that the provisions of section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure apply to the case and bar the suit. He says that "the last sentence clearly shows that the Court meant that Rs. 240 per year should be realized in the execution department. As held by Mr. Spankie in Debi Singh v. Rattan Singh(1), I cannot, in 'disregard and defiance' of the terms of the decree, hold that it is merely declaratory. Hence I find that section 47, Civil Procedure Code, bars the suit." The finding of the lower Appellate Court appears to be based on a defective apprehension of the decree of the Settlement Court. The operative part of the order quoted above ends with the words  (is decreed). For, immediately after the said words, the sentence is that order pronounced in the presence of the parties. What follows that sentence appears to be directions to the office. And even if it be said that the whole order in question is to be taken as operative part of the judgment, the Court that made the order could not confine and determine the remedy of the decree-holder that he may have under the law to enforce his decree. The decree of the Settlement Court fixed no date for the payment of the nankar. It merely decreed the claim to an annual nankar of Rs. 240. In other words, it was declared by that decree that the plaintiff Mehdi Hasan had a right to get Rs. 240 per annum as nankar. The decree was clearly a declaratory decree. The mere addition of the direction that the nankar was to be realized on the execution side would not alter the character of the decree. And if after passing a declaratory decree, the Court further said that the nankar was to be realized by execution of the decree, such a direction would not enable the decree-holder to execute his decree, for a declaratory decree is incapable of execution. In a suit for redemption instituted in the Settlement Court, the following decree was passed :— "Ordered that the plaintiff's claim be decreed against the defendant on condition of his (plaintiff's) paying from his own pocket Rs. 775-8 in the month of Jeth, fallow season, that then he shall be entitled to possession of the mortgaged share, but if default be made on his behalf in the fulfilment of either of these conditions, the decree shall be incapable of execution and the order for redemption shall be deemed not to have been passed." The plaintiff failed to deposit the money and many years after, a representative of the plaintiff brought a regular suit to redeem the mortgage on the basis of the decree of the Settlement Court. The claim was resisted on the ground that it was barred by sections 13 and 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882. It was held by this Court that the decree of the Settlement Court was not intended to grant consequential relief but was intended to be merely declaratory, and that the suit was not barred by the provisions of sections 13 and 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882. One of the reasons for holding that decree to be merely a declaratory decree was that it "did not fix a limited period for the payment of the mortgage-money." Vide Debi Singh v. Rattan Singh (1).

In another case, which was decided by a Bench of this Court, it was held "that where a Settlement Court decree did not fix a time within which the mortgage-money was to be paid, the decree was merely a declaratory decree and incapable of execution and in such a case a subsequent suit for redemption was not barred." Vide Raja Partab Bahadur Singh v. Raja Surat Singh (2)

A similar point was raised in a case before the High Court at Allahabad. In that case plaintiffs sued to recover a certain sum as maintenance for the years preceding the suit and for the right to get that sum as maintenance in future. The Court gave the plaintiffs a decree. On the basis of their decree, plaintiffs sued for the recovery of maintenance that fell due after the decree. An objection was taken to the claim on the ground that no suit was maintainable and that the plaintiffs should have executed their decree. Knox and Burkitt, JJ., held that as no distinct date for the payment of future maintenance was fixed by the original decree, the suit was maintainable, vide Ram Dial v. Inder Kuar (3). In the case before us, the decree of the Settlement Court, dated the 30th of November 1870, fixes no date for the payment of the nankar to Mehdi Hasan.

However, the learned Pleader for the respondent contends, on the authorities quoted below, that in spite of the omission to fix a distinct date for the payment of the nankar in the decree of the 30th of November, 1870, the decree is not a declaratory decree, but is capable of execution. The authorities are:— Mansa Debi v. Jiwan Lal (4); Lakshmi Bai v. Madhavrav (5); Ashutosh Banerjee v. Lukhimoni Debya (6); Kaveri v. Venkamma (7); Aitamma v. Naraina Bhattar (8).

(6) 19 C. 139.
(7) 14 M. 396.
(8) 30 M. 504; 17 M. L. J. 402.

In Mansa Debi v. Jiwan Lal (4), a decree was awarded to the plaintiff for a sum of Rs. 15 per mensem by way of maintenance during her life-time. Plaintiff sought to recover maintenance from the 28th of October, 1882, to the 28th of May, 1885, by execution of the original decree. It was urged by way of defence that the decree sought to be executed was merely a declaratory decree and could not be executed. The High Court held that the decree was not merely a declaratory decree. The case is not on all fours with the case before us. The fact that the plaintiff asked for maintenance from the 28th of October, 1882, shows that the original decree, dated the 18th of July, 1883, must have fixed at least the date from which the allowance was to run. No such date is given in the decree of the 30th of November 1870. Moreover, the latest judgment of the Allahabad High Court on the point under discussion is contained in Ram Dial v. Inder Kuar (3), already referred to.

The case reported as Lakshmi Bai v. Madhavrav (5), is also distinguishable from the present case. In the Bombay case, a Hindu widow obtained a decree on the 7th of September 1865, directing that a sum of Rs 36 should be paid to her every year on account of her maintenance. In 1881, she sought to recover her maintenance by execution of the decree, dated the 7th of September 1865. An objection was taken that the decree was barred by limitation. Incidentally the question also arose whether the decree was declaratory or not. West and Birdwood, JJ., held that the decree contained a positive command by the Court to defendant to pay Rs. 36 per annum and hence the decree was not declaratory. And as the cause of action for the realization of the maintenance accrued on the default of the defendant every year, the application for execution was not barred by limitation. In the present case, the decree of the 30th November 1370, contains no command to defendant to pay nankar to Mehdi Hasan. The decree declares the right of Mehdi Hasan to get Rs. 240 per annum nankar from the Talukdar.

In Ashutosh Mukerjee v. Lukhimoni Debya (6), the decree was that the plaintiff do get Rs. 50 per mensem "on account of her maintenance from 1st January 1886, and onwards, during the life-time of the said plaintiff."

The High Court held that the plaintiff could recover her maintenance in execution of her decree, without further suit. This case does not also help the respondent as a date from which payment per month was to be made was fixed by the decree.

In the case reported in Caveri v. Venkamma (7), the question under discussion was not before the Court. The case was decided on another point.

In the case reported as Aitamma v. Naraina Bhattar (8), the decree fixed the date of payment of future maintenance from the date of the plaint. Moreover, the question whether the maintenance-holder should seek his remedy by suit or by an application in execution was not raised.

Thus, none of the authorities cited by the learned Pleader for the respondent helps his contention that the decree, dated the 30th of November 1870, passed in favour of Mehdi Hasan is not a declaratory decree. We hold that the said decree is a declaratory decree and that the suit of the plaintiffs-appellants is not barred by the provisions of section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Another objection taken for the respondent is that the suit of the plaintiffs-appellants is not maintainable for the reasons, viz., that the defendant-respondent is no party to the deeds of mortgage in favour of Manak Chand and that the latter was not an assignee of the decree of the 30th of November, 1870. The argument in support of the first ground of objection is that whatever rights Manak Chand had were acquired by him under his contracts with Mehdi Hasan. The enforcement of those rights depends on the terms of the said contracts. The defendant-respondent was not privy to the said contracts and they cannot be enforced against him. The learned Pleader for the respondent, in support of his contention, relies on the case of Jamna Das v. Pandit Ram Autar Pande (9). The facts of that case were that one Musammat Lakpati Koer borrowed Rs. 40,000 from Jamna Das and executed a deed of mortgage on the 2nd of June, 1893, in his favour in respect of her zemindari and her mortgagee rights in certain other zemindari. Three years after, in 1896, she sold to Pandit Ram Autar Pande all her immoveable property including the equity of redemption in the zemindari and the mortgagee rights. Out of the sale price, Rs. 40,000 were left with the purchaser in order to redeem the mortgage of the 2nd of June, 1893. The Pandit did not redeem the mortgage of Jamna Das. The latter sued to recover the mortgage-money and prayed for three reliefs, viz.:—

(a) A decree for principal and interest against Pandit Ram Autar Pande, the purchaser, and other defendants;

(b) A decree for sale of the entire mortgaged property; and
